We must realize this: In an era of tightened resources and hard choices, we must choose either tax reform and defense cuts on the one hand, or a helpless government facing mulitplying social problems on the other. If the defense budget is untouchable, the rest of the government must wither away.

Brotherhood Begins

The first brotherhood meeting was held on the nineteenth of September at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center. The meeting was attended by nine brothers and sisters attending the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. The objective of the assembly was to formulate a group around the concept of Brotherhood. The group spent most of its two hour meeting discussing their various individual definitions of Brotherhood in an attempt to come to a working definition. This working definition was never reached, but by the conclusion of the meeting the group had come to the realization that when they said the word brotherhood everyone knew what they were talking about.

People were not overly concerned over what might have been. One member of the group thought it was a strong beginning. He saw it as fertile ground where the concept of Brotherhood could flourish and grow.

As of this report, the next meeting of the brotherhood has yet to be determined, but there are strong indications that it will be occuring in the very near future.

How Deep Is "Black" ?

By KARIEN ZACHERY

Well, I'm here... so where is all the blackness and the swarms of Black people, who I thought have invaded UMass and in fact renamed... UMass which stood for... Us Black folk and Us Black folk only.

My God, the disappointment that seemed to take over my body and cremate it, when not only did I not find as many Blacks as I had anticipated, but I discovered even less unity among the few Black people who were here.

After a week of arguing with myself that I was not going to throw my hands up at education because bad first impressions, I began to search for the rest of myself... other faces and minds like mine.

After a week and a half of asking every black face out of a hundred others... "Where are all the Black folk?" and constantly getting the casual and unconcerned response of... "oh, they're around," I finally decided to search for my people myself.

Taking my shotgun, doublebarrel on each side (my 4 courses) and sharpening each one of my senses to a razor sharpness, as a hunter stalking the safari would do to his machete, I started out trudging the unbearable steep slopes of Orchard Hill, looking for my people.

I strived hard to attend any and everything Black given, most of these affairs taking place in the New Africa House. Sighing and relieved to find some of my search, I looked around at the predominantly Black faces and Black hearts of the members of the CCEBS staff, who called the meeting for the benefit of Black students. Where they all were... must have been a secret between them and the God of the P. Funk, or deeper still the Brothership Connection.

Is this all there is to us? Where is the Black unity that is desperately needed being that there are so few of us up here? Every Black face I meet shouts "Black Power" and "Black unity", and throws up a Black fist at me.

Slowly open that black fist brother... What's in it?... NOTHING! Then does that black fist in fact symbolize "Black Power"? If it does we better start running, searching for whatever or whoever stole the meanings behind our black fist, along with the meanings behind our Afro and dashiki.

Or were the meanings ever really there?

Does the term "Black," really represent us as a people? It certainly doesn't identify all of our people, for we range the shade of a light, bright, almost white," to the almost purple black color of some of our people. Then how in the world can the term or the color "Black" identify all of our people without leaving some of us out?

Would it not be wiser, for us as a people and a developing nation to choose a word or term that would indeed identify all of us and make all of us feel souly comfortable wearing it?

We call ourselves, Black, Afro-American, Black American, African American, Negro American and finally Black Afro-American. Well, which one is it? By showing you the varieties of terms our people use to represent them, I've showed you that we really aren't comfortable wearing any of them. None of them do us justice as a people.

We should have a name with the power to identify all of us, at the same time, justly represent the history and the strength of our nation; something that would be developed from our heritage, since we all had the same beginnings. We all come from basically the same kind of roots. Would this not identify all of us regardless to the many shades of "Black" we consist of?

Now that I've finally reached the essence of our conversation, which is exactly what it is... May I ask you...

What is Black?

I was raised constantly being reminded of my beginnings, of the importance of my people and of the importance of a nation. "Black" is not the color of your skin, nor is it how high you can grow your afro or who wears the brightest dashiki.

Your brother is not necessarily the man that wears the same color and bushy "fro" that you wear. Sometimes he will steal from your pocket quicker than a man of any other color or shade of color.

It is not your physical characteristics that qualify you to identify with and be a part of the nation of people who presently call themselves "Black," but your mind.

We as a people have to grow to the point, where we stop limiting and discriminating against ourselves because of physical colors and physical characteristics.

When a brother would rather date a sister who has a tanish color and long semi-straight so-called "pretty hair" than a sister with a dark complexion, prominant features and kinky hair... and when a sister desires to marry a light skinned man with soft curly hair in hopes that her children will take after their father, this shows you that we have yet to look upon each other and see true value. We may not purposely or consciously prefer the examples I just mentioned, but subconsciously we do. How can we expect to step out of over 400 years of self hatred, refreshed and totally and sincerely loving Black?

We discovered our physical color and have become aware of its importance, but we can't stop there. A people with no real base, in actuality, do not exist.

The color consciousness that keeps all of us blinded, preventing us from seeing the true value in each other, also keeps us digging a hole for ourselves.

We can never progress unless we move beyond surface level... and that is exactly where the term "Black" has us... hung up on the physical color of our skin, the physical contours of our features.

The first thing we should do is to search ourselves, find out who we are and then build on that. Once you have your basis, once you know who you are, you can be stripped of everything else, but you'll always have something to start building all over again upon. Anyone who works for the good of humanity is upholding what "Black" is supposed to stand for.

So, please brothers and sisters, don't "keep on truckin" cause we've been walking on air and gettin nowhere, but keep on working towards the betterment of your real self... your mind!

Black Homcoming Weekend '76

By VICKIE TAYLOR

Homecoming weekend has been traditionally a weekend of parties and concerts, where the Greeks take over the campus and beer is evidently everywhere. Because there are no Black fraternities and sororities UMass' Black community misses out on the festivities that are enjoyed by many Black colleges and universities all over the country. This weekend is nothing else but the social event of the year. The night before the Homecoming football game there is a program where all the football players are introduced and applauded to start the steam which will hopefully result in a victorious game. Then the various fraternities and sororities display their talents in the Greek show, which is nothing less than a comedy show. The next day there is a parade where the campus beauties sit atop bad rides and wave to the hundreds of onlookers down the main street. There are marching bands and clowns, everything but cotton candy. And then there is the game itself. No team would have the nerve to lose the Homecoming game, even if it's the only game they do win. That night the entertainment continues with good music and snapping fingers.

This year the spirit of Homecoming is going to happen to UMass. Without the Greek show and the beauties atop Cadillacs and Eldorados, we will enjoy the entertainment. The night before the Homecoming Game we will enjoy the talents of our own students and faculty, followed by partying until you can't stand it no more. Saturday October 23, is The Game where we shall watch our football players perform their talents on the field, we know and have seen them in the past. And that night we will party to a live band and disco sounds in the Student Union Ballroom. Don't let the word Ball fool you, because a ball is what you are going to have. To make it easier for those who think of a Ball as something straight out of Cinderella, think of it as the baddest party to ever happen on this campus. The dress is not formal, who can afford an outfit for one occasion anyway, wear what you have but look good. If you come with a friend the whole evening will be cheaper since tickets are $2.50 per person, $4.00 per couple, so start finding that special someone to spend the evening with. Food will be served throughout the evening. Tickets will be on sale that week in the Cultural Center, New Africa House. Tickets will be sold at the door for a slightly higher cost. And we shall honor our Black football stars.

And there is the entertainmet of the talented Natalie Cole. This concert will be held in the Fine Arts Center, Tuesday October 26, 1976. Anyone who misses this concert will regret it. A word to the wise is get your tickets early, it's guaranteed to be a sell out!!!!!!!!!!!!!! So who says that UMass can't have a smokin Homecoming Weekend. Let's get out there and do it this time around.

Community Update

Kwaku (Leon Sanders) has been selected as Coordinator of the Black Mass Communications Project.

Sulaiman Hakim has been selected as Chairperson of the New Africa House Steering Committee.

Kathe Sandler has been selected as the Black Affairs Editor of the Daily Collegian.

Congratulations and support go out to the brothers and sisters on Orchard Hill who have successfully demonstrated Power and Unity. Now they can begin to justify that their cause is a legitimate one.

Remember to give support to Brother Craemen Gethers. Write him at Box 43 Norfolk Correctional Institute.

We would like to welcome Chancellor Bromery back from his visit in Japan.

Also we would like to welcome back Prof. Shepp from a recent European engagement. We understand that he and Prof. Roach teamed up and played before an audience of 10,000 people in Italy. It would appear that the Europeans know something about the political implications of Black Music.

The three brothers that were falsely accused in the Cumberland Farm Robbery had their charges dropped. The State was unable to come up with sufficient evidence.

Black and Third World Students are encouraged to get involved in student government. You must let your presence be known on campus this year.

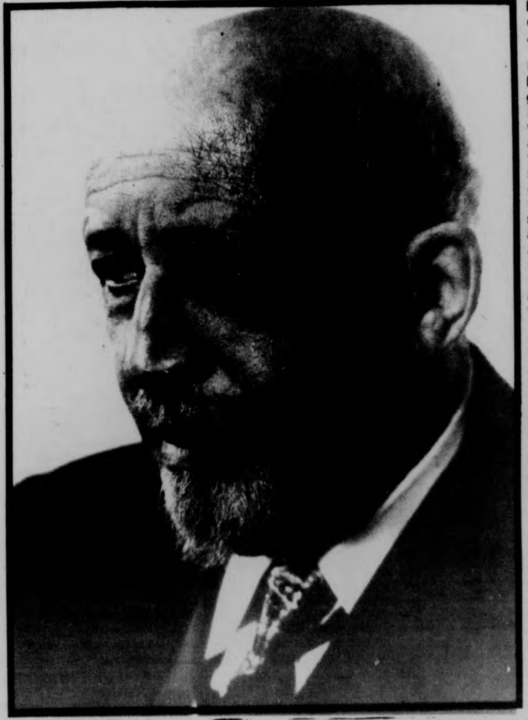
New Africa House has once again emerged as the center of progressive activity on this campus. We as Black Students must realize the political significance of Black Culture. The program of the Cultural Center is geared towards increasing the understanding of Black Culture and the role which we must play in the struggle that Black People are waging for liberation and for attainment of human rights.

W·E·B· Dubois Notes

A weekly colum by members of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-Am Studies on to a variety of topics that reflect the widespread interests of the late Dr. DuBois.

This first colum is on one aspect of the work of Dr. DuBois himself.

W.E.B. Dubois as a Historian: A Reassesment



By JOHN BRACEY,
Associate Professor of Afro-American History

During this year of the bicentennial when virtually every aspect of American life and history is being assessed and reassessed, it was to be expected that the Afro-American experience would receive some attention. Unfortunately, the kind of attention given the Black experience often has been as trivial and silly as that given to the entirety of the American experience. Of the numerous Black figures not being discussed in the rush to glorify Crispus Attucks and the Black inventors of ice cream, the potato chip and the stop light, W.E.B. DuBois is surely the most prominent. By any reasonable criteria, Dr. DuBois was one of the greatest scholars and thinkers ever born in the United States, and to discuss the events of a two hundred-year period without acknowledging the stature of a man who lived and worked for almost one hundred of those years is ludicrous.

An equally compelling reason for taking a second look at the life and work of Dr. DuBois is a bit more complex. We are all aware of the large amount of scholarly attention now focussed on the history and culture of Afro-Americans as a result of the Civil Rights Movement, the resurgence of Black nationalism in the 1960's, and the rise of Black Studies courses, programs and departments. What is not as obvious of the work of such pioneering Black scholars as DuBois, Carter G. Woodson, A.A. Taylor, Charles Welley, etc., and the often too easy dismissal of their work with patronizing and condescending remarks about "special pleading," "lack of sophistication," "not serious scholarship," etc. A careful reading and re-reading of the historical writings of Dr. DuBois should helt to dispel such notions. The purpose then of this brief essay is to bring to your attention the significance of DuBois' approach to the study of history with the hope that scholars now working or just beginning to work in the area of the Afro-American experience will be more aware that they are not always plowing virgin soil or sailing completely uncharted seas. A number of pioneering Black scholars, working udner extremely difficult conditions — heavy teaching loads, scant financial or institutional support, or lack of excess to libraries and archives, and the general perils of a Jim Crow existence — have gone before. W.E.B. DuBois was one of the best of these.

By 1976, at least, the basic outline of DuBois' life should be part of the common knowledge of every American. Let me summarize it briefly. William Edward Burghardt DuBois was born in Great Barrington, Massachusetts, on February 23, 1868, and died in Accra, Ghana, on August 27, 1963. He studied at Fisk University (B.A., 1888) and Harvard University (B.A., 1890; Ph. D. in History, 1895). He taught at Wilberforce University (1894-96) and at Atlanta Universtiy (1897-1910; 1934-1944). Dr. DuBois was a founding member of the Niagara Movement (1905-1909) and the N.A.A.C.P. (1909). He worked with the N.A.A.C.P. from 1910-1934 as editor of The Crisis and director of publicity and research, and from 1944-1948 as director of special research. He participated in the First Pan-Afican Conference in 1900, the First Universal Races Congress in 1911, and sponsored Pan-African congresses in 19119, 1921, 1923, and 1927. He served as honorary chairman of the 1945 Congress. From 1948 to 1961 DuBois was active in various organizations of the American left: Council of African Affairs, Peace Information Center, Communist Party. In 1950, he ran as the U.S. Senate candidate of the American Labor Party in New York. In 1961 he left the U.S. to take up residence and citizenship in Nkrumah's Ghana.

As a writer, Dr. DuBois was a poet, playwright, novelist, essayist, journalist, and sociologist as well as an historian. He wrote twenty-one books, edited fifteen, published over 100 essays and articles The Souls of Black Folk: Essays and Sketches (1903) places him in the front rank of American essayists. The Philadelphia Negro: A Social Study (1899), a pioneering investigation, secures DuBois' reputation as a first-rate sociologist. To assess the entire corpus of DuBois' writings is a task far beyond the scope of this piece. The focus here will be on what DuBois has contributed to the study of Afro-American history.

W.E.B. DuBois' historical writings possess three characteristics that coincide with the "new" trends in Afro-American history. First, Dr. DuBois wrote from an Afrocentric point of view with a Pan-African scope. Dr. DuBois, throughout his life, never failed to acknowledge the significant influence of Africa on the history and lives of Afro-Americans, on the development of western civilization and the New World, especially the United States, and on the general unfolding of the history of mankind. From The Suppression of the African Slave-Trade to the United States of America 1638 to 1870 (1896) to The World and Africa (1947) and in virtually every major work in between Africa had an important place in DuBois' analyses. Dr. DuBois wrote three general histories of Africa and the African Diaspora, The Negro (1915); Black Folk: Then and Now (1939); and The World and Africa, which have yet to be superceded in this era of the specialized monography and the predominance of nationalism among historians. DuBois routinely thought in the comparative cross-cultural and diasporanterms that are now seen as essential to understanding the Afro-American experience.

The Negro, a volume in the Home University Library of Modern Knowledge, is a brief but still useful survey of the existing state of knowledge about Africans and peoples of African descent. It begins with geography and demography, moves swiftly through ancient Egypt and Ethiopia to the now well known kingdoms of the Congo, Niger River and western Sudan. East Africa, Zimbabwe and southern Africa also receive attention. A relatively lengthy chapter on African culture (in the anthropological sense) is followed by chapters on the slave trade and the settling of the West Indies and Latin America. The longest chapter is that on "The Negro in the United States." The concluding chapter discusses the contemporary situation of Blacks in the world in which he anticipates several of Lenin's views on the nature of imperialism and the "labor aristrocracy." It was a necessary and pioneering synthesis from the Afro-American point of view. If it were written in 1976 that description would still apply.

Black Fold: Then and Now: An Essay in the History and Sociology of the Negro Race and The World and Africa aee more extensive and refined treatments of the ideas outlines in The Negro. Black Folk: Then and Now follows the general format of The Negro but devotes greater attention to the effects of colonialism on contemporary Africa. As in The Negro, DuBois apologizes for the lack of firm supporting data for some of his conclusions, while still asserting the need for the work of synthesis that he is attempting. World War II ans the subsequent upsurge in anticolonial movements provoked DuBois to once again write on Africa. The World and Africa, devoted entirely to the history and contemporary events on the continent, is vigorously anticolonial in intent.

The work of the post-1945 and post-independence historians of Africa has resulted in the revision, expansion, and refining of many of DuBois' specific conclusions. However, no one has stepped forward to take on the task of writing a concise yet wide-ranging synthesis of Africa and the African Diaspora.

A second characteristic of Dr. DuBois' historiography is that is is genuinely interdisciplinary. DuBois never accepted the division of the study of human groups and societies into separate disciplines. As a student and throughout his life, he read and studied widely. All of his works were informed both by his sense of the historical process and by the concern for the cultural dimension. The essays in The Souls of Black Folk (1903) are perhaps the best introduction to this process. The Philadelphia Negro, a sociological study, has a lengthly section on the history of Blacks in Philadelphia from the colonial period through the 19th century. DuBois is careful to pay some attention to the historical context of each institution or practice such as churches, schools,a dn businesses that he discusses. The same is true of most of the Atlanta University Publications. The Negro and Black Folk: Then and Now of course deal extensively with African culture. The most interesting blend of historical, economic and cultural analysis is in The Gift of Black Folk: The Negroes in the Making of America (1924).

The Gift of Black Folk is an exciting treatment of what Black people have meant to the development of American civilization. The now well known facts concerning Blacks as explorers, workers and soldiers are summarized. Perhaps of greater interest to us today are DuBois' discussions of the influence of Blacks on U.S. political thought and institutions, on popular culture especially music, and on religious thought and practices. The chapter on Reconstruction anticipates the conclusion of Black Reconstruction in America (1935). DuBois shows that Blacks and the white treatment of Blacks was a central theme in American history, and that the influence of Blacks was much more pervasive than previous, and most subsequent, scholars have been willing to admit. The book is not a history in the strict academic sense, but a series of essays in response to the general question: "Who made America"? DuBois effort to assess the history of Blacks in America is written as fiction: The Black Flame: A Trilogy (1957, 1959, 1961). The Ordeal of Mansart (1957), Mansart Builds A School (1959), and Worlds of Color (1961) which are the life of Manual Mansart (DuBois?) are a combination of literature, autobiography and historical commentary on the role of Blacks in the U.S. and the world from 1876 to 1956.

DuBois' use of rather unique combination of literary form, e.g. novels and essays to present his ideas has been used as a justification for not taking him seriously as an historian. But those who would look to works such as William Styron's Confessions of Nat Turner for truths about slavery would be on much firmer ground by using The Gift of Black Folk and The Black Flame and the essays in The Souls of Black Folk and Darkwater: Voices From Within The Veil (1921) as guides to an understanding of American society.

A final characteristic to Dr. DuBois' historiography is that he offers ideas on a number of historical problems that still deserve attention. I have mentioned The Gift of Black Folk and its challenging theses on the influence of Blacks on American civilization. But it is Black Reconstruction in America (1935) that contains a wealth of forward looking insights. The basic thesis of Eric Williams' Capitalism and Slavery is that (p.5) many of the conclusions of the new work on slavery by such scholars as Kenneth Stampp, Eugene Genovese, John Blassingame and George Rawick are there. DuBois saw that in contrast to the West Indies that: "if paid to conserve the slave and let him multiply (p. 4). He anticipates Genovese' discussions of the phychological effects of slavery and made the same comparisons with the conditions of northern workers. DuBois' chapter on "The Planter" is an insightful a discussion of the nature of planter hegemony as can be found in Genovese and has yet to be given the credit due it. DuBois' conclusions (if not his terminology) of the role blacks during the Civil War and Reconstruction have held up far better than those of his racist contemporaries. His conclusions as to the reasons for the failre of Reconstruction are sound. The conclusions concerning the "Counter-Revolution of Property" and "Black Toward Slavery" have not been repudiated, nor have been those of "The Propaganda of History" which should be required reading for graduate students in U.S. history.

In calling for a reassessment and re-reading of DuBois, I am not suggesting that he be read as that last word on any particular subject. DuBois himself addressed the same problem e.g. Africa, Reconstruction, etc. at different times, in different ways. DuBois' historical writings are not the last words, but often the first, and always interesting and profound.

 The Sharpeville Massacre of March 1960 *****

Its Historic Significance in the Struggle against Apartheid

Sharpeville: A Source of Inspiration And Rededication

Cold blooded massacres such as that in Sharpeville have been a deliberate tactic for crushing political opposition from the earliest days of European colonialism in Azania. They have been a pattern elsewhere in the world. As late as in 1946, trigger-happy white police had been used to crack down on a massive miners' strike along South Africa's gold-belt, the Witwatersrand. This tactic is still very much in use: striking African miners were massacred at Carletonville, at the Western Deep Level Mines, as recently as 1973. The impact of it all is all too often too temporary. But not so with Sharpeville.

It is appropriate to focus on Sharpeville itself at this stage. Under the leadership of Nyakale Tsolo, as Chairman, the PAC branch at Sharpeville covered every house and the men's hostel in the township, mobilising support for the strike against passes planned for Monday, March 21, 1960. The full story of Sharpeville is still to be told, hopefully by those who helped to make this history. I was fortunate to work amongst many of the organisers and participants in that historic event, as head of the regional executive committee of the Vaal, from 1963, in the underground. Like most veterans of war I found that the people of Sharpeville hate to relive their experiences during that time; all the same I was able to learn from direct participants a great deal of what took place.

Not a single bus moved out of Sharpeville to take passengers to work on that Monday. PAC task force members started out before the break of dawn lining up marchers in street after street. By daybreak the marchers, under the leadership of the task force, were moving to a preappointed open ground, where they merged with other demonstrators. In line with the instructions of the Party leadership, when all the groups had been assembled, the 10,000 and more men, women and children proceeded to the local police station — chanting freedom songs and calling out campaign slogans "Izwe lethu" (Our Land) "I Africa"; "Avaphele ampasti" (Down with passes); Sobukwe Sikhokhle" (Lead us Sobukwe); "Forward to Independence, Tomorrow the United States of Africa"; and so on and so forth.

When the marchers reached Sharpeville's police station a heavy contingent of police was lined up outside, many on top of British-made Saracen armoured cars. Tsolo and other Executive Branch members moved forward — in conformity with the novel PAC motto of "Leaders in Front" — and asked the white policeman in command to let them through so that they could surrender themselves for refusing to carry passes. Initially the police commander refused but much later, towards 11 a.m., they were let through. The chanting of freedom songs was picking up and the slogans were being repeated with greater volume. Journalists who rushed there from other areas, after receiving word that the campaign was a runaway success in this mostly ignored African township, more than 30 miles south of Johannesburg, confirm that for all their singing and shouting the crowd's mood was more festive than belligerent. But shortly after the PAC branch leaders had been let through into the police station, without warning the police facing the crowd opened fire and in two minutes hundreds of bodies lay sprawling on the ground like debris. The joyful singing had been given way to murderous gunfire, and the gunfire was followed by an authentic deadly silence, and then screams, wild screams and cries of the wounded.

Littering the ground in front of that police station in nearby dusty streets were 69 dead and nearly 200 injured men, women and children: a revolting sight which appalled decent human beings the world over as pictures of the massacre got around.

David Sibeko, U.N. Representative of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (P.A.C.) and Director of its' Foreign Affairs.

"It will be remembered that when this case began we refused to plead (13) because we felt no moral obligation whatsoever to obey laws which are made exclusively by a white minority ....But I would like to quote what was said by somebody before, that an unjust law cannot be justly applied. We believe in one race only — the human race to which we all belong. The history of the human race is a long history of struggle against all restrictions, physical, mental and spiritual. We would have betrayed the human race if we had not done our share."

The Apartheid Regime is Vulnerable

The greatest significance of the campaign which led to the Sharpeville shooting lies in the fact that it proved that the South African apartheid regime, like all oppressive regimes, is a paper tiger. Further it shows that it is the human element and not sophisticated weapons alone, which will be the decisive factor in the resolution of the struggle between the African majority and their white minority oppressors. Years after apartheid South Africa had equipped itself with the finest arsenal modern weapons in the whole of Africa, seasoned commentator on the political scene, Allister Sparks, told readers of the Johannesburg Rand Daily Mail that the growing Black labour movement "places tremendous real power in the hands of Black workers; this is going to become the main pressure factor in South African politics in the future." (20) I would add that the decisive factor will be the armed struggle. Be that as it may, it is worth recalling that on the eve of Sharpeville, Sobukwe said when African workers force industry to come to a standstill "the government will be forced to come to our terms." (21) A combination of renewed armed struggle, with the rough edges of the 1960's smoothed out, and pressure on industry by the African labour force, are far more powerful than any weapon in Vorster's arsenal.

The same pattern of events had taken place in nearby Vanderbijl Park, where two Africans were gunned down by white police a few minutes later, and at Langa and Nyanga, a thousand miles away in Cape Town, where five people were shot dead by white police.

The Observance of the International Day: A Tribute to the Martyrs of Sharpeville, Langa, Nyanga Vanderbijl Park

The support of the international community is especially valuable to the people of Azania in their struggle for self-determination. The world community's heightened sensitivity to political injustice of 1960 combined with the political assault on the apartheid system — an assault conceived and carried out by the Azanian people — played an important part in immortalizing Sharpeville.

The designation of 21 March, every year, as the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination by the United Nations, is a source of pride to the Azanian people and their liberation movement. The posthumous tribute to the martyrs of Sharpeville, Langa, Nyanga, and Vanderbijl Park is viewed as tantamount to the canonization of men, women and children who paid for the noble cause of freedom with their own blood.

Further, it is important to bear in mind that the Azanian people see their own struggle as part of the whole of mankind's fight for the total elimination of oppression and exploitation. PAC referred to this statement in the Security Council of 1974, quoting Sobukwe, who said:

"At first glance inside South Africa there is little to show that it could be on the brink of a prolonged war. But scratch the surface, there are all the fears and frustrations of a population preparing to defend itself. It is Whites who are getting edgy.... At the scene of a shooting in Central Johannesburg — I heard a chilling comment: 'They are getting frightened, it's Angola.' Main railway stations are periodically packed with soldiers, many leaving behind wives and children as they head off to the barracks. The radio plays record requests 'for the boys on the border'... A mining official discreetly displays his armoury, which he brought just in case — two hand guns, a .22 rifle and a shotgun. Many of the Whites have been on retreat most of their lives, moving down Africa as each country gained independence and Black rule. South Africa was the last 'refuge'... Now they all sit in South Africa — four and half million Whites outnumbered five to one by Blacks — wondering what the future holds. A lot have yet another escape route through retaining their original nationalality, particularly the British. In the meantime they will heed Major General Neil Webster, director-general of resources, who recently told them 'to get used to the idea of living with a warlike situation for many years to come'."

The communique also said a black man shot and wounded by troops for breaking the strict curfew imposed on blacks in border areas has died of his wounds.

It said security forces have discovered the bodies of three black men roped together and killed by guerrillas.

Black nationalist leader Joshua Nkomo has accused Rhodesia's white rulers of trying to "stampede us to a conference" on a new interim government and said the meeting in Geneva Oct. 25 should be postponed.

Art/Poetry Show Salutes Women In Struggle

By FREIDA JONES

September 27 — An exhibition of Third World art and poetry opened at Hampshire College. This show demonstrated that cultural events can and should be revolutionary in content and collective in effort. This multi-media event, dedicated to women in struggle (that means us, too) was the collaboration of Eshu, a male artist and four women poets, Malika, Nikki, Carole and Tamra.

As you enter the gallery, Eshu's drawings capture your eye; shining fragments of a splintered African past. These drawings were like recreated mirrors of our past and present. From the past, is the picture of Queen Amina, a fifteen century warrior-queen from southern Nigeria — she is shown leading her troops to defend the homeland from the invasion of Europeans. Near the drawing of Kwame Nkrumah is a quotation reflecting appreciation of women. Most of Eshu's drawings were of women; all around you were strong profiles, rounded noses, full lips, dark satiny skin.

Nikki's poetry tells of love relationships, with the emphasis that without friendship and strength, there is no love. Her poem, Inner Sight, tells us she sees beyond the external into the internal parts of a man. Tamra's poetry tells of those particular changes one goes through in the various phases of a relationship. In The Cell, Malika tells us, "We will be born from their inner cells, new people with a new cry." Carole is positive: "We own history, move mountains."

The lack of titles and credits indicated, to me, a lack of individualism that is found in most American cultural events. In western society, the worth of art depends upon the signature of the artist. In African society, art belonged to the people. When I asked why there were no titles, the response I received was; "There is no lack of titles. The titles are the expressions themselves."

The importance of a show like this is contained within the quotation posted near the entrance.

"The liberation of women is a basic requirement of the revolution; the guarantee of its continuity and a precondition for its victory." Frelimo

SOUTHERN AFRICA LIBERATION

"The seven million Africans in Southern Africa refuse to be oppressed by the two million Whites any longer".

Pan African Congress Representative to the United Nations David Sebeko spoke those very words. The 5-College Support Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa sponsored the talk. It was held on Tuesday Oct. 5 in Hasbrook Rm 20 at 8:00 p.m. at the University of Massachusetts.

Mr. Sebeko stated that the Freedom Fighters in Southern Africa will never rest until the exploiters have been driven out. He stated that Children and Adults are fighting the Oppressive Forces in S. Africa. He stated that students are holding mass demonstrations to protest the Apartheid Gov. in S. Africa.

Mr. Sebeko stated Mr. Kissinger's shuttle diplomacy is a disguise of Western concern for the people of S. Africa. He stated the people will not stand still for another form of oppression. He stated the Liberation Forces know that the Gov. of S. Africa is supported by the Capitalist in the West.

Mr. Sebeko stated the gorilla fighters have been fighting with sticks and stones and gasoline bombs. The only way they got any real weapons is when they overpower an enemy and took theirs. He stated "What they need is support at the international level to free their land of Apartheid.

An Open Letter On Southern Africa

By PLAYTHELL BENJAMIN

To the Management of C.B.S. News:

I have been an enthusiastic fan of C.B.S. News. In fact, I have often defended the breadth and objectivity of your coverage against charges to the contrary from many of my colleagues. Nowever, your recent reportage on southern Africa has forced me to reconsider my previous judgement as to the honesty and neutrality of your presentation of certain events.

As one who has studied Africa's problems, offered university courses on Africa, and is presently engaged in research and writing on the subject, I find your (C.B.S. News) view of southern Africa astounding! The images of southern Africa that emerges from both your reportage and commentary supplies an impressive, logical and persuasive argument in favor of white fascist minority rule. This fact raises a fundamental question: How can C.B.S. take such a position when, like the American government, it professes to stand for democratic principles (i.e., majority rule) and basic human freedom? This is no picayune consideration, rather it is a matter of highest principal. In the final analysis the central question is: What does C.B.S. stand for?

Before I begin to investigate specific examples, perhaps it would be useful to clarify what I perceive to be the differences between content and point of view and to state my basic complaint. By content I mean the raw data, i.e., hard facts; by point of view I refer to the way that data is selected, edited and interpreted.

In every instance, the point of view which emerges from C.B.S. presentations on southern Africa shows a flagrant disregard for the rights and humanity of Africans.

While the human rights of the African majority are routinely ignored, there is a simultaneous attempt to justify white fascist minority rule through the creation of a media mythology. In its essentials this media mythology bears a striking resemblance to the Afrikaner mythology. The white South Africans justify their fascist hegemony by posturing the belief that they were sent by God to civilize the African savages. This is the central theme in Afrikaner ideology, and is consistently echoed in the reportage of C.B.S.

The transparency of Afrikaner mythology should be blatantly obvious to all who possess a modicum of information and analytical intelligence. I am laboring under the rather pedestrian assumption that given the resources of C.B.S. News, you possess an abundance of both. The use of racist ideology to justify absolute power and special privileges is by now an old story. This story is well known to students of the European expansion into non-white areas of the world, for it was commonly used to justify the whole-sale rape, murder, pillage and enslavement of entire races.

Having sufficiently stated my case in general terms, let me get down to specifics. On Wednesday evening, April 28, 1976, Eric Severied presented a commentary which addressed the question of white rule in southern Africa. The tone and character of his remarks were indistinguishable from the official propaganda of the illegal white South African regimes. Mr. Severied took the position that in southern Africa "Whites have created everything that means anything in twentieth century terms." I would like to ask of Mr. Severied: Does not "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" mean anything in twentieth century terms?

Perhaps Mr. Severied considers these principles to be unfashionable eighteenth century anachronisms, or that they apply to whites only! In any case, even if Mr. Severied is intellectually perverse enough to believe the latter, it should be pointed out that there is precious little freedom for whites who oppose official policy in southern Africa. The experiences of anti-apartheid white South African intellectuals such as Dr. Beyers Naude and Ronald Segal among others are excellent cases in point.

Many distinguished legal scholars of international standing including some South Africans, have pointed out that the Suppression of Communism Act in South Africa is so broad that it encompasses almost any act that disagrees with government policy. The result is that it is open to such a variety of interpretations that it effectively grants the South African government arbitrary power to crush all opposition. When applied to the black majority in the Republican of South Africa, its aim is to viciously destroy any signs of resistance.

An excellent example of how this and other antisubversion laws operate in practice is the case of the nine black students presently on trial for their lives for reading poetry extolling the beauty of blackness. This is fascist slavery pure and simple! No amount of equivocation, even by so eloquent an apologist as Mr. Severied, can obscure this fact.

There is abundant evidence of this double standard at work in the remainder of Mr. Severied's commentary of April 28. For example, he refers to the "barbaric treatment of Asians" in East Africa and to tribalism "as a form of racism." He also spoke of tribal conflict as "wars of extermination". Notice the extravagant use of the negative adjective when he addresses what he perceives as African shortcomings. When viewed against the feeble or non-existent treatment given these same questions, when blacks are the victims of whites, it does not require extra-ordinary intelligence to recognize a double standard.

Here again, Mr. Severeid's commentary obscures more than it enlightens. Every reasonable observer of the East African scene recognizes the racist, oppressive, exploitative role traditionally played by East Indians. The East Indians came to Africa from a society with what is perhaps the world's oldest and most deeply entrenched system of institutionalized inequality. (Though we readily admit that the present government is attempting to change this.) They entered Africa with a highly developed sense of social discrimination and were given a privileged position within the British colonial system.

There is also a long tradition of racism that is indigenous to Indian society. The age of this racist ethic is well documented in the great Hindu Epics. They tell of battles between the black Dravidians and white Aryans for the possession of India several thousands of years aog. In all these accounts it is the white Aryans who are the aggressors. Since Mr. Severied is either unwilling or unable to do the necessary reading to comment intelligently on these matters, he should seek alternative means of education.

For an instance, Mr. Severied might have turned to the theater for instruction. In the last few months, there have been several excellent works which explored some of these topics. Two such works are "Sweze Danza is Dead" and "Play Mas." The former play was a collaboration of white and black South Africans and graphically exposed the horror of the black existence in South Africa. This work won several awards including the coveted Tony. The latter work was written by a Trinidadian Indian, and it forcefully depicted the oppression of blacks at the hands of Indians in that country prior to independence. However, Indian oppression of blacks was far worse in East Africa.

It should be clear that this is not an attempt to justify or endorse the policies and political style of General Amin in total but rather an attempt to bring some fairness and perspective to the issue. When one considers the tradition of racist oppression, economic exploitation, and contempt for African citizenship on the part of the Indians, their expulsion from Uganda is easily understandable. After all, when offered the passports of African nations upon independence, the Indians refused. This is a clear cut example to any candid observer of the racist contempt with which Indians regard Africans. It should be stressed that this is not true of all Indians in East Africa, and not all Indians were expelled from Uganda.

The reference to tribalism as "a form of racism" and to tribal conflicts as "wars of extermination" is in my opinion a clear cut expression of Mr. Severied's racism! Ethnic conflict exists everywhere in the world to some extent, including Africa. But which tribes have exterminated others in Africa? I would like Mr. Severied to supply us with that information since I know of none! If he is truly interested in the phenomena of racial extermination he might investigate the history of whites in Australia, New Zealand, Canada, the U.S.A., and South Africa for a start.

There are so many flaws in Mr. Severied's commentary that it would be possible to continue this analysis ad infinitum. However, I will make a final comment on this pseudo-intellectual debacle then turn my attention to other matters. In my opinion, Mr. Severied's comments were not only racist and grossly misleading but represent a shocking failure of critical example of what is likely to happen when ignorance is enshrouded in legitimacy and dignified with a national platform.

The Truth About South Africa

NUMMO NEWS SERVICE

Besides being the first liberation spokesman of any international stature to address the UMass audience this year, Mr. David Sibeko of the Pan African Congress (P.A.C.) of Azania (a P.A.C. liberation name for South Africa) gave a magnificent account of the liberation struggle in that country which has entered a very crucial stage with the recent student and Coloured (mixed Africans) uprising in Soweto and Cape Town, respectively.

In his speech, he decried the propaganda perpetuated by the Western news media especially the U.S. media which has labelled the political rebellions as riots which distortion he said was typical during the 1960's when Black political protest was attributed to the heat of the summer and not to any injustice or inequities in the system.

The rebellion in South Africa must be looked at from the point of view of the oppression as codified in such fascist laws 180-day Act, which empowers the justice minister to detain any political dissenter or organizer for 180 days without trial or the latest Internal Security Law which entitles the justice minister to imprison anyone if the minister finds that person a threat to the 'security' of the state.

These laws and many others have followed massive acts of rebellion against the regime's systematic legislation of suppression of human rights and civil liberties. Blacks cannot vote or unions or own land in 87 per cent of the country or become skilled workers in many areas in the economy. The list — not to mention such petty Apartheid as segregated social facilities as park benches, cinemas, etc. — is long.

The banning of the Pan African Congress and the African National Congress followed the infamous Sharpville massacre, a reaction to a protest by unarmed Africans against the Pass laws. After a long lull in acts of rebellion since 1961, the Soweto rebellion signified once more the indomitability of the Africans in their determination to resist and uproot fascism.

Because of the firing power of the Boer regime — thanks to the U.S., West Germany, France among others — a myth had been created that the racist regime was invincible. That myth, according to Sibeko, was buried in Angola. Angola yesterday. Namibia and Zimbabwe Today. And tomorrow, Azania.

Not only does the Boer fascist recognize that the Africans will oust him even if it takes his bare hands to do it, but he also recognizes that his former buffer zones such as colonial Angola and Mozambique are not imminent Azanian guerilla sanctuaries. The Boer is therefore on a desperate search for new power arrangements and alignments in Southern Africa that will minimize hostility to his laws and in effect perpetuate the racist and fascist status quo.

The regime wants puppet regimes that can be easily influenced, even controlled. It is therefore very important for the Boer that Zimbabwe, especially, have a moderate or even puppet black government. The Boer wants for these countries something akin to the Bantustans or the so-called homelands which through some necromancy will convert into sovereign states ruled by Africans. Every student of South Africa knows that the Bantustans are impoverished reservations which are not only sources of cheap labor for the super profitable American, British, Japanese, French or Italian investments, but they are also dumping grounds for the old, the sickly, the banished or any description of Africans who serve no exploitable purpose in the white man's kitchens, mines or factories. True independence, says Sibeko, will come from the program of the liberation parties labelled terrorist and communist and therefore banned by the regime.

These are the people that the sheik of shuttle diplomacy did not see the last time he was in Azania and does not want to see as the government of the future. Shuttle diplomacy must therefore be seen as a marriage of strategic, political and economic interests between the U.S. and the fascist and racist regime in South Africa. In spite of all the talk about majority rule in Zimbabwe, there was no criticism of minority rule in Azania or Namibia. The U.S. is an old friend of the fascists in South Africa. Since 1960, U.S. investments in South Africa have risen from $700 millions to about $1½ billions. The U.S. covertly supplies arms to South Africa via contractual arrangements in Israel which is another great aider and abetter of fascism in South Africa. It is not surprise then that the architect of shuttle diplomacy did not see liberation leaders on his last mission of secret deals in Southern Africa. He did not see them because he knows that they are a potential threat to lucrative U.S. business investments in South Africa. But he also knows that the arms that killed MPLA comrades in Angola are also ready to slaughter them.

As a result of the Soweto and Cape rebellions, and some of the depraved acts of violence committed even against 8 year old kids, there is now in the countries surrounding South Africa, a large population of children refugees.

Sibeko urged the Amherst community to help in material and moral support to ensure the destruction of the fascist and racist regime in Azania and also to ensure that the U.S. does not complete its imperialist designs in Southern Africa.

SALISBURY, Rhodesia [UPI] — Rhodesia said today that black guerrillas killed a white civilian but suffered 10 dead in the past 24 hours, bringing to 16 the number of insurgents slain in a weekend of heightened military and diplomatic activity.

A security forces communique said Rhodesian troops killed the 10 guerrillas along with four black women "accompanying them" during followup operations "after an ineffectual attack on a government camp."

On Sunday, a communique reported the slayings of "six terrorists" and two African women accompanying them.

The dead civilian was identified as Robert Bruce Scott, a 29-year-old single man employed by a construction firm. The communique said Scott was killed while collecting his Black work crew from a hotel in an unnamed border area.

It said a black youth was killed in the incident by "the terrorist crossfire."

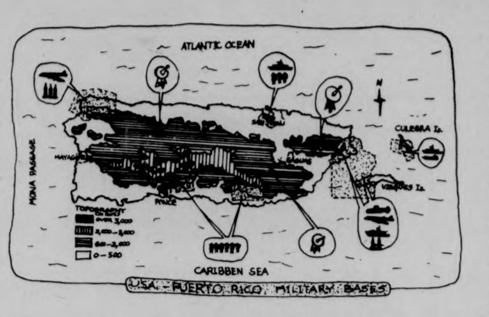
The Colonial Case of Puerto Rico

Reprinted below are the first two parts of a document which outlines the story of Puerto Rico's 75 year struggle for liberation from the U.S. colonial domination. The document was originally presented by the Permanent Representative to the United Nations of the Republic of Cuba, Ricardo Alarcon Quesada before the United Nations General Assembly in 1971.



Since 1965, when the Committee for Decolonization was first requested to discuss the colonial case of Puerto Rico, Cuba has taken on the task of diplomatic representation in the United Nations of the Puerto Rican independence movement and the popular interests it articulates. This expression of solidarity has grown from the common struggle which the Cuban and Puerto Rican people have shared against the colonial domination of first Spain then the United States.

Puerto Rico is a Latin American country. It has a nationality of its own which was crystallized as early as the beginning of the nineteenth century. Its history, culture, customs, traditions and interests are totally different from those of the United States, the metropolitan colonial Power.

The people of Puerto Rico has a long and heroic tradition of struggle for its national independence. The common task of helping that people to win full emancipation is part of the historical patrimony of all the Latin American peoples.

In the first quarter of the nineteenth century, when the first stirrings of rebellion against the colonial power of Spain began to make themselves felt in the West Indies, the Liberator, Simon Bolivar, personally assumed responsibility for assisting and encouraging those in Cuba and Puerto Rico who were fighting for national independence. Ever since that very early time, it was the government of the United States which represented the main obstacle to the fulfillment by the Latin American patriots of their duty of solidarity.

On 23 September 1868, in the town of Lares, the Puerto Rican people launched its war of independence against Spain. Side by side with the people of Cuba, the inhabitants of the small West Indian island defied colonial power and fought under the very difficult conditions resulting from their insularity until the year 1898.

As a result of that struggle, Spainwas forced to grant Puerto Rico a relatively large degree of autonomy, which was enshrined in the Constitution of 25 November 1897. Under the terms of that Constitution, the people of Puerto Rico elected deputies to the Spanish Court, acquired the freedom to trade with all the countries of the world and exercised important powers and prerogatives of self government representing a degree of autonomy incomparably greater than those which now exists in the island under the United States colonial rule. The Constitution of 1897 provided that Spain could not modify the status of Puerto Rico without the consent of the Puerto Rican Parliament.

However, on 25 July 1898, the island was invaded by the armed forces of the United States, which placed the territory under military occupation, dissolved the Parliament and established United States rule by force of arms.

History provides ample evidence of the expansionist aims of the United States with respect to the West Indies. Everybody knows the famous line written by President Monroe in a letter to Mr. Nelson, United States Ambassador in Madrid, in 1822; "Cuba and Puerto Rico are natural appendages of the United States."

In July 1898, Spain was preparing to surrender after the defeats suffered in the fighting in Cuban territory. On 16 July, the Spanish Army surrendered in the city of Santiago in Cuba. The following day, the 17th, the Spanish Government, through its Ambassador in Paris, made an offer to the United States to open peace talks. The very same day, the United States government ordered its Navy to invade Puerto Rico. An American writer, who certainly could not be accused of hostility towards the imperialist designs of hisGovernment, wrote quite properly: "It was not a battle against the Spaniards any longer — they were fleeing satisfactorily — but against time: to establish a fait accompli occupation of the island before an unfavourable turn in the peace negotiations now in progress could deprive Miles armies of the territory they already controlled." (Jack Cameron Dierks, A Leap to Arms, the Cuban Campaign of 1898, Philadelphia and New York, 1970)

Under the terms of the Treaty of Paris signed between Spain and the United States, Spain "ceded" to the United States the territory of Puerto Rico (Article 2 of the Treaty), thus consummating a typical act of colonial plunder in which the people of the territory concerned had absolutely no say. To that extent, the Treaty of Paris, in so far as it concerns Puerto Rico is null and void because it was done in total disregard of the Puerto Rican Constitution and its autonomous institutions. That argument was invoked by the great Puerto Rican patriot of the time, Eugenio Maria de Hostos: "Puerto Rico is a legal entity and could not be stripped of any of its prerogatives as a nation by a war which was not of its own making." In October 1935, in a plea before the United States Supreme Court, Pedro Albizu Campos, leader of the Nationalist Party of Puerto Rico, asserted: "The Treaty (of Paris) is null and void in so far as it concerns Puerto Rico. Spain could not cede Puerto Rico because Puerto Rico was not a negotiable entity (re in commercium). Puerto Rico became a sovereign nation by virtue of the Charter of Self-Government (Carta Autonomica) which Spain could not amend without the consent of Puerto Rico. And the United States could not agree to the cession of the territory because it was obligated to respect the independence of Puerto Rico ... The feudal concept of international law which permitted the conquest of one nation by another through war and retention of the victim as the property of the victor, as a possession, must have been dead in the United States too."

By virtue of an act of imperialist plunder the people of Puerto Rico lost the autonomy which it had wrested from Spain. The territory, which had won international recognition as a separate legal entity when it was admitted to the Universal Postal Union in 1897, openly and frankly became a conquest of the United States, a colonial possession of the United States.

THE PRESENT SITUATION

Since 1898, the Government in Washington has done everything in its power to crush the aspirations of the Puerto Rican people for independence and to make the island a part of the United States. Its efforts have resulted in total failure and the struggle of the Puerto Rican people has become irrepressible, forcing the colonial Government to resort to all kinds of manoevres to silence internal opposition and international condemnation of the oppression of Puerto Rico. Today, United States colonial rule over all aspects of Puerto Rican life is absolute. Puerto Rico is under the legislative, judicial and executive control of the United States. The United States Government has exclusive jurisdiction over all questions of citizenship, foreign affairs, defense, immigration and emigration, foreign trade, currency, postal service, radio and television, air and maritime transport. Decisions of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico can be overturned by the federal courts of the United States. All the laws adopted by the Congress of the United States automatically apply in Puerto Rico.

The United States exercises absolute control over the economy of Puerto Rico. American investments in Puerto Rico aamount to $1,000 million and, even according to colonial propaganda, yield profits each year amounting on the average to ----† per cent of the capital invested. American investments are exempt from taxes, corporation of personal taxes for a period ranging from 12 to 17 years. In that way, Puerto Rico has been converted into a privileged preserve for United States monopolies, which use it as a source of cheap labor and exploit the national economy without even being subject to the rules and restrictions in force in the metropolitan country. For example, the average wage of a Puerto Rican worker is equivalent to one third of what an American worker earns and the average income of the inhabitants of the island if half of what is earned by the citizens of Mississippi, the poorest State in the United States. On the other hand, the United States has a monopoly over Puerto Rican trade, forcing Puerto Rico to depend entirely on the United States market and to carry all goods imported from the United States in ships of the United States merchant fleet, which has a monopoly over the island's shipping. The result is that the average prices of goods and basic necessities are 25 per cent higher than in New York or other American cities.

The effects of this situation on the living conditions of the people are easy to imagine. According to official statistics Puerto Rico has 100,000 unemployed, that is 14.3 per cent of the labour force. One-third of the population has been forced to emigrate to the metropolitan territory of the United States where they are subjected to harassment and discrimination reduced to accepting the hardest and least well paid jobs, crowded together in the ghettos of the big American cities.

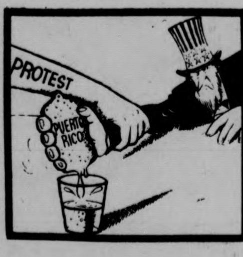
The same statistics indicate that 81.8 per cent of the population of Puerto Rico earns less than $3,000 a year. In an effort to mitigate the effects of the poverty conditions imposed on most of the population of Puerto Rico, the colonial regime has established the so-called system of "maintenance", which consists of the distribution of United States farm surpluses to needy families. On 9 September 1963, a pro American newspaper published in San Juan, "El Mundo, reported on the first page: "850,000 people are living on maintenance," that is approximately 35 per cent of the population of Puerto Rico.

The super-exploitation of Puerto Rico by the United States may be summed up in the following statement by Josue de Castro: "Thus, the United States policy was one of protectionism for the benefit of an insignificant minority at the expense of the majority of the indigenous population, who were forced to make the heaviest sacrifices." (Josue de Castro, The Geopolitics of Hunger, Cuban edition, p. 139)

One of the most brutal aspects of United States colonial rule in Puerto Rico is the military aspect. Thirteen per cent of the best arable land on the island is occupied by a vast network of military bases with nuclear weapons, which have transformed Puerto Rico into an enormous military arsenal and constitute a permanent threat to the peace and security of its population while at the same time ensuring military occupation as a means of strengthening colonial control over the territory. United States military activity also encompasses the island group of Vieques and Culebra, which are integral to Puerto Rican territory. World opinion has been aware of the criminal conduct of the United States armed forces, which are using the territory of Culebra as a firing range for weapons testing, thus seriously jeopardizing the lives of the people of Culebra, who are engaged in a vigorous battle for the dismantling of the installations established on their island by the United States Navy.

Puerto Rico, as a colonial territory, has no armed forces of its own. Yet Puerto Ricans have been made liable for compulsory military services in the armed forces of the United States. Some 200,000 Puerto Ricans served in the United States Army in the First World War, 400,000 in the Second World War and 40,000 in the aggression against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in 1950. The imposition of compulsory military service on Puerto Ricans is a crude display of colonialism and racism.

The number of Puerto Ricans who have thus been sacrificed to the aggressive interests of United States imperialism is proportionately greater than the figure for citizens of the United States itself. Thus, the newspaper El Mundo reported on 22 May 1967 that Puerto Rican casualties in the war of aggression against Viet Nam are higher than those for 18 states of the United States and the District of Columbia.



Puerto Rican Socialist Party:
Multi Task And Objective

By ANNIE CARPENTER

On Sunday Oct. 3, 1976, the Spanish speaking community sponsored Rafael Anglada, a delegate of the United Nations who spoke in the Lumumba Room at the New Africa House on the campus of UMass Amherst. The honored guest is a member of the Central committee of The Puerto Rican Socialist Party, (P.S.P.), who stated that the P.S.P. is of multi task and objective. Among which at an international level is the submission of the United States government demanding the United States government to give up all power over Puerto Rico. Also order an end put the United Nations special Committee colonalization of Puerto Rico. It was stated the objective was to participate in the colonalization of Puerto Rico, thereby taking advantage of the strength within the party to farther intercolate delegates of the party. The seconded objection is to try to measure the strength of the working class by putting some leaders in a power position to achieve their goal without making work easy for the oppressors. Strength is important to the Puerto Ricans and all other Third World people.

The honored speaker than said that the North American base in Puerto Rico is being used by South America and other international oceanatic electric systems is built up over Puerto Rico and South Africa. This base is called Operation Advokaat and has been condemned by the United Nations.

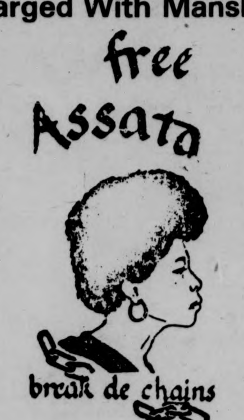
It was said that P.S.P. are victims of harrassment by the United States Government. The majority however is a rising force and is the only force which shows strength. Trade Unions have strengthened and working class leaders for the first time in history since 1910 went on strike and was joined by the student population. Unity of all forces is necessary to have independence. Smaller parties has built up a front in order not to participate in elections. We do not see resources on that front. Throughout history unity has been stressed. Stress points and unity will come.

Interview With Assata
Sister Falsely Charged With Manslaughter

Assata Shakur (Joanne Chesimard) was arrested on May 2, 1973, following an incident on the New Jersey Turnpike which left Assata wounded, Zayd Shakur dead, and Sundiata Acoli (Clark Squire) arrested. In the same incident, a New Jersey State Trooper, Werner Foerster, was killed and Trooper James Harper was wounded. Sundiata and Assata were charged with both homicides (Zayd's as well as Foerster's), asault, and weapons charges. The entire case rests on the testimony of Harper, who admits he turned and ran away from the scene before the fatal shootings.

Severed from Assata's case, Sundiata was railroaded at trial and convicted of all charges despite the absence of direct testimony linking him to the shootings. He is now in the behavior modification unit of Trenton State Prison serving life plust 30 years.

In the three years since her arrest, Assata has been through three separate jury trials on an assortment of other charges, and has been acquitted in all these cases manufactured by the state of New York and the federal government. A fourth charge was dismissed. Denied bail, Assata is being held in maximum security isolation in the Middlesex County, N.J. men's jail awaiting the trial that was scheduled to begin in September. She is under 24-hour a day surveillance, locked in a basement, kept from any form of contact with other prisoners, and has restricted visiting and telephone privileges despite the fact that she has never been covicted of a crime.



Why Assata? As a Black woman, Assata has long been active in the struggle against racism, sexism and injustice in the United States. Now it is she who is being victimized by the state of New Jersey and she needs our help.

The following interview with Assata Shakur conducted during June of 1976 may lend insight into the experience of a revolutionary Black woman.

Q. Where were you born?

A. I was born in New York City but I spent my early childhood in Wilmington, N.C. with my grandparents. In New York my grandmother did piece work in a garment factory and my grandfather worked in the Navy Yard until they finally had enough money to go back down south and open a business. They took me with them; that was around 1950.

Q. What was it like living in the south?

A. At that time the south was completely segregated. I went to a segregated school and white people, you know, they were like creatures from another planet or something. They didn't really play much part in our lives. My grandmother's father, who was a Cherokee Indian, had left her some land on the ocean, so my grandparents opened a business on the beach. The business did pretty good because there were so few 'colored' beaches in N.C. that many Black people had to go to South Carolina just to see the ocean.

Everyday, driving down to the beach where we worked, we would pass this beautiful park that had children's zoo. And every day I would beg my grandmother to take me there. She was always telling me she would take me someday, but someday never came. I used to think that she was the meanest woman on earth until one day with the strangest look on her face, she told me that we were too Black, that we weren't allowed in no zoo.

Q. What made you become a revolutionary?

A. Everything! When I was about 8 or 9 my grandparents told me that I was going to New York to live with my mother. They said that I would be able to get a 'good' education up north and to my grandparents education meant freedom. I was sad to leave my grandparents but I was happy about going to N.Y. because everybody down south thought N.Y. was big stuff. After I got over the big buildings and subways, I couldn't believe it, N.Y. was the ugliest place I'd ever seen. It looked so old, I would sit in a room and wonder how many people had died there. It was hard and cold and I had never seen people so miserable and so hopeless. Anyway, I went to school and they put me in an all white class with a white teacher. Everytime I opened my mouth the whole class would fall out laughing at my accent and it seemed to me that the minute I walked into te classroom the whole class and the teacher too decided I just had to be dumb.

Like growing up in N.Y. was a long series of disillusionments. Even though we were supposed to be 'middle class,' we had one foot in the grocery store and the other in the pawn shop. A lot of our neighbors who had houses were working two and three jobs just to pay the mortgage. You know, it just seemed like everybody was growing up and going nowhere. Everytime I turned around I was hearing that so-and-so was strung out, so-and-so was in jail, so-and-so went to Nam, so-and-so od'd and so-and-so got shot in the head. You hear it long enough and you get used to it. You come to understand life, his life, her life, your life, anybody's life, doesn't mean anything if you are Black in amerika.

I dropped out of high school because I hated it and even though I didn't understand why, I always had the feeling that somehow, somebody was trying to make me kiss ass. I had the feeling that something was choking me, you know? I felt it but I couldn't put my finger on what it was. Later on, after I had worked on all kinds of slave-paying jobs I got tired of having my labor exploited and decided to go to college.

I took a G.E.D. and enrolled in Manhattan Community College. There was this brother who came up to me and asked me to come to this meeting of the Society of the Golden Drums, it was the Black Student organization. I met a lot of sistas and brothas who were into Black history and culture and who were talking about freedom for Black people. I took to them like a fish takes to water. I started reading everything I could get my hands on about Black history, culture and then politics and ideology. It was like being born again. Everything started falling together and for the first time in my life I had a clear understanding of the world I lived in. I began to see how the history of Black people has been shaped by racism, capitalism, and political oppression. I began to see this country as the imperialistic octopus it is and to understand that this system cannot be improved — it must be destroyed and replaced by a complete change, a revolution. It was around then that I decided that the most important thing in life for me was to struggle for the liberation of Black people and all oppressed people, to struggle against all forms of racism, capitalism, imperialism, sexism, and oppression.

Q. What do you think your chances are of getting a fair trial in New Jersey?

A. A lot of people come up and ask me, "Well, you've been acquitted three times. Doosn't that prove that the system works?" I tell them that if there was such a thing as justice I wouldn't have been on trial in the first place, I'd be home taking care of my baby. And it's true. I've always known that I am innocent, and so, I believe, has the government. They're not trying to railroad me because they think I'm a criminal, they're trying to railroad me because they think that I'm a revolutionary and that poses a threat to them because I might organize and educate other people. The government didn't have anything to do with acquitting me. Thirty-six people acquitted me, people who were not fooled by a lot of newspaper stories and hysteria and accusations. I know that if I get a fair jury that is not racist, that is not ignorant of the dishonesty of the police and FBI, a jury hip to what is going on in this country, I will be acquitted again. But I also know that the government is doing everything into power to see that doesn't happen. And I know that there is nothing that they wouldn't stoop to.

Q. What are the conditions like, here at this jail?

A. Confining. No seriously, you know that this is a men's prison and that I'm the only woman that's ever been in this jail. I have no bail and bail has constantly been denied even though bail is supposed to be a right. I am in a cell down in the basement where you can't tell day from night. I am in solitary confinement with no television, no one to talk to, no recreation, no fresh air. There is a female guard who sits outside my cell and watches me 24 hours a day. Besides my visits which are twice a week for a half hour, I have the ants, the centipedes and sometimes the radio for company. It's a bad scene, and no other woman in this country has ever been treated like this.

Q. Do you see any connection between yourself and Susan Saxe?

A. Of course. Anybody who is struggling against racism, sexism, capitalism and imperialism is truly a friend of mine. I think that it's important for people to support Susan Saxe because she has clearly shown that she is dedicated to struggling for the liberation of all people.

Q. What do you have to say to your sisters and brothers?

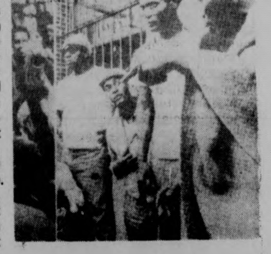
A. Mainly to stay strong, keep struggling and I love you. I have unending faith in the people and in our ability to transform this country into a real people's government. In order to do that we have got to come together. In order to come together we have got to have unity. In order to have unity we have got to study hard, work hard, and struggle to embrace principles that are truly opposed to all forms of oppression. Only clear and correct thinking can bring about clear and correct actions. And only complete dedication can bring about complete victory. We have a long road ahead of us, but hey, what's more important than freedom?

Assata Shakur-Joanne Chesimard, like countless other Black activists, has been a victim of lies and rame-ups over the past five years. She has the object of a massive police dragnet although she had absolutely not criminal record. Since her arrest on the New Jersey Turnpike on May 2, 1973, Assata Shakur has been tried on three different cases and acquitted each time. A fourth charge was dismissed. The State of New Jersey is now charging her in the death of a state trooper and one of her own comrades, Zayd Malik Shakur, despite the flimsiest possible case. Sundiata Acoli-Clark Squire, who was indicted on the same case, was railroaded at trial and is now at Trenton State Prison in the Management Control Unit (behavior modification), sentneced to life plus 30 years. A similar fate awaits Assata Shakur if she is convicted.

Convicted of no crime yet held without bail, Assata Shakur is already experiencing extraordinary detention conditions. She is imprisoned in Middlesex County Jail — an all men's facility — where she is the only woman. She is kept in isolation in the basement under 24-hour surveillance.

Brothers and Sisters and all those who are concerned with radicating injustice pllase consolidate with us to free Assata. We cannot afford to let apathy allow us to let one incident slip by. There is a petition on the desk in the lobby at New Africa House. Sign the petition to free Assata.



Attica 1976

By ANNIE CARPENTER

A gathering of 175 people were at Mahar Auditorium on Wednesday October 6, 1976 at 7:30 p.m. to hear the speaking of Big Black and Dr. John Bracy.

Dr. Bracy, who is an Afro-Am professor here at U. Mass. began the night by thanking the people, the forming committees, and support groups for their unity in reference to the struggle of Creaman and Earl. He explained that the case of Gethers and Brown mark a local manifestation of racism where criminals walk the streets free and the innocent are found guilty and stripped of freedom just for being innocent and black.

At this point Dr. Bracy, talked on what was to be his Main Theme and message to the people. He warned us all to become aware of the similarities of the struggle today with the struggle as it existed in the 1960's. Then as now our leaders, calling for change, post a threat to the system and are being shot and jailed for long periods of time for petty crimes.

He continued by calling us to take control over own lives and to bring change in society. He stated that a greater strategy for the defense committee is needed because the next injustice may be done to you. He concluded by reminding us that we must think of ourself as one people, with one cause, fighting in the same struggle. We should not turn our backs on our brother because he is different. The struggle is for freedom not for some, but for all, and for this we must have unity.

The next speaker was Big Black who was a political prisoner of Attica in 1971 and was instrumental in forming a unified force for rights and dignity within the prison system. His opening words were, "mentally and spiritually we have always been together." He called for us to study ourselves and our role within the system and to be aware that only certain people go to prison; this is the oppressive plan of the system.

One of his most stressed points was that to create a balance within the society that liberation for one group must also mean liberation for the other groups. We can not see who we are by looking at another, we must look to self for knowledge of self. Believe it or not everything is political and will never change if you just sleep, dream, and do nothing else, claimed Big Black. We must understand that the Supreme Court is political and is a part of the conspiracy as shown by the fact that 97 per cent of all prisoners in the United States are black.

He went on to state that we all have the same problem and together we have got to struggle to win. He says that if you are not black you will not understand black and that we must try to help each other to understand.

Mr. Black questioned if the people know what happened to Gethers and Brown, and what do we plant do to about it. Getting down to basics we need to concentrate and focus on these two brothers and to try to come up with some stategy to help these two prisoners since all prisoners are Political prisoners. He felt that we should try to establish some kind of maximum security communication from behind the walls because with such contact we can educate those outside of the wall. We have to get communication to have unity and the experience of Attica 1971 shows that people can be unified. Next Wednesday at the New Africa House a petition campaign will be set upon getting and keeping in touch with prisoners, community, national, and statewide.

Mr. Black's closing statement was, "We have got to get together, feel each other, and understand each others problems. Let our energy flow together.

Muhammad Adil:
Frame-up in Philadelphia

On August 17, 1976, Judge Levy Anderson unjustly sentenced Bro. Muhammed Adil Eugene Sojourner to 4¼ to 8 years in prison.

When the over 100 people, including character witnesses, responded to this outrageous act against the demands of the Black Community to free Muhammad of all false charges, Anderson put everyone out of the courtroom. Immediately, under the banner of "The Community Stands With Bro. Muhammad", the people began chanting and demonstrating in the hallway. Dozens of policemen with dogs came into the hall. At least one person was bitten.

The demonstration moved into the City Hall Courtyard where policemen on horseback moved to intimidate the people. Passers-by on their way from work moved to support the demonstrators resulting in the policemen's retreat. The demonstration moved to the East side of City Hall where they stayed for an hour until moving to Richard Allen Community where Brothers and Sisters began informing the other residents of what had happened and raising funds for Muhammad's bail. It is believed that the demonstration led to him being granted appeal bail. He was released that same night.

The Afrikan People's Party thanks everyone who supported Muhammad's case both physically and financially. We will be fighting the appeal and will continue to inform you of progress. We appreciate your further involvement in this struggle against political repression against Black people.

For further information you can call (215) 457-1574 or write: Afrikan People's Party, c-o Carol Headley, P.O. Box 25412, Phila., Pa 19140. Clark Terry and Count Basie's Band Concert Review

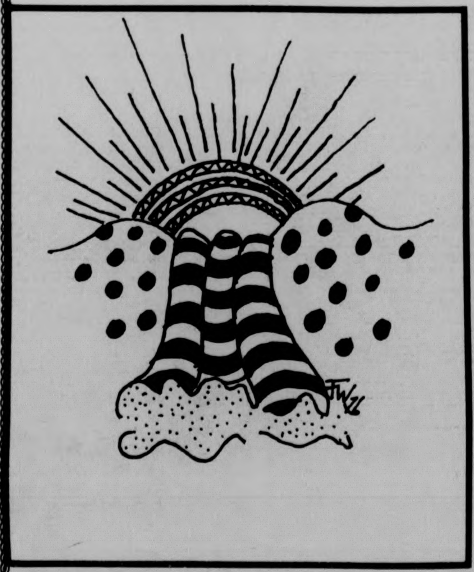
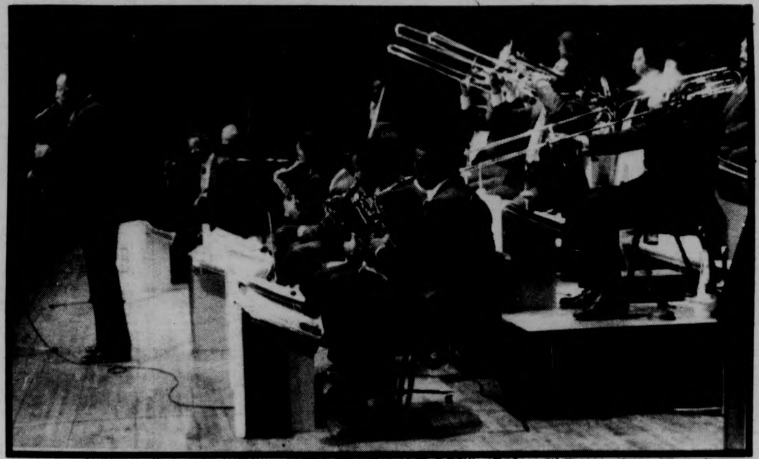
Count Basie, shaper of a great jazz tradition since 1937.





By ANNIE CARPENTER

Mellow stabbing were the sounds that echoed off the walls at the Fine Arts Center Friday night starting at 8:00 p.m., Sept. 29, 1976.

Clark Terry and Count Basies sixteen piece band were the source of the out flow. A diffinate vision of magic, an unpredictable whipping touching the minds and souls of all while offering food for the spirit leaving the assembly of listeners and spectators submissive to its will. To points of near maddness the crowd applauded to a taper of patting feet and nodding heads.

Fathers of jazz masters of the art, Clark Terry and Count Basies Band hooked up as one on time with time. Upon the close of the second set. The crowd experienced sorrow when the masters indicated that they could not share anymore at that time. The show ended at 10 p.m., but was left on the lips of many.

Count Basie has had a fantastic career. He has traveled extensively at home and abroad. Basie says "for me, simplicity has always seemed right." Basie's music is by no means simple, its ready.

Ultimate shades of Blackness floated on the night air...encompassed our bodies...bloomed in our minds. The beauty and majesty of Leontyne Price was experienced by a capacity crowd at the Fine Arts Center Auditorium on Wednesday night, September 29, 1976.

Ms. Price vitalized music ranging in scope from Scarlatti to Nathaniel Dett. Caught in the magical spell woven by her voice, the audience demanded and received four encores, consisting of three well known Arias and a spiritual.

Swine flu vaccine temporarily shelved

PITTSBURGH [Compiled from Wires] — The deaths of three elderly Pennsylvania residents given swine flu shots has caused at least eleven states to halt all immunizations Tuesday, while Massachusetts shelved some of their vaccine.

Massachusetts health officials ordered 50,000 doses of swine flu vaccine from the same lot distributed in Pennsylvania shelved until the reasons for deaths in that state are known.

Dr. Jonathan Fielding, Massachusetts Commissioner of Public Health, said the 50,000 doses were among 775,600 distributed in Massachusetts.

According to preliminary findings by the federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, the deaths of the three persons in Pittsburth after they received swine flu inoculations was due to ordinary heart attacks and not the vaccine.

Four storage depots and three local boards of health have been asked "not to distribute it until the Pennsylvania situation is better defined," Fielding said.

At least 15 other states pressed ahead following the deaths of the two women and one man, who had been vaccinated within hours of each other at the same neighborhood clinic.

According to Pennsylvania's Allegheny County Coroner Cyril H. Wecht, the two women and a man who died were all in their seventies and had histories of heart or lung problems. Their deaths could have

Socialists urge abstention

"... and that's why socialism can never come to the ballot!" Professor Michael Eagan spoke on the effects of creative abstention in the upcoming Presidential election. (Staff photo by Marilyn Mankowsky)

By CLIFF SKIBINSKY
Collegian Staff

It has been estimated that as much as 60 per cent of the US electorate may not go to the polls Nov. 2. While many political analysts bewail this lack of enthusiasm, at least one political organization on campus, the International Socialists (IS), is urging "creative abstention" from the presidential election because neither party is offering a candidate who supports "workers' interests".

About 13 persons gathered last night to hear Michael Egan of the UMass English department and Marilyn Danton, National Education Officer of the IS, which claims to represent "the best of Lenin, Marx and Trotsky", attack the political system in terms of Marxist-Leninist theory as "the best possible political shell for capitalism."

Egan claimed that capitalism needs democratic forms of government because "with nominal political equality, power falls into the hands of those with economic power." He cited the "vast amounts of cash" which an individual needs to run for office, and said that if the money was not held privately, as in the case of the Kennedy family, it must be obtained from "millionnaires or corporations."

Wealth, said Egan, has access to the centers of power, and, therefore, wealth controls the government. Because the press and media are also controlled by the wealthy, the system's injustices are rarely exposed, he added.

It would be impossible, said Egan, for "progressives" to ever elect a socialist government. He cited the inability of Fred Harris to win a presidential primary. If a socialist were elected by some miracle, "the rules of bourgeoise democracy would be off," and the capitalists would resort to fascism to support their interests.

"No matter who wins the election, the conservatives stay in power," said Egan, "We can have any government we want as long as it supports capitalism."

In light of this situation, said Egan, it is clear that "Socialism cannot come from a ballot box." There is not "a thin dime's difference" between Ford and Carter.

While most people realize that the Republican party is the party of wealth, said Egan, many do not know that the Democrats are also backed and controlled by bankers and industrialists. Statements in the Democratic Platform citing the needs of workers, and decrying the inequality of wealth are merely "court hypocracy" said Egan. America really has a "one party system with two wings, ranging from Regan to Harris," he said.

Danton also attacked the Democratic party, saying that its image as the "party of the little man" is a myth. Democratic administrations have merely rubber stamped reforms brought about by grass-roots organization of workers, as in the case of the anti-war and civil rights movements, he said.

The Democratic party also tempers ideals to obtain votes, said Danton. She said that United Auto Workers President Leonard Woodcock urged Jimmy Carter to stay away from the recent Ford strike because of a possible loss of votes for Carter. Woodcock may join a Carter cabinet if Carter is elected, she added.

In addition, liberal candidates are forced to bargain away their effectiveness, because they need the support of conservatives like Chicago's Mayor Richard Daley to succeed in the patronage-ridden political system.

"That's the way it works all down the line. There is no way to reform the Democratic party. Carter won't do anything different," said Danton.

Because neither candidate is supporting the interests of the working people of the country, workers should abstain from voting and should begin building a "real labor party, a revolutionary party," said Egan.

Present "fringe" parties such as the American Communist party and the Socialist Workers' party have sold out to the capitalists, he said, and, in any case, cannot represent workers because they spend their time promoting candidates rather than organizing on the grass-roots level.

Egan said that the IS concentrates its work in the industrial centers of the nation, including Springfield and Holyoke. It is working to nurture the "small but growing move" to the political left. Although at present there is a rightward swing in political opinion, the inability of the existing system to solve the problems of the American people will turn the populace to the IS and its ideals, he said. They will realize that "only Marxists can explain the economic crisis."

Washington resident hit by bottle throwing charge

By MICHAEL SIMONS
and ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

A UMass student yesterday pleaded not guilty in Hampshire County District court to charges by the campus police that he threw a bottle from a 13th floor window of Washington Tower in Southwest on Monday night.

Brian G. Turner, an 18-year-old freshman chemical engineering major from South Yarmouth, Mass., was arrested by Officer Eliot Kabachnick shortly after a bottle landed in the parking lot adjacent to the building.

Turner lives in room 1309.

The bottle came out of the south side of the dorm and barely missed the back windshield of a blue 1966 Chevrolet owned by Robert W. Welsh, who also lives in Washington Tower.

The incident was seen at about 6:30 p.m. by Institutional Protection Man James Morton, a security guard, who radioed the campus police. A cruiser was dispatched to the dorm, according to police Captain Robert Joyce.

Turner was taken to the UMass police station where he was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon and disorderly conduct.

Turner was then transferred to the Amherst police station and detained until bail was posted at $210. The amount was paid by residents of the 13th floor, along with several other friends.

He was then released and was back in his room by 11 p.m. that evening.

Turner's hearing will be Oct. 26 in the district court in Northampton.

Turner admits to leaning out the window at the time the bottle dropped and said that he heard something smash down below.

Turner said that he had taken the screen off his window and was leaning out to close the window because the mechanism that opens and closes the window from the inside was broken.

Turner was alone in the room at the time of the incident.

"We are recommending to the dean of students that he remove this student from the University," Captain Joyce said.

Dean of Students William F. Field yesterday said he has met with Turner's parents and is now awaiting a report from the Southwest Student Affairs office before acting on Joyce's recommendation.

Field said that the Southwest staff put together the information that resulted in the suspension of David McDonough, of Washington Tower, after he allegedly threw a cinderblock from the ninth floor lounge of the building in the early morning hours of Sept. 11.

University officials said McDonough's suspension may last for one semester or carry through the full year.

Other recent incidents include a large number of bottles dropped from the building along with light bulbs and a 10 pound weight, which smashed through the windshield of a car parked below the dorm.

In another incident, UMass student Steven Rodman was momentarily knocked unconscious and spent three days in the infirmary after being hit on the head by a roll of toilet paper that dropped from Kennedy Tower.

Assistant dean to 'sell' UMass bilingual program

By DEBORAH EDWARDS
Collegian Staff

A newly-appointed assistant dean of admissions will soon be touring the state's public and private high schools in an effort to make Spanish and Portuguese speaking students aware of the bilingual programs offered at UMass.

Juan P. Caban, appointed to the post last spring, was a professor in the School of Education here.

Caban, in an interview yesterday, said he feels one of his major goals is to try to get a larger pool of applicants by making the UMass program known more statewide.

"The bilingual program," Caban said, "offers tutoring for any subject, personal counseling and a resource center which contains all of the books required" in UMass courses, for those students who cannot afford to purchase books.

According to Caban, the programs are open to students who speak Spanish or Portuguese as a first language, and use English as a second language. The applicants must be American citizens, and while most students enrolled in the programs are from Massachusetts, five per cent are accepted from out-of-state.

Caban said that entrance into the bilingual programs is not based solely on academic excellence. He said some students, who have not performed well in high school, might have a very high potential.

He said most bilingual students here have a lower level of verbal understanding in English, but that this was not always true.

"Some bilingual students are outstanding in every respect," he said.

"Bilingual students tend to cling to their linguistic and cultural heritages," said Caban. He said the programs were to help motivate students to do well and to help them in selecting the proper subjects for their major.

Caban said one obstacle he must face in his drive for more applicants, is that "many families don't have the experience of anyone in their family having ever been to college, so we encourage them to visit and get to know the University. Once they are here, and get familiarized with the program, they are more receptive to the idea."

He also said that funding has been a problem, because the programs "take a lot of money."

Caban was in Brazil over the summer teaching multi-national science and math in the graduate program at the State University of Capinas.

Resource center gets SW funds

By BARBARA HOFFMAN

The Southwest Assembly (SWA) last night voted in favor of allocating $500 toward a racism and sexism resource center in John Quincy Adams Upper, in accordance with the Finance committee's recommendation and the Civil Liberties committee finding that JQA "has a viable and ongoing program" in combatting racism and sexism.

An amendment that would have reduced the grant by $150 was defeated earlier that evening. Speaking against that amendment, JQA representative Mary Hart said; "We could make a small dent, but that wouldn't get (the resource center) off the ground ... We're not trying to build a library, but our dorm has made an all-out effort to build a program."

In other business last night the Finance committee recommendation that Southwest purchase one or two pages of the Collegian each week, rather than allocate $3000 for an area newspaper, was tabled for a week's consideration.

The assembly unanimously passed a resolution allocating $200 in a loan-grant to the Southwest Center for the Performing Arts for it sproduction of "Lenny" this November.

In the election for communications coordinator, freshperson Mark Cavanaugh of Kennedy defeated P.J. Prokop, a senior from Crampton, by a vote of 15-11.

In response to last week's request by Cance for help in starting that dorm's racism and sexism programs, President Chris Durkin said the Southwest Women's Center, the Men's Center, and the Center for Racial Understanding have all agreed to set up workshops there.

Under the Civil Liberties committee's guidelines, four such workshops or cultural events must be sponsored by each house in order for it to become eligible for Southwest funding.

Women's studies are unique

By DIANE GAMRECKI
Collegian Staff

In recent years there has been a trend on college campuses toward specific job preparation rather than the traditional liberal arts background. Tough economic conditions have fostered a search for possible majors that are useful because of their extreme flexibility.

A promising option for some people is the field of Women's Studies, an option available on the UMass campus.

Women's Studies assists job hunters in diverse areas such as counseling, law, publishing, business and in any profession where sensitivity to sexism is an asset, according to Cathy Portuges, coordinator of the Women's Studies program.

At UMass it is possible to major in Women's Studies, in conjunction with the Bachelors Degree in Individual Concentration program (BDIC), or earn a certificate equivalent to a minor concentration, she said.

In a cramped office in Goodell, liberally decorated with feminist memorabilia, five women assist Portuges in the organization of the program.

Having been the coordinator since its inception three years ago, Portuese has seen the necessity to "integrate consciousness of sexism into the mainstream of education."

Recent social change and a growing awareness of sexism have shown the necessity for a new way of thinking. According to Portuges, "innovation responds to the need to examine knowledge from a deeper point of view."

It is with this in mind that Portuges and staff seek to work with faculty encompassing a wide variety of disciplines available in the five-college community.

Each semester they put together a booklet collating courses of study that treat women seriously in relation to topics including history, sociology, literature and others.

Interest in the field is increasing, as attested to by class enrollment and attendance at special events, such as the colloq series last spring on "Fantasy and the Female: An Interdisciplinary Exploration."

A real problem that needs to be addressed, says Portuges, is the shortage of courses and faculty due to the retrenched state of the economy. There is a need for more advanced courses to balance those taught at the introductory level.

There is evidence, however, that the UMass program is achieving its goals.

The Feminist Press, located at the State University of New York (SUNY) in Old Westbury, has chosen UMass to be investigated for its "function as a strategy for changing the mainstream of curriculum", among other things.

The Feminist Press has been designated by the Advisory Council on Women's Educational Programs, created under the Women's Educational Equity Act of 1974, to research the role of women's studies curricula across the country.

With the recent upsurge of opportunities for women, academic study appears to be a viable alternative, both here at UMass and nationally.

"What may look like tokenism is often the result of long years of work, and it can be frustrating," but, Portuges asserts, "the possibilities are enormous."

OHAG overspends

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

The Orchard Hill Area Government passed the current school year budget of $12,735 last night, $1700 more than they have been allocated by the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The budget, which has taken five weeks to pass, has grown from its original proposal of $11,035, due to an allotment of $915 for various programs and $785 added for a film series, music series and program support.

OHAG officials have not yet secured the additional money they need to pay all of the programs they have allocated for. One of the avenues open to them is to request the additional funds from Orchard Hill's residential college funds, provided by the University.

The group also voted to let anyone interested in setting up a radio station on Orchard Hill to go ahead with the project. Programs would include music, advertisements and a space for people from various interest groups on the hill to express their feelings.

OHAG had previously voted to sell the radio equipment, which was purchased last year. Up until now the station has never been set up.

Debbie Love, president of OHAG, expressed a desire for anyone with strong feelings about the problems which occurred between Third World representatives and the body of OHAG over their program's budget allotment, to join a committee being set up by O.C. Bobby Daniels to "study the group dynamics" and look at the problem "from a system analysis viewpoint."

Ed School fair tomorrow

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

Eighteen different programs offered by the School of Education here will be on display tomorrow at the school's second program fair.

Descriptions and applications for each program, and directors of the programs will be available for consultation by students at the fair, which will be held from noon to 4 p.m. at the main lobby of Hills.

Michael G. Schwartz, director of Undergraduate and Teacher Education Advising at the School of Ed, said any student interested in elementary, secondary or bilingual teaching, agricultural or vocational teaching, human services, juvenile justice and corrections, or the problems of urban schools, can find some program to interest them at the fair.

He said the applications will be available as preparatory measures for interviews for admittance into the programs. The interviewing will begin Oct. 25, he said.

Schwartz said not only will students interested in finding out more about these programs be able to find out about them, but also they can talk to various teachers in the Ed School and get information to contact the teachers for further information at a later date.

The programs run from two to five semesters in length, and are geared to freshpersons who hare even remotely considering the possibility of teaching, and to sophomores and juniors who would want to actually start a program next semester or the semester after.

S.U.B. bear stolen by 'hunters'

By TERESA HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

The bear statue located above the door on the inside of the main entrance to the Student Union Building is missing, allegedly stolen over the weekend.

The Collegian received an anonymous phone call from a person who said he witnessed the abduction of the bear Saturday night.

The person said he was walking outside of the Student Union late Saturday night when two "pretty big" males ran by him carrying the bear.

He said they said something about the bear being "really hard to take down" because it was bolted to the entrance frame.

The caller said they then carried the bear to the parking lot behind Machmer Hall opposite the Student Union, and put it into a station wagon.

The caller said he wouldn't give his name or report the incident to the police because he wanted to wait three days to see if the bear was returned before he took any action.

The UMass Dept. of Public Safety would not confirm nor deny whether they were investigating the disappearance of the bear.

The bear was a gift of Hokkaido University in Japan and was presented as a symbol of our friendship with the University.

Former UMass President Jean Paul Mather presented the bear to the UMass community at dedication ceremonies for the then-new Student Union in January, 1957.

McColgan—Conte debate fading

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

While First District Democratic Congressional candidate Edward A. McColgan increased his insistence that incumbent Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield) debate him, the possibilities of the debate actually occurring appear dim.

For the record, Conte has stated to reporters that he cannot find time to debate McColgan in the three and a half weeks remaining before election day — a point that McColgan has aggressively attacked Conte on.

Sources close to the Conte campaign, however, say that Conte is purposely ignoring his foe, adhering to an old political strategy of an incumbent ignoring his opposition.

Sources said that Conte believes that if he were to debate McColgan, he would stand to damage himself and help the challenger — who still is faced with a name recognition problem. The source asked rhetorically, "Why should he (Conte) carry McColgan on his back?"

McColgan challenged Conte to debate in each of the four counties in the first district in a telegram sent more than a week ago. McColgan campaign director Matt Pitoniak said yesterday that no response to the challenge has yet been received.

In a statement released late last week, McColgan stated. "Could it be that Conte is avoiding giving me an answer because he is afraid to face a public forum where there is no place to duck hard questions."

McColgan said, "For a congressman who prides himself in promptness in answering constituent mail, it seems rather strange that this particular telegram goes unanswered."

Conte, who had been in Washington until Congress adjourned two weeks ago, has started to stump full time in the district. He said Friday, before a meeting of the Mt. Holyoke College Republican Club, that he expected to visit UMass before the Nov. 2 election day. He also said that he will be campaigning full time until then.

In his remarks to the members of the Republican Club, Conte reviewed what he called his "solid record" of leadership in the congress, and also took time to attack McColgan.

He accused the Democrat of "distorting" his record in congress, and said that McColgan campaigned for congress while still serving as director of the Massachusetts Bicentennial Commission.

Pitoniak yesterday denied that McColgan used the Bicentennial post for political gain.

Conte pointed out to the roughly 20 women in attendance that he was a co-sponsor of the Equal Rights amendment to the United Stated Constitution. He also pointed out that he was in favor of expanding the GI Bill to afford veterans "more educational options."

N. Amherst church to survey community

By CASSIE ECKHOF
Collegian Staff

Beginning in February the North Amherst Congregational Church is going to be sponsoring a lot more than the traditional raffles and bingo games.

As part of an independent study, Edward H. Newcomb, a classical honors major with a concentration in religion, is organizing a church-community study geared at meeting the needs of the community.

Starting this Thursday, Newcomb, a UMass senior, will be taking a questionnaire he has formulated, door to door throughout the Puffton Village apartment complex. By doing this, Newcomb said he hoped to get an idea of how the church can better meet the needs of the community.

Says Newcomb, "The Puffton community is not very active in the church because the church is not meeting community needs."

The questionnaire must be taken by 97 Puffton residents for an adequate representation, he said. It includes questions pertaining to family history, basic personal data and feelings about the church and how it relates to community service.

There are relevant contemporary issues the church needs to deal with, says Newcomb. Old concepts and convictions are still hanging on, he said.

"The church has become more traditional, and thus more oblivious to the needs of society." People have no place to turn to, he says, and this questionnaire will help cite the needs of the people.

Newcomb says he wants to establish a place where these people can turn. Religious education just scratches the surface of the needs of the community, and Newcomb says he also wants the church to sponsor counseling and services for people having marital problems, single parents, and persons with financial difficulties.

The action starts in February after the results of the questionnaire are interpreted. Newcomb will then implement programs indicated by the returns.

"This is a ground breaking thing. Other churches may use surveys next year," Newcomb said.

"All my life I have been really into people," he said. This is one of the reasons Newcomb has decided to go into the ministry of the United Church of Christ, he said. He sees this project as "practical experience" for the field.

"Working with people is very hard and very trying, yet very rewarding," says Newcomb. "But if you can help one person, it's worth it."

Evaluation forms useful

By BETH LEFEBVRE
Collegian Staff

By this point in the semester, many students are perhaps wondering what has become of those course evaluation forms they filled out last spring, and if any of their professors' teaching skills have ever been improved on the basis of what they wrote.

But there is an organization on campus which reviews these forms and actually teaches professors how to teach.

The Center for Instructional Resources and Improvement, formed in 1972 in response to a Faculty Senate mandate that all courses be evaluated each semester, offers services to improve teaching skills to professors, associate professors and teaching assistants.

After the center merged with the Teaching Improvement Organization in 1973, they gained their present director Sheryl Reichman, of the School of Education.

In 1975, the center merged again, this time with the Clinic to Improve University Teaching, under a two-year K.W. Kellogg Foundation grant. Presently they have a staff of 18, working with a budget of $50,000.

These changes caused the major focus of the organization to shift from its original function of evaluating courses, a job now done by departments, to improving teachers and teaching skills at the University.

The center still does the paperwork for the University Blue forms, or evaluation forms, but it is left up to departmental discretion what to do with the forms. Sometimes they are used in evaluating tenure cases, and at other times are merely filed away.

New 'Mr. Greek' crowned tonight

By STEVEN J. POLANSKY
Collegian Staff

Competition tonight will decide who will be the next "Mr. Greek".

Nine men from area fraternities will be on hand tonight at 7:30 as Sigma Delta Tau sorority presents the third annual "Mr. Greek" contest. The contest was conceived as entertainment for a rush party.

Amy Rubin, president of the Amherst Chapter of Sigma Delta Tau, said, "Two years ago, Barbara Dordick, the rush chairperson, dreamed up the idea of having this type of a contest. That first year, it was such a success, that we knew we had a good thing."

The contestants will arrive tonight to dress and relax while they await judging during the rush party. Each contestant will be allowed two members of his house to accompany him lending moral support. With the rushees as judges, each man will sing a song of his choice and will be asked to answer some questions.

They will be judged on this criteria, and maybe on their legs and good looks, too, as the rushees vote by secret ballot, Rubin said.

The winner will receive a six-pack of his favorite beer, a mug, a specially made crown and a banner to hang in his house. Also included in the prizes is the honor of joining the winners of the last two years competition, Dorian Wyman of Kappa Sig, the 1975 winner, and Keith Weeman, Beta Phi, '74.

June Kaplan and Judy Bearak rush co-chairpersons, added that all University women are invited. Sigma Delta Tau is at 409 N. Pleasant St.

HONG KONG: A Chinese Government spokesman refused yesterday to respond to questions about reports that Chiang Ching, widow of Mao Tse-tung, has been arrested for plotting to seize power. Although there has been no hard evidence to support the reports of her arrest, diplomats and China analysts in Peking and here said the lack of an official denial gave credence to the report. (UPI)

China names leader

HONG KONG (UPI) — China confirmed yesterday the appointment of Hua Kuo-feng as the new chairman of China's Communist party and the successor to Mao Tse-tung as the leader of one-fourth of all mankind.

The government spokesman who told reporters in Peking Hua's position was definite would not discuss a reported purge against Mao's widow, Chiang Ching, and three other high officials from the radical, ultraleftist branch of the Communist party known as the "Shanghai Mafia."

But the noncommital nature of the reply lent credence to Western and Communist news reports from Peking that the four radicals were arrested last week for plotting a power seizure after Mao's death Sept. 9.

Hua's accession to power and the radical purge may mean a sharp shift in China's policies, but the significance of the developments probably will not be known for months.

"The Chinese are very satisfied with the development of events," the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug said in a dispatch from Peking.

Tanjug also reported the Chinese army increased its patrols in Peking's main square, on the capital's principal streets and in front of office buildings.

The West German news agency Deutsche Press Agentur said units of the Peking Guard Regiment drilled outside Peking's "Great Hall of the People" and "simulated target shooting with light machine guns." Such military exercises are not unusual in Peking, but DPA said observers thought the drill could be a show of force in view of the rumors of widespread leadership changes.

Despite the government spokesman's confirmation of Hua's appointment as party chairman, official Chinese news dispatches still referred to him official as premier and "head" of the party. Tanjug said a communique will be published on changes in China's leadership, but officials in Peking would not say when it would appear.

Ford admits 'blunder' in last week's debate

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday made his first formal admission of a "mistake" in last week's debate with Jimmy Carter and said "the countries of East Europe are of course, dominated by the Soviet Union."

"I did not express myself clearly; I admit it," Ford told a group of ethnic leaders at the White House, "...The original mistake was mine."

Ford's reference was to his statement last Wednesday that Poland and other East European nations were not Soviet dominated. Carter has charged it was "a disgrace to our country" and that the President was "brainwashed" by the Communists.

Since Wednesday Ford has issued "clarifications" in which he described the original remark as a misunderstanding and that his wording could have been more precise. His Tuesday statement was his first outright admission it was a mistake.

The delay was thought to have stemmed from reluctance on Ford's part to appear in the same light as Democratic presidential nominee Carter, whom he has described as "making mistakes one day and apologizing the next" in campaign statements.

Ford also took advantage of the meeting with leaders from East European groups, many of whom are members of the Ethnic Affairs Committee in his campaign organization, to criticize Carter as "a man who seeks to lift himself up to the White House by running down the reputation of the United States."

Wearing a button on his lapel which spelled "Ford" in Ukranian, the President read a formal statement to the gathering in which he said he wanted to spell out "precisely what I believe:

"First, the countries of East Europe are, of course, dominated by the Soviet Union. Were it not for the presence of more than 30 Russian divisions there now, the countries of Eastern Europe would long have achieved their freedom.

"Second, the United States never has, does not now and never will recognize, accept or acquiesce in the Soviet domination of Eastern Europe.

"Third, the peoples of Eastern Europe yearn for freedom; while their countries may be physically dominated their spirit is not. Their spirit has never been broken and never will be. And someday they will be free."

Ford said that "any man who seeks to persuade you that I think otherwise is engaging in deceit and distortion." He said he stands on his record of 30 years in the House, and as vice president and President.

Court upholds Watergate convictions

(UPI) — An attorney for former White House aide John Ehrlichman said yesterday he would "absolutely" take an Appeals Court decision upholding his Watergate conviction to the Supreme Court.

The convictions and eight-year jail terms given to Ehrlichman, former Attorney Genral John Mitchell and former White House Chief of Staff H.R. Haldeman were upheld by the court. The three men themselves could not be reached.

Andrew Hall, Ehrlichman's lawyer, said in Miami that, "We think the decision is wrong. We believe Mr. Ehrlichman's rights were denied and most significantly, he was not afforded the testimony of former President Nixon, the person most integrally involved with Watergate. We wanted him more than anybody."

William Hundley, a lawyer for Mitchell, said "Naturally we are disappointed. We will petition the Supreme Court. I'm anxious to read the opinion."

Spillage possible for New England

WASHINGTON [UPI] — There's a 52 per cent chance at least one major oil spill will reach a beach or recreation area during offshore drilling near the New England coast, a government study said yesterday.

There's an 89 per cent chance at least one big spill — of 1,000 barrels or more — will occur during the 25-year life of the offshore oil field, it said. Most likely, there will be two.

And, even if there were no major ones, the analysis predicts all the oil from smaller spills reaching Nantucket, Mass., over a quarter century would add up to somewhere between 3.5 ounces to 2.2 pounds per yard of beach.

Since the closest tract is 40 miles offshore, experts figure it would take the average spill a month to wash ashore. Thus it is likely most of the oil would disperse and reach beaches as "sticky residues" or "spongy masses of oil and water."

But under certain circumstances, an oil slick could reach Nantucket within six days.

The "risk analysis" was prepared by U.S. Geological Survey hydrologists to help Interior Secretary Thomas Kleppe decide whether to eliminate any of the proposed North Atlantic tracts to be offered by the government at a lease sale next year.

It was included in a draft environmental study on the proposed drilling at Georges Bank released yesterday.

The study's findings were based on computer models, which took into account the amount of oil expected to be produced in the lease area, the fact that most of the oil is expected to be transported to land by pipleline, the likely trajectory which spills will take depending on variable winds and currents, and what resources such as beaches and migratory bird grounds the spill might affect.

White players punished for playing with blacks

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — Eight white rugby players who competed alongside black teammates in a game last weekend face legal prosecution and disciplinary action, it was announced yesterday.

Sports MInister R. Piet Koornhof said the eight players sought a "confrontation" with the government over its sports policies, adding "we have ways of putting an end to this sort of behavior."

The whites face legal prosecution because they appeared in a segregated suburb without official government permits. After the game, blacks carried the white players from the field on their shoulders.

Three weeks ago the government relaxed its sports policy by permitting white teams to face black opponents within South Africa, but it still is illegal for a club to field a multi-racial team.

"Our sports policy is one of making gradual change," Koornhof said. "At this stage we're not thinking of racially mixed teams playing at provincial or club level."

Five white players competed on the black township outside the coastal city of Port Elizabeth, against Kwarus which had three whites on its team.

Dr. Danie Craven, president of the South African rugby board, said disciplinary action will be taken against the white players.

"They willfully and knowingly disobeyed an instruction from the board and we cannot allow them to get away with it. It's as simple as that," Craven said.

Red light shines on nude dancing

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Supreme Court ruled yesterday that a ban on nude dancing in bars in Revere, Mass., is constitutional.

The court said a city council can legally prohibit nudity in bars that are licensed by a state liquor authority.

The justices agreed with a decision by the Suffolk Superior Court upholding an ordinance passed by the Revere City Council.

The ordinance was challenged by the proprietors of a Revere bar called The Squire and by Julie Biesterfield, an entertainer who strips to the accompaniment of rock and roll music.

Four years ago, the Supreme Court upheld regulations of the California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control that barred sexually explicit live entertainment and movies in licensed bars.

The court said a state agency "in a context of licensing bars and nightclubs to sell liquor by the drink" has "more than the normal state authority over public health, welfare and normals."

In the Revere case, the bar and the dancer argued that this does not apply. They said the Revere City Council does not issue liquor licenses and cannot revoke them.

They argued that Massachusetts law gives this kind of authority only to the state Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission or to local licensing boards.

State money may be spent to perform free abortions

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The government said in U.S. District Court yesterday that states may be required to provide free abortions even though the use of federal funds is barred under new legislation.

But attorneys for low income women told Judge John Sirica that up to 1,000 women a day, by government estimate, will be denied abortions that had been financed under Medicaid because of the new prohibition.

Sirica extended for another 10 days a temporary restraining order against government application of the law and took the case under advisement.

Abortion has figured as a presidential campaign issue and the law providing operating funds for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare that took effect Oct. 1 provides that "None of the funds contained in this act shall be used to perform abortions, except when the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term."

This, however, does not preclude states from providing abortions to indigent women with state funds, Justice Department attorney David Anderson told the court.

"It may be, as a number of recent cases hold, that the law requires the state to fund a women's exercise of her constitutional right to an abortion in certain circumstances," the government argued in its legal brief.

Neither Maryland, Virginia nor the District of Columbia has refused or proposed to refuse abortions to any indigent woman, the brief said.

"There is therefore no indication that the Congress' failure to provide funds for abortion will in any way interfere with the plaintiffs' opportunity to obtain one," the government argued.

Oswald look-alike described after twelve years of silence

DALLAS [PNS] — The existence of an "identical twin" for Lee Harvey Oswald — living here and arrested and released on a federal gun charge shortly before the assassination of John F. Kennedy — has been confirmed by a former agent for the Treasury Department's Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms unit.

With a congressional probe of the JFK assassination in the offing, Frank Ellsworth, now a Regional Public Affairs officer in that agency's Dallas bureau, broke a 12-year official silence to describe "an absolute dead-ringer for Oswald" active at that time with the rightwing Minuteman organization.

"I have a vague recollection that this man was questioned about the assassination, but not by me," Ellsworth told PNS. "Possibly nobody paid much attention because Oswald was in custody. We weren't looking for a fugitive."

While refusing to divulge the individual's name and passing off the incident as probably "sheer coincidence," Ellsworth admitted that the look-alike still resides in Dallas.

He also said that a number of state, federal and local officials had been aware of the man's existence after the assassination. Yet no mention of him appears in the Warren Report or any of the unclassified file material at the National Archives.

Almost from the moment of Oswald's arrest, numerous witnesses claimed to have seen the alleged assassin driving a car, though Oswald didn't drive. They had also seen him in a gun shop, at a rifle range and cashing a check in a grocery store.

But while the person they saw gave his name as "Oswald" and apparently matched the description perfectly, the Warren Commission concluded there was overwhelming evidence that the real Oswald was elsewhere at those times. The witnesses were discounted as "confused" or "mistaken."

For years, the commission's critics have speculated that an Oswald look-alike may have been used by conspirators to impersonate and possibly help frame Oswald — blazing a trail of misleading evidence to implicate him as a lone assassin.

A Dallas deputy sheriff, for example, gave chase to a man who ran from the Texas School Book Depository and climbed into a Rambler station wagon a few minutes after the assassination, later positively identifying him as Oswald. But according to police sources cited in the Warren Report, Oswald was already far away, riding a bus toward his home.

Now Ellsworth confirms that witnesses who believed they saw Oswald target-practicing at a Dallas rifle range — some of the more incriminating sightings — were actually seeing his "twin."

"I do remember two instances where Oswald was supposed to have been at someone's house in North Dallas, and I was able to been caused simply by the stress of getting the inoculations, he added.

The victims were Julia Bucci, 75, Charles Gabig, 71, and Ella Michael, 74, all of Pittsburgh.

But Allegheny County and the states of Vermont, Wisconsin, Louisiana, Maine, and New Mexico temporarily suspended their efforts in the government's $135 million program to protect Americans from a possible swine flu outbreak this fall and winter.

Officials in Michigan, New York, Utah, Florida, Massachusetts and Philadelphia County in Pennsylvania either shelved or recalled the same type of vaccine used to inoculate the Pittsburgh victims. The vaccine was manufactured by Parke Davis Pharmeceuticals of Michigan.

In Detroit, a Parke Davis spokesman said the company was cooperating with Pennsylvania officials on the case and said he understood the vaccine sent there had been rechecked "and found up to specifications." He said a check at 20 other vaccination sites had disclosed no problems.

Health authorities in Montana, Texas, West Virginia, Kentucky, New Jersey, Illinois, California, Connecticut, Kansas, Maryland, Georgia, Oregon, North Carolina, South Carolina and Hawaii announced they would not halt their programs.

The White House said President Ford had been informed of the situation.

"Spokesman Ron Nessen said the Department of Health, Education and Welfare is looking into the situation.

Dr. David Sencer, director of the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, said he saw no reason for local health departments across the United States to stop administering the swine flu vaccine.

"It is highly unlikely a bad batch of vaccine was the cause of these deaths," he said. he said the "cluster of death" was coincidential.

"If something went wrong with production under the government specifications, Parke Davis would be responsible," Sencer said.

Although there is no evidence of problems with the vaccine used in Allegheny County, Sencer said some unused samples will be sent to the Bureau of Biologies at Rockville, Md., for testing.

Sencer said he believes one reason the Pennsylvania deaths came to light was the close attention being given the Swine flu program by health authorities.

The Disease Control Center, a branch of the U.S. Public Health Service, is running the government's program aimed at inoculating 200 million Americans against a possible swine flu outbreak.

The center dispatched two doctors to Pittsburgh to investigate the deaths. A spokesman said they were sent "to assure ourselves that this was just a coincidence."

Commuters agree to fund Seabrook documentaries

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

The Commuter Collective voted yesterday to give $132 to the Student Video Project to fund six video tapes of a half-hour documentary on the anti-nuclear demonstration at the Seabrook N.H. nuclear construction site.

On Aug. 1, 18 New Hampshire residents were arrested on charges of criminal trespass after occupying the construction site. One hundred and seventy-nine people returned to occupy th site three weeks later.

Spokesperson for the Student Video Project David Skillicorn, said four of the six tapes would be sent to contacts in California and around the New England area, while the two other tapes will be bought by consumer advocacy groups.

A spokesperson for the Women's Political Prisoners Group Ellen Caraciollo, asked the collective for $100 for an Oct. 31 concert featuring Mary Travers and Jean Mackey.

It would cost $150 to pay the performers for both the concert and their transportation. A $1 donation would be requested at the door and the money raised will be sent to the Susan Saxe defense fund.

The collective voted to put a binder on the proposal, pledging to give $50 and depending upon the decision of the Southwest Women's center to contribute $50 more, the collective will pitch in with the final $50 to cover the concert.

The collective also voted to support the petition being circulated by the Union of Student Employees, demanding the Campus Center music room operate in its present location.

When working with individual teachers, the center's staff concentrates on specific strengths and weaknesses.

When working with whole departments, the center studies the individual teachers, the way the staff of the department interacts and how they could help each other develop their skills more.

Improvement is achieved through student analysis, videotaping or observing classrooms and workshops. The program usually involves one semester for individual help and two for departments.

Campus Carousel

By TONY GRANITE

CRUSADING EDITORS of Duke University's Chronicle uncovered a story that even made The New York Times this semester, when the student journalists wrote that the president of the university ranked only seventh in salary.

Favored administrators at the North Carolina campus who top the prexy's $60,000 a year pay are five employes of the Duke Medical Center.

Widely considered to be the favorites of the Duke trustees are the chairman of the Dept. of Medicine, who is paid $66,000 a year; the director of medical and health education, $65,260; anaesthesiology chairman, $65,000; pathology chairman, $64,800; and surgery chairman, $62,000.

The sixth highest-paid officer of the university gets eight cents less. He is the vice-president for health affairs, at $61,999.92.

The enterprising Chronicle editors got their information from the Internal Revenue Service, after invoking the Freedom of Information Act. As a private institution, Duke insists on keeping such matters to themselves. But as a tax-exempt organization, it is covered by the act and must also file an annual IRS return listing salaries of its officers and its five highest-paid employes.

MOVABLE STUDENTS at Washington State U. constitute 13 per cent of the student body who will drop, add or change class sections before they complete registrations.

The Daily Evergreen, student newspaper, says this traffic is "much lower" than schools which use a pre-registration system, like UWashington, where 55 per cent changes are recorded.

TYPOGRAPHIC ERRORS, that are the bane of any editor's existence, cropped up in a recent edition of the Hinds Jr. College Hindsonian, recently, in a story headlined, "Norm Millin loves soccer."

The proofreader's pouf read, "... Just about everybody who lays is a soccer coach," he said.

MEANWHILE, in the student's favorite morning newspaper here at UMass, the Collegian's popular women's editor had problems with positioning her phrases, so that a new look may be in the offing, with her statement that " ... there's no need for feminine hygiene spray which is dangerous anyway, and your lips look much better without all that gooky stuff."

† † † † †

EXCUSES, EXCUSES is the way the editors of the Miami-Dade (Fla.) Community College Falcon Times headed a feature on the tearful tales the faculty there is hearing from students who don't do their assignments.

"I got mugged on a bus on the way over and the thief took my briefcase with the homework inside."

Divergent views on hunting

To the Editor:

Whether it is wrong or not to kill any living creature, wild or domestic, is one of those life questions that each person must answer for himself. But, one point antihunters can understand is the divergence of views on wild animals.

Most antihunting types personalize animals. They attribute human characteristics and emotions to them [anthropomorphize]. They would preserve the individual animal often through ignorance or neglect at the expense of the species.

The hunter's view is directly opposed. With hunters, the species' well being is the dominant morality. That regulated hunting has no destructive effect on the species, but rather a beneficial effect, is a matter of fact. It is the species' right to life, rather than that of the individual animal, that causes hunters to raise no objection when his funds from hunting licenses are spent to aid ospreys or falcons.

Where do you think the money for our Wildlife Managers and Enforcers come from? Who do you think buys game preserves to prevent ignorant progressors from building concrete cities on top of our beautiful land? Hunters do!

Hunters contribute more than 256 million dollars a year on licenses, permits, and excise tax on arms and ammunition to protect wildlife.

I would like to know how much these antihunters donate to Wildlife Management? Sportsmen alone foot all the big bills for the conservation of our animals. As a result, most species exist today in far greater numbers than ever before:

1. In 1900 the white tail deer population in North America was estimated at 500,000. Today it exceeds 2 million.

2. Forty-five years ago, the nation's pronghorn antelope population was estimated at only 12,000. Today, it is estimated at 40 million.

3. There are five times as many elk in the nation today as there were in 1910.

4. Since 1952, the U.S. wild-turkey population has risen from 100,000 to 500,000.

My major is in the Fisheries and Wildlife Department, and I feel it is my obligation to enlighten the concerned on just how important hunters are for our nation's conservational programs. These individuals who speak out against hunters don't know the first thing about wildlife management. Don't get me wrong. I really appreciate these people for their concern for our environment, but it would be worth their while if they did a little research. They would learn that the only danger lies with poachers, poisonings, traffic deaths, and land development.

Please, show your concern by writing to your representative in Congress and ask how you can help the fight to preserve our beautiful land and its wildlife.

But the best way to protect wildlife is to buy a hunting license. You don't have to hunt. You can pin it on your wall. Your money will go to good use.

The UMass male?

To the Editor:

The things that have attracted our attention on campus are the guys. And we must admit we have not come up with a favorable impression of the UMass male.

My friend and I have gone to Southwest parties, bars and the sort in order to meet guys. No matter how many we meet, we seem to be able to classify them into two basic categories: the sex maniac or the inexperienced bore.

I would say a majority of girls would like the guy she's with to question her about her interests. However, the sex maniac skips this step while in the process of a "pick up." The conversation jumps from, "How are you?" to, "Let's go to bed." The inexperienced bore doesn't know how to treat a girl either. He is so thrilled when he does talk to a girl that he doesn't know what to do. A bore either talks incessantly or stands around saying nothing. Plus he cannot take the hint that the girl is bored. He sticks like glue.

As for actual experiences with male residents of UMass, our first party was relatively quiet. We only had to fight from being dragged to some guys' rooms. They finally decided to walk us quietly home. The next evening started well. We met a multitude of guys, all bores, but we managed to keep them from following us. However, it wasn't our fate to end the evening alone. On the way home, two "studs" mysteriously appeared from behind and wanted to get to know us. I was just talking to one when I heard my friend screaming from the arms of the guy she was with. Then my friend disappeared. As I went to find her, she was approaching me with a night watchman, therefore the guys decided to leave. After my friend and I returned to our rooms, my friend informed me that the guy she was with had tried to force her into his van.

As we weren't quite ready to give up hope, we decided to try another party. As we entered, I mentioned that we should have brought cups if we wanted beer. Two guys, hearing us, immediately came to our rescue. It seemed fair enough that we had to go with them to their rooms to get the cups. However, they were the type who worked fast.

No sooner was I in the room, than I was being carried to a bed. The same was happening to my friend. Somehow she managed to get the phone number of the room in which I was occupied. She informed me that she was going home. She was out like a flash, and I was on her heels.

Where did these men [?] learn their tactics? Are there any normal guys on campus? If so, where do they hang out? At this point, we are beginning to give up hope. As a matter of fact, we are going to a movie this weekend.

Hunting rebuttal

To the Editor:

This is in reply to Glen T. Munroe's "Shoot a hunter today" and his subsequent reply to Bruce Kopetz's rebuttal.

As far as I can tell, you're a vegetarian who finds meat from the stores a venial sin and meat from the hunt "premeditated murder." Webster's 7th defines "murder" as "the crime of unlawfully killing a person, especially with malice aforethought." The animals which humans consume are not persons though they share a mobile life, but even if you're granted license to alter the meaning for moralistically condescending effect, it can also be applied a step further to the immobile life of the plants you yourself consume.

As for hunters, they're not all as cold blooded as you imply. Some, I'll grant you, don't belong in the woods. They've seldom stepped out of suburbia except to try out the new shotgun or snowmobile they got for Christmas, and they lack the respect our forests deserve. But most are people who are simply continuing the food gathering tradition that began with the ascent of man. Supermarkets are the abrogation — not hunting.

You claim to refute the "animals would die of starvation anyway" argument by calling it irrational, but you don't say why. The natural balance of the forests has been thrown off by the elimination of natural predators. Now, it's the humans' responsibility to carry on a controlled thinning-out, and I can't think of a better way to do it than increasing the food-gathering capacity of our less and less productive planet.

Sexism reversed

To the Editor:

As a male with a strong belief in the philosophy of feminism I deplore the patronizing attitude of the male readers of your paper. Is it really such a great effort to eliminate sexist attitudes and actions, one of the most pressing problems extant in modern civilization?

Believe it or not sexist language fosters SEXISM and it must be eradicated. Spokesman to spokesperson, chairman to chairperson are both steps in the right direction but they are not sufficient. This is an example of our male-oriented society and is an example of blatant SEXISM.

The word person is offensive because it refers to son as opposed to daughter and should be changed to child to help eliminate the SEXISM manifested in the English language. Chairperson should be here-to-forth referred to as chairperchild. This will totally eliminate SEXISM from this part of our language.

I hope that all truly enlightened perchildren will adopt my idea for the elimination of SEXIST language patterns.

Misinterpreting Ford's remarks

By FREDERICK COOK

The reaction to President Ford's recent statement in his second debate with Jimmy Carter concerning the freedom of Eastern European peoples, in particular Poland, Rumania, and Yugoslavia, is incorrectly interpreted and blown out of proportion in many cases.

During a response to a question on the Helsinki agreement Ford said, "There is no Soviet domination of Eastern Europe and never will be."

This statement was not sufficiently clear. It is being read at aface value to mean that the Eastern European countries have complete political autonomy.

Anybody knows this is not true. What Ford was referring to, he later clarified, was that the United States supports the "aspirations for independence" of these peoples.

The citizens of these countries, Poland in particular, do not believe they will be dominated politically by the Soviets forever.

In an uninteresting and disappointing debate, people are looking and hoping for something to liven things up. Unfortunately for Ford, he made a statement capable of providing an outlet for both journalists who are starving for newsworthiness in the debates and voters who are looking for relief from the difficult decision of choosing between the two candidates.

This will undoubtedly cost Ford some votes. Some Polish-Americans have testified that they won't vote for Ford on account of his statement.

I have not as yet been able to justify a preference between President Ford and Governor Carter, but I will not succumb to the deluge of anti-Ford criticism or use this malinterpretable statement to justify my choice for the President of the United States.

Reading between the lines

To a computer cash register, these lines spell "Nabisco Shredded Wheat." The computer reads the widths of the lines and the spaces as a 12 digit number. Purely for the convenience of humans, 11 of the digits are also written numerically.

The first digit tells the product type: 0 for grocery. When the code expands to other types of stores, 3 will mean drugs and health aids, 8 will mean liquor. The next five digits are the manufacturer: 13130 is Nabisco. Then come five digits for the product: 00002, for Nabisco, is a 12-biscuit box of shredded wheat.

The last digit in the black lines (not printed numerically) is a check digit which must relate to the other 11 digits according to a complex formula. This allows the computer to catch anyone putting fake labels on packages, unless they use exact replicas of all the lines on the labels of lower-priced products.

Freedom of repression

Freedom of repression is something that the government, military and intelligence agencies have over us. At a time when people are talking about their 'freedom of expression' and one's inalienable right to liberty ... it is important to recognize that some people are abusing their priviledge of power.

Repression is a tool used to deteriorate strength and momentum of innumerable progressive movements. Crisis situations arise to put a wedge in the gears, confuse movement people, and oftentimes necessitate a change of strategy.

The realism of repression is used to extinguish the flames of popular dissent and unrest.

The actual denial of our 'right to free speech' takes many forms. People die mysteriously or slow deaths in American political prisons called jails. Movement leaders are constrained in their actions towards liberation when locked in a cell. Many educate and organize within the confines of the closed system they live in, but their energies are being diverted purposely.

Consider the plight of Karen Silkwood, an employe of a plutonium reprocessing plant in Ohio. She was killed en route to a meeting with a New York Times reporter, to tell the world about the dangerous working conditions within the plant and the shady operations of the management. Evidence indicates that she was done away with by plant officials. They killed her to save their investments in an increasingly unpopular business, nuclear power.

Or Jill Raymond, lesbian activist who refused to cooborate with a Federal Grand Jury, which indicted her for information concerning her political associates. She remained in jail for months, until civilian support and pressure on the government freed her.

Jackson State, Kent State, 1968 National Democratic Convention, People's Park, Johannesburg and the Pioneer Valley ... the list rolls on.

Susan Saxe, Huey Newton and the San Quentin Six, the Chicago Seven and Assatta Shakur are the names of more leaders who have been temporarily stifled. But what of the common folk? We're there too — locked up for being in the wrong place at the wrong time, which may have been the right time for someone else. The jails and penitentiaries are swollen with people who might have reacted righteously to crimes committed on us on a daily basis: stealing food to make up for welfare cuts, destroying billboards that deface the earth, and blowing up banks that lobby for nuclear power.

How does this affect us here at UMass? Many people have said that censorship is a good example of repression. It is taking away one's 'freedom of expression' and so-called freedom to do whatever one pleases. Yet there is a big difference between killing people for political purposes and censoring for societal betterment.

Opponents of the censorship for pornography would argue that anyone could define political purposes and betterment of society to suit their needs, as they saw fit, in the name of what they consider right. This is possible for an elitist group, who already has the power to do so.

Yet on this campus, you, the community will have an opportunity to participate in a decision that will affect your lives, directly and indirectly. I am not dictating that porno be banned from campus, because you will decide, not me. If the college community is concerned one way or the other, you will vote in the referendum to be taken in November. Should pornography be shown at UMass? This is not a fight to the finish between Mr. Sparks and myself, but rather a presentation of food for thought. If you give a damn, take some time to be free and exercise your 'freedom of expression.'

The UHS probe and the media

The investigation of the UMass Health Services now being conducted by the Hampshire-Franklin County district attorney's office points out a few important aspects of the interaction between students and administrators.

The ex-Student Health Advisory Board members who brought information on the Health Services financial activities from Health Services employees to the district attorneys office probably made a mistake in having a press conference outside the DA's office immediately after they had turned over the information to one of his assistants. And the press may have made a mistake in reporting the news as prominently as it did, but it was and is news and should have been reported in some way. All in all, the blunders were minor ones. It is unfortunate though, that they have been so prominently discussed, while the major, unconscionable mistakes and possible outright inconsistencies made by the Health Services have been clouded by rhetoric and verbosity.

It should be pointed out that stories and accounts of the investigation only report charges or questions that those concerned with Health Services procedures have raised. However, the Director of the UMass Health Services, Barry Averill, and the head of records, Camille Stark, have chosen to deal with the stories and accounts as if the Collegian and other media outlets were making the charges or bringing indictments themselves.

A letter such as that which appeared in yesterday's Collegian from Ms. Stark is a fine example of such an implausible defense of what are ethically wrong policies, if not legally prohibited. She explains that other Health Services employees gave her information about records being kept in "stax-on steel containers, clearly marked, locked and inaccessible." Ms. Stark is correct about the files stored in Marshall Hall being clearly marked. I could not mistake them for anything else but health records.

However, they were not stored in "stax-on-steel" and were not "inaccessible". Photographs in the Collegian files will show that they were stored in cardboard files and the photographs would not exist if the records were "inaccessible." Also, Ms. Stark put that statement in quotes, indicating it stood out in her mind. If it did, then why didn't it stand out enough for her to tell reporters? And it is true that Ms. Stark did not "state or imply" that records had left the Health Services as recently as two weeks ago. It is also true that I did not say she made that statement or implication. My story clearly states, "The source said ... ," and not Ms. Stark said.

Ms. Stark is not the only practitioner of such clouding activities, as Mr. Averill has also called the Collegian and berated my reporting to others who have answered the phone. However, he has not had the courtesy or the concern to call back and speak to me personally or even ask me to call him.

The records stored in Marshall Hall have been removed with the exception of piles of x-rays. It seems that Mr. Averill honestly may not have known of their storage there, and took the proper steps to have them secured. The students of this University and the patients of the Health Services would all be much better off if administrators such as Ms. Stark and Mr. Averill spent more of their time correcting such wrongs rather than twisting stories and accounts of investigations that have been reported by writing letters to the editor and making useless phone calls. For the investigation is continuing and will produce either substantiation of charges made or the clearing of the Health Services. Neither Ms. Stark nor Mr. Averill can prevent this and should not spend their time trying to do so.

Dealing with 'hornitis'

By MICHAEL ROBERTS

Our society is plagued by an unusual social ill. Few have heard of this social condition but many have been afflicted by it. It has not been clearly defined by the media because it is a subject of great sensitivity. Its name is a neoligism that may offend people, but it describes a serious problem. Hornitis is not a dirty word, it is a disease.

Hornitis is a conditioned characterized by a lack of sex. If you feel you have not had sufficient sex of utmost quality, then it is possible that you may be suffering from hornitis, but all of these have a common nature. Hornitis is when social conditions are the cause of your emotional and physical unsatisfaction.

These conditions arise when particular institutions or groups divorce people from developing natural human relationships. People are induced to become too involved in pursuits related to organization. They lose an opportunity to develop their sexuality in a spontaneous manner. Involvement with organization diverts energy from interpersonal relationships. People must subvert sexual and emotional function to satisfy the efficiency of institutional organs. They become alienated by pluralism; they are infected with hornitis.

Hornitis occurs when spontaneous responses are suppressed to satiate the cravings of organization. People begin to express themselves in an inhumane, rationalized manner acceptable to some societal dictum. Instead of people associating human activity with a priori spontaneous knowledge affected by external conditions and metabolism, people are compelled by society to perceive humans as such because of rationalize, inductive processes.

The definition of man becomes dependent on mechanistic society; people are identified by their organizations or tools. Man becomes man because he utilizes a hammer, as opposed to a definition of people based on spontaneous creativity.

People should be called people because they can develop art, literature, culture and so forth. They are people because they can perceive and create through a priori knowledge as contrasted by mind control under inductive processes.

If people can be spontaneous, then maybe we can spontaneously love each other instead of having hornitis.

Through spontaneity, people could build relationships instead of chasing an elusive promise of happiness by career and a funny farm in the suburbs. People could be human, and not subject to some rationalized Madison Avenue perspective of what is male, or what is female.

Why do people need tools to define their sexuality? Why does a person have to grow up with a football to be a man, or a doll to be a woman?

If we could forget the ubiquitous System once in a while, maybe we could eliminate the lonely alienated people. The lonely woman who has no one to give a flower might find someone; the lonely man who receives no flowers might see a person. People could forget the demoralizing structures and consider themselves part of one important group — the human race. And hornitis would not be a dirty word or a disease, it would never exist at all.

ascertain after the assassination that it was actually the look-alike," Ellsworth said. "These were times where witnesses thought they saw Oswald in the company of several Minutemen.

"One of these times did involve a group of Minutemen at a rifle range. Several of their names came up in my conversations with him, and I'd noted at the time that he was out shooting with them."

DOUBLE-TAKE

The Oswald look-alike first came to Ellsworth's attention "sometime in the summer of 1963," when the agent began tracking him to try to determine his connection with local arms smugglers. That fall, Ellsworth arrested him on "one of the gun violations," then released him on bond a short time before the fateful Kennedy trip to Dallas.

Immediately after the assassination, when Ellsworth was called to a police interrogation room to question Oswald about the rifle found in his supposed assassin's nest, the agent first believed that it was the same man.

"Oswald was sitting in a chair about 10 feet from the doorway when I entered," Ellsworth remembered. "All I could see was headlines that I'd just turned loose the man who killed the President.

"When Oswald spoke, I realized they were two different people. But they had identical build, weight, coloring, facial features and hair. They could have passed for each other."

Tax forms to come late

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Internal Revenue Service said today income tax forms for 1976 will be mailed about two weeks later than usual.

IRS Commissioner Donald Alexander said in a statement that late enactment of the tax reform act was the reason for the later mailing.

It has been customary for IRS to mail 1040 "long" forms and 1040A "short" forms between Christmas and New Year's Eve.

THC found to affect rats' sex life

CHICAGO [AP] — The active ingredient in marijuana affects sexual development of rats and could prove to have the same effect on boys and teen-agers, researchers from Massachusetts and Washington, D.C. reported yesterday.

The marijuana researchers found young rats exposed to a part of pot developed female-like breasts and lowered sexual development.

"Whether these phenomena that occur in animals have any major significance for human marijuana users is also unclear," said Dr. John W. Harmon, a surgeon at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington, D.C.

Harmon presented a report at the Clinical Congress of the American College of Surgeons. He said Delta Nine Tetrahydrocannabinol, THC, the part of pot that produces the so-called high, caused experimental rats to develop smaller testicles.

He conducted his experiment with a doctor, Menelaos A. Aliapoulious, professor of surgery at the University of Massachusetts Medical School at Worcester, and Diana Locke and Dr. John M. MacIndoe of Walter Reed.

In another study, a California physician told the American College of Surgeons meeting here that he has developed a vasectomy technique that uses an incision so small the operation requires no stitches.

Dr. William M. Moss, of Santa Ana, Calif., said the 10-minute procedure has been used successfully on 1,500 patients. He said the new technique uses a three-millimeter incision in the operation where tubes carrying sperm from the testicles are cut or tied off to render a man sterile.

Sixteen rats were given THC for their adolescent period and compared with two similar groups which had not received the marijuana ingredient. The THC rats had smaller testicles after they were killed, although the weight of their bodies and livers was the same, Harmon said.

Harmon reported also that levels of testosterone, a male sex hormone, was lower both in the blood serum and in the testicles of the rats given the marijuana derivative than in the others.

No ice cream at U.Miami

MIAMI [UPI] — Twenty-five years ago when the University of Miami was celebrating its silver anniversary, it discovered someone had looted the time capsule placed in the cornerstone of a campus building.

Now preparing to mark its golden anniversary Friday, university officials say it has happened again.

As a result, the distinguished guests and alumni are being told to stay home and there'll be no free ice cream and cake for the student body.

After the invitations had gone out, someone recalled the earlier embarrassment and suggested the corner stone planted 23 years ago in another campus building — scheduled for opening at Friday's affair — be checked to see it was still there.

It was missing.

"There was nothing of value in it," said university spokesman Nedra McNamara. "We don't have an inventory, but it probably was nothing more than some newspapers and other documents and photos."

Program for mothers of adolescents

A support group for mothers of adolescents is being organized at Everywoman's Center, UMass.

According to the facilitator, Carolyn Perry, the group is for community or University women who live with or tries to live with adolescents, but who sometimes feels alone, and wants to explore the reality of child rearing as it relates to herself.

The group is scheduled to begin Thursday at 7 p.m. at Everywoman's Center. Interested women are asked to call the center, 545-0883, and leave their names and phone number for Perry prior to the first meeting. If women are interested in the group, but are unable to attend on Thursday evenings, they should call Everywoman's Center and leave their names, numbers, and times when they could attend. There is no fee for the group.

Business goes bankrupt but owners live it up

DALLAS [UPI] — When their paper empire collapsed in bankruptcy in 1967, it was almost impossible for Ernest and Margaret Medders' creditors to pinpoint the amount of their debts.

It has been nine years since the big fall, which echoed from the family's plush North Texas party barn to the LBJ White House, but Mrs. Medders, 57, was in financial trouble again Tuesday.

Her husband died in Brownsville, Tex., last December. Illiterate, unable to work since 1959 and embarrassed by his financial collapse, Medders and his wife nevertheless retained big cars, easy credit and the good life that began with his claim he was an heir to Texas Spindletop oil fortune.

Now, however, Mrs. Medders faces charges of using a stolen credit card to buy airline tickets to Los Angeles where she left an unpaid $700 bill for a room at the Beverly Hilton. The credit card owner said the tab might exceed $5,000 by the time all bills arrive.

In Dallas, the general manager of a posh hotel said Mrs. Medders "left in a hurry" to go to a hospital without paying a bill for more than $5,000. Actually, she paid by check, which has twice been returned for insufficient funds, hotel officials said.

And, in Memphis, Tenn., Dr. Mary Davis, an 80-year-old retired osteopath, said she plans to reopen her practice as a result of traveling with Mrs. Medders since last year. Dr. Davis said her $150,000 savings has shrunk to $14.

Mrs. Medders was not available for comment.

Her late husband's claim in the 1960s to an oil inheritance provided unlimited credit for a time from banks and religious organizations in Texas, Arkansas and Indiana. The "borrowed fortune" enabled the Medders to gain social prominence highlighted by invitations to the White House and a ride home on Air Force One.

Mrs. Medders and Sol Fielding, a movie producer, were arrested last Sept. 13 in Venice, Calif., on a charge of attempting to use a credit card without the consent of the owner, Carroll Sinclair, a suburban Dallas dealer in precious metals. They claimed they used Sinclair's credit card with his permission. They were freed on $5,000 bond and are due to appear in court in Venice on Friday.

Sinclair said the credit card disappeared while Mrs. Medders and Fielding were in his home.

During her 19-day stay at the Beverly Hilton last August, Fielding and Mrs. Medders paid for a $120-a-day room with the credit card.

The FBI said in Dallas "some of our offices have been called" and "we are just in the investigative stages." Meantime, her Los Angeles attorney, Les Boxer, said the matter has been "blown completely out of proportion."

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, October 13 — Born today, you have a tremendous aptitude for study. You know how to apply yourself to whatever methods are necessary in order to learn when you need to learn, want to learn or must learn in order to "get ahead," whether in terms of your career or your leisure-time pleasures. You possess great self-control, being able to turn from those things you would like to concentrate on to those things you are required to deal with if you are to know the kind of success you ultimately long for. Well-balanced, methodical, accurate, and highly discriminating, you know precisely what you want out of life, how to go about getting it, and, perhaps most important and most often forgotten by others, what must be given up in exchange for it.

A homebody by nature, you enjoy perhaps more than any other kind of recreation that obtainable only within the confines of your own home, in the midst of your own family. Fond of good food, high-fashion clothing and the best in entertainment, you nevertheless take your greatest pleasure from at-home activities, from meals shared with spouse and children, from casual clothes and the kind of rest and relaxation that only comes in the wake of a loving family life.

Although you are not particularly athletic, you are of healthy nature and resilient character. Not one to take easy offense — even when insult is meant — you are, rather, quick to forgive, quicker to forget.

Thursday, October 14

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Accuracy is vital to the success of any operation you undertake today. Margin for error enters the picture only late in the day.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Consider yourself lucky if and when plans made early in the day materialize profitably. Chances for gain are relatively poor in the morning.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Your psychic powers should be more intense than usual. Play your cards right and you could be ahead of the game by evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Take care not to neglect important duties early in the day. There is much to be considered before making up your mind regarding your work.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Keep a healthy balance between the intellectual and the emotional sides of your nature. Don't anticipate ill and thus encourage it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Make an effort to discern another's motives for recent behavior. Apply yourself to the problem at hand — now!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Discriminate between the good and the ill — which may not be as easy a thing to do as you presently think. Discourage dissent at home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Success is a matter of arrangement, not amount. Regardless of the number of ingredients you have, it is their design that counts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — An accurate memory is essential to your success as a witness — whether formally or informally. Don't expect help from another source.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Depressed spirits do no one any good — especially at this particular time. The future depends upon present good cheer.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Absolute honesty is a must, especially if you expect to be a leader of the young. Don't become distressed over small matters.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Conditions are presently adverse to your progress. You would do well to accept things as they are — but only for the moment.

Bluebird forecast

Put love in 'bullets'

By KIT WALKER and ROB HENEREY

Today we have a mixed blessing in store. First, at nine the moon sesquiquadrates Mars. Now the moon is our Momma, and she thinks a lot in Gemini; but she also has a window into another warp that she can look through — and you can too! Mars in Scorpio is the gun — the atomic water pistol. So Momma is going to look through the window at her gun at nine this morning. So let's look at our guns along with her — How many times this month have we shot somebody down? And is there a helpful way to shoot someone in the head? Thought bullets ... we can shoot thoughts into someone's head; words are letters are symbols are windows into the other warp. So put a little love in the bullets.

At 1:30 p.m. she looks through her Gemini window and sees the Sun-king in Libra, and he lifts her up with a smile, because he's 120 degrees away, and that's one-third the zodiac pie, which equals har-mo-ny!

Then at 3:24 our guns will disappear, and we'll have to imagine them to commit murder. But remember the rule — only murder with love, only murder with Truth — and only swat the flies and pull the weeds — save the ladybugs and vegetables.

So we have a mixed blessing while the sun is up — but just remember — you always hurt the ones you love, and vice versa. So if someone shoots you down, thank the Lord for the best of your heart; and you'll feel all the stronger for it. And when you shoot back, do it with looe — see if you can shoot down the clouds, and let the sun shine through.

Tonight will continue the theme on a more mellow level. The moon is finishing its trip through Gemini and, as it loses light and moves toward the Cancer Last Quarter, we could really be communicating our feelings about the past three Libra-Sun weeks. We should be starting a re-evaluation of our old ways of relating, and preparing our heads for some new inspiration about where our partnerships are going.

So tonight is no time to be shy about our feelings and principles. Let's express from our hearts what we see as important for the future. If we begin to work it out now, next Monday's Mars conjunction to Uranus in Scorpio can bring us a sudden new mutual courage from the depth's of our subconscious, rather than an alienating show-down over injustice.

We should be taking the must-y expectations out of our mental basements, shaking them out, and hanging them in the sunlight. Then we can see which are worth keeping and what we have to do to fulfill them. Otherwise the mold may metamorphose into a Thing that creeps up the stairs while we're asleep.

Whether we struggle for forty days or forty minutes, heaven and hell are here in our hearts every second.

What becomes of Silas?

Celts buy Blazers' Wicks

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Celtics bought forward Sidney Wicks from the Portland Trail Blazers yesterday for an undisclosed amount of cash.

"There are no other players involved," said Boston president Red Auerbach in announcing the Celtics' first cash deal in their history. "This is completely separate from the (Paul) Silas deal."

Silas, like Wicks, is on the option year of his contract and has not reported yet to the Celtics.

Wicks, a five-year starter at Portland after being drafted on the first round out of UCLA, was sold during the summer to New Orleans with the provision the deal would be nullified if the 6-foot-9 forward refused to sign a contract.

Wicks did not sign a pact and was returned to the Trail Blazers last week.

Harry Glickman, general manager of the Blazers, said there was no similar money back offer made to the Celtics. "It's a straight cash deal. There are no strings attached," said Glickman in announcing the purchase in Portland.

No problems were expected, however, according to Wicks in an interview from Los Angeles.

"I'm very enthusiastic and I'm looking forward to playing with the caliber of ballplayers they have on the team," he said. "I'm almost positive I'll be able to fit in with their style."

A news conference was scheduled Wednesday at which time the Celtics were expected to announce the signing of Wicks to a long-term contract.

Te acquisition was made following weeklong talks on the west coast between Boston owner Irv Levin and Wicks' agent.

"We had a golden opportunity to grab a super player and we grabbed it," said Auerbach of the five-time NBA all-star. "I place Sidney Wicks in the same company with Elgin Baylor, Tommy Heinsohn, Paul Silas and Bob Pettit among the great forwards to play the game."

In his Portland career, the 27-year-old Wicks averaged 22.3 points, 10.3 rebounds and 4.1 assists per game.

The Wicks purchase came while owner Levin was in New York negotiating Silas' contract. Rumors abound that Silas, 33, would be traded before the Celtics would accede to his reported contract demand of $300,000 annually over the next three seasons. Silas currently makes an estimated $175,000.

Women linksters easily defeat Cortland State

By BETTY LOU CLANCY
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's golf team defeated Cortland State last Friday in a challenging one-on-one match in New York at Cortland State.

After eighteen holes, UMass came out the victor with a score of 349, and Cortland not very far behind with a score of 365. Minutewoman Debbie McCulloch won low medalist honors with a score of 76, followed by teammates Joanne Smith, 84, Elisa Romano, 89, and Eileen Cramer, 100.

Conditions were terrible, as the women played in 45 degree weather, with constant rain at their backs. The course is in the valley and it was the first time the team had played it. "The weather was just miserable," stated UMass Coach Jane McGahan. "It was absolutely freezing out there and the team did real well to play as they did — it just wasn't the best weather to play in." The course wasn't that difficult, though, as the holes weren't too long and the greens were basically small," she finished.

Commenting on UMass' game, McGahan said, "I feel that they played to their potential. It never happens that you play a round of golf and play as well as you think you are able." Coach McGahan seemed very pleased with her team. "They were happy about the win and so was I."

The Minutewomen will travel to Mt. Holyoke this Friday for another one-on-one match with Mt. Holyoke. It will be the first time that the two teams have played a dual match and the competition will be rough.

The match will be a one-day 18-hold match, the last the Minutewomen will play this fall. Their record stands at 3-2-0.

Stickers head south

Collegian Staff

The women's field hockey team will try and stay on the winning track today,when it travels to the South Shore to take on Bridgewater State.

The Minutewomen will also be trying to snap a losing streak, as Bridgewater has defeated UMass twice in the past two years.

"I don't know how they did it, they're not much of a better team than Mass", commented Coach Judith Davidson.

Bridgewater State will not be a total stranger to coach Davidson, as two of the starters for Bridgewater played for Davidson when she coached at Newton North High School.

According to Davidson, "From what I know of those two, we should be able to beat them."

Spikers extend losing streak going down to defeat twice

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team's losing streak continued with two losses last night to Salem State and eastern Nazarene. Salem scores were 15-4, 15-10, and the following heart-break was even more rending with Nazarene scores, 16-14, and 16-14.

The biggest reason for the losses were poor serving and poor serve reception. Coach Dianne Thompson was disappointed at the team's performance and in the overall games. "The worst part is knowing that you are the better team, but just not getting your play together," Thompson lamented.

The regular starters of Pat "Busy" Bradley, Jayne Greenberg, Dianne Bunker-Hannula, Heidi Dickson, Deb Kuzdeba, and Shelly Soules started the Salem State game. According to Thompson, the lineup wasn't clicking, but sub Lynn Decosmo gave the team a shot in the arm.

"When the line-up wasn't successful in the first game, I decided it was back to the drawing board. I subbed Lynn Decosmo for pat, and Sue Sabia fro Heidi. Lynn was definitely a stand-out. She came off the bench in the Salem game and looked great. Starting her in the first Nazarene game, Lynn served eight out of our fourteen points," commented Thompson.

Sabia's return to the courts after recovering from her shoulder injury was another story. Labeled a starter at the beginning of the season, Sabia never got out on the court because of the injury. As a regular last night, she had trouble coming off the bench. According to Thompson, her "timing was off" and she "wasn't sure on her spike coverage".

Overall, the UMass women "looked better, were moving better and really hustling" in the games against Eastern Nazarene. The rejuvenated lineup with Decosmo and Sabia no doubt had a hand in this.

Soules had trouble with her set last night, unlike last Saturday's game where her play merited an "outstanding" from Coach Thompson. Although Soules' back court was "good", her attempts to set resulted in pushing the ball over the net and illegal hit calls from the net judge.

"The biggest problem that hurt us was definitely our serving," affirmed Thompson. We were leading in many instances, but then, under pressure, we missed our serves. Unlike Saturday where we served long balls, our serves were into the net," she finished.

After compiling a 1-5 record, team morale is at a low. Coach Thompson is approaching the problem from all different angles to get the team back on the track. "I think we're just going to have to mature as volleyball players. We really have a lack of experience. I think we're the oldest inexperienced team around," Thompson explained.

The women's next match is Saturday against Northeastern University and MIT, both of which are reputedly strong squads.

The not-too-gentle art

Moto-cross booming in area

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

If you're a sports fan who doesn't mind suffering some pain in the pursuit of fast action; look into the not-too-gentle art of moto-cross racing. But before you decide to enter your trail bike in a sanctioned moto-cross race, spend a couple of bucks, and go watch a race.

A moto-cross race consists of anywhere from ten to forty riders, all on very fast motorcycles, competing on a specially designed dirt track. It's not quite like riding in the woods with your buddies. The track itself is usually no more than about fifty feet across at its widest point, and often narrows to a mere ten feet. Each track uses a combination of steep hills, sharp, banked curves, and jumps that send a racer airborne, to test the skill and endurance of the racers.

A race begins with all the cycles careening full speed down a long straightaway. They enter the first turn en-masse, and invariably a few riders go down. Moto-cross racers are a tough breed, and a rider will pick himself and his machine up, and get back in the race if he is not seriously injured. After that first corner, all a racer has to do is get in front of everyone else, and keep his motorcycle underneath him to stay there.

Moto-cross racing is a European import that is rapidly gaining nationwide popularity, and is booming in the New England area. The New England Sports Committee is an organization that consists of racers and supervisory personnel, and currently sanctions eleven moto-cross tracks in New England. A twenty dollar entry fee buys a racer a set of numbers to place on his machine, and entitles the racer to compete in any N.E.S.C. sanctioned race. Ten years ago the N.E.S.C. had 420 riders, there are now 2000 racing members. Lanesborough, Southwick. and Ludlow, Massachusetts all presently have moto-cross tracks.

A racer is classified as a novice, amateur, or expert rider. This ranking is determined by the number of points a racer manages to accumulate in sanctioned races. During a race, a rider will compete in two heats or motos as they are referred to by the racers. A moto lasts between 10 and 15 minutes in the novice and amateur classes, and between 15 and 20 minutes in the expert class. Every racer gets a score derived by combining his finishing position numbers in the two motos, and the four riders with the lowest scores are awarded points. The racers are also classified by the size of their motorcycles, which are measured in cubic centimeters. An amateur racer on a 125 c.c. machine will only compete against other amateurs riding 125 c.c. bikes.

Motocross racing is expensive and time consuming. The average cost of a 100 c.c. racing motorcycle is $600, a 125 c.c. goes for about $1000, a 250 c.c. is between $1200 and $1600, and a 500 c.c. will cost around $2000. It isn't uncommon for a rider to spend two or three full days after a race repairing the havoc he has wrought on his machine. The racer also invests a lot of his hard-earned money replacing an endless array of broken parts.

Some of you may be wondering why anyone would invest so much time and money in a pasttime that is known to punish participants with broken noses. Well, there is a rumor that says moto-cross racers are unacceptable blood donors — because what is really running through their veins is crank case oil.

Reds win pennant; Yanks take KC

[Compiled from Wires[— The explosive Cincinnati Reds, who almost gave the game away in the eighth inning, tied the game on ninth inning back-to-back homers by George Foster and Johnny Bench, then won it on Ken Griffey's infield single to defeat the Philadelphia Phillies, 7-6, Tuesday and capture their second straight National League pennant.

The pennant was the fourth in the last seven years for the Reds, and it marked the second year in a row they took the NL playoffs in three straight games.

The Reds, known for their comeback ability, appeared to be losers when the Phillies took a 6-4 lead on Jay Johnstone's run-scoring triple in the ninth, but fans have learned never to count the powerful Reds out of any game and they quickly struck back to tie the score on back-to-back homers by Foster and Bench off reliever Ron Reed.

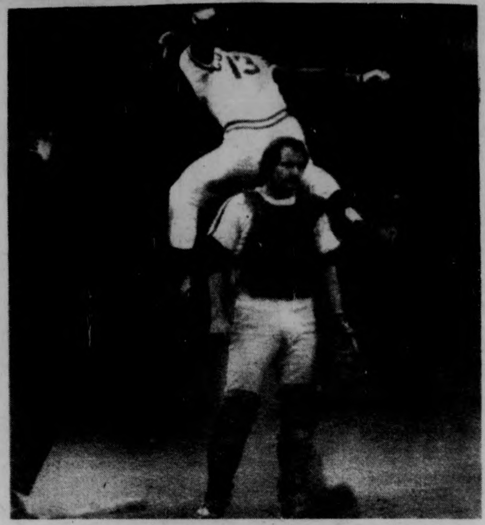
Before the crowd of 55,047 had settled back in its seats, Dave Concepcion singled to left off reliever Gene Garber and Cesar Geronimo worked on a base on balls off reliever Tom Underwood. After pinch-hitter Ed Armbrister sacrificed, Pete Rose was walked intentionally to load the bases and Griffey drove home the winning run when his soft roller to the left of the mound could not be handled by the charging Bobby Tolan.

Meanwhile at Yankee Stadium Graig Nettles' tie-breaking single and Elliott Maddox' run-scoring double were the big blows of a three-run sixth inning which enabled the New York Yankees to defeat the Kansas City Royals 5-3 Tuesday night and move to within one victory of their first American League Pennant.

The Royals hopped on Dock Ellis to take a 3-0 lead in the first inning and Andy Hassler protected the margin until two out in the fourth inning when Lou Piniella doubled and Chris Chambliss homered into the right field bleachers, cutting the margin to 3-2.

Roy White walked and Thurman Munson doubled to open the Yankees' sixth and Hassler was replaced by Marty Pattin, who purposely walked pinch-hitter Carlos May filling the bases. Chambliss' infield out drove in the tying run and Nettles then singled cleanly to center to give the Yankees a 4-3 lead. Maddox' double drove in the third run of the inning and boosted New York's lead to 5-3.

Cincinnati's Johnny Bench gets all of Ron Reeds pitch and slams it over the leftfield wall to tie the game 6-6 in the ninth inning, as the Reds came back from a 6-4 deficit. (UPI)



Cincinnati Reds Dave Concepcion flies through the air after scoring the winning run in yesterday's 7-6 victory over the Phillies, clinching the playoff series. (UPI)

Women harriers host tri-meet

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

A slightly depleted UMass women's cross country team will attempt to finish its regular season undefeated when it takes on Dartmouth and Wesleyan at 4:00 this afternoon starting on the upper field at NOPE.

Four runners are nursing minor injuries for the Minutewomen and are questionable for the meet. Diane Perry and Jane Welzel are both plagued by back strains. Debbie Farmer has an arch strain which kept her out of Sunday's meet. In a freak accident on Sunday, Barbara Callanan sprained her ankle after the race was over. Coach Ken O'Brien expressed the hope that the injuries were not too severe, given the fact that it's late in the season, and the most important meets will be coming up.

UMass' two opponents have been rather enigmatic this season. No results are available for either team that would give O'Brien much of an idea of their strengths. Dartmouth will probably resemble Brandeis in that they will have one or two front runners with no depth to back them up. Similarly, Wesleyan has one good runner, Cathy Dunham, but a gap of a minute between their second and third runners.

"That's probably too big a time spread to give us a tough battle," said O'Brien.

The team has finally begun to exhibit the desirable trait of swapping off the front running position. One thing that tends to happen in cross country is that one or two runners will establish themselves as "top" on the team, and the rest of the runners will give up on chasing them and settle for third or fourth places. This hasn't happened at UMass, where as many as seven runners have been within a minute of each other.

In their last meet, the women had a radical switching of positions. Julie Lafreniere took the top spot followed by Maggie Crowley. Usual front runner Johara Chapman was next across for the Minutewomen. Steady Sue Swartz ran next, and was followed by Barb Callanan, who was a pleasant surprise in fifth spot. She had previously run no higher than seventh, but she had been on the verge of breaking into the top group all season long.

"It's a good thing," said O'Brien, "it shows that we have a lot of people of equal ability, and that they haven't established themselves in rank order."

With the New Englands drawing near, O'Brien wants to work on specific strategies with his squad.

"We'll get a strong first mile, then take it easy," said O'Brien. "In championship races people have to be used to doing that — regardless of the terrain, with the excitement and size of the field, the first mile is usually more demanding than usual."

What's happened with the big shots?

The once mighty and powerful teams in professional and college sports have stumbled, bumbled and fallen flat on their behinds this year. Once again, this is another vintage year for the demise of "sports dynasties". But then again, outside of the Boston Celtics, New York Yankees and Montreal Canadiens, sports dynasties come a dime a dozen.

This year in major league baseball, we have witnessed the disintegration of an established "dynasty" — the Oakland A's and the evaporation of what was thought to be by most experts as a young and fledgling "dynasty" — the Boston Red Sox.

So far this year in pro football, the two-time Super Bowl champion Pittsburgh Steelers have looked like anything but defending champions, while in college football '76, such perennial powers as Penn State, Alabama and Arizona State have been bumped out of the top 20 polls across the country.

What brings about the destruction of some very talented teams? Is it because of apathy on the part of players, in that they are satisfied to win one championship, or are there outside influences which lead to the decay of a team? Let's look at this year's stumbling ex-champions and see what the story is.

OAKLAND A'S — There is one, and only one person who is responsible for the dissension and split factions that caused the breaking up of baseball's most successful and colorful team of the '70 and that is Charles O. Finley.

Third baseman Sal Bando, captain of the three-time champion Oakland A's summed up the consensus feeling of the team on the last day of the season.

"This is it, I'm all finished here," he said. I will play somewhere next year, but never again for Finley," he added.

All hell broke loose this summer when Finley auctioned three of his top players — Joe Rudi, Rollie Fingers and Vida Blue — to the two highest bidders. You have to admit, Finley did a pretty good job in bringing about his team's downfall, a team that amazingly through all the turmoil and player auctions, fought the Kansas City Royals down to the wire for the Western Division title.

So with Rudi, Fingers, Blue, Gene Tanace, Bert Campaneris, Don Baylor and Willie McCovey leaving because of Finley, kiss the A's good-bye for years to come.

BOSTON RED SOX — As in the case with the A's, outside interference once again produced split factions and dissention on this team. No, Charley Finley had little to do with the Sox downfall, but some pretty selfish players may have.

As you well know, it was Jerry Kapstein who represented Lynn, Fisk and Burleson in contract negotiations. When the season began in April, the trio stated that they weren't going to sign until they got their outrageous sums of money.

As their boycott continued into May and June, it not only affected their play, but also brought about some hard feelings between them and the other players who questioned whether they really deserved the money they wanted.

On into June continued the boycott, and deeper and deeper into the depths of the Eastern Division cellar the Red Sox sunk. In the middle of July the manager was fired, but the new manager, Don Zimmer, had less success in rallying his forces than his predecessor.

Then in August came the historic signing of the trio. From that time on the Sox were one of the hottest teams in all of baseball.

The Red Sox situation isn't as bad as Oakland's, so there is hope, based on the team's play from August on, that the Sox can turn things around and be in the thick of the pennant race next year.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS — The Steeler's situation is perplexing to say the least. The same personnel has returned from last year's victorious squad, and there are no contract squabbles or dimwitted owners butting in.

With a 1-4 record and in last place in the AFC Central Division, the Steelers have been riddled by the injury bug and an abundance of mental mistakes. With Terry Bradshaw out for the next couple of weeks, things don't look encouraging for the Steelers.

More die after having flu shots

Compiled from wires

State health officials plan to go forward with the swine flu inoculation program after researchers around the country concluded yesterday that the vaccine is not harmful to the elderly.

Eighteen more persons died yesterday, bringing the total to 21 that have died shortly after receiving the swine flu shots. Most died following heart attacks, and all but one had a history of heart trouble.

Dr. J. Donald Millar, of the Center for Disease Control (CDC) in Washington, said yesterday that "there is no evidence that these deaths were caused by the vaccine."

Nine states so far have suspended the inoculation programs, which began around the country earlier this week. They are: Pennsylvania, Illinois, Louisiana, Maine, New Mexico, Texas, Wisconsin, and counties in West Virginia and North Carolina. Vermont, which had suspended its program on Tuesday, announced yesterday that inoculations will resume on Friday.

Millar announced yesterday that other vaccine lots were involved in the research in addition to a batch used at a Pittsburgh clinic where three elderly patients died of heart attacks hours after being inoculated. That vaccine was from the Parke, Davis, and Co. Lot no. 91339a.

In New York, President Gerald R. Ford said that he will receive a swine flu shot today despite the escalating reports of deaths among elderly recipients.

"I strongly believe that it is necessary for every one of 215 million Americans, and to show my faith in it, I'm going to do it myself tomorrow," he said.

The Ford Administration committed itself early this year to spend $135 million to avoid a flu epidemic like the one in 1918-1920 in which about 20 million people died worldwide.

Officials at the CDC expressed concern because there were reports from around the country of swine flu clinics being open and nobody showing up.

"It is easy to be concerned now, but the problem is next winter when people are dying from influenza," said Philadelphia acting Health Commissioner Lewis Polk. "Then we will all feel very sad."

Most of the victims nationwide died of heart attacks, which field studies in Pittsburgh indicated may have been caused by stress.

"Just getting on a trolley to travel to get a flu shot is a stressful situation for an elderly person," said Dr. Phillip L. Graitcer. He said that two of the Pittsburgh victims watched the others collapse while awaiting their inoculations.

In Connecticut, Gov. Ella Grasso personally endorsed the continuation of the program by baring her arm to the doctor's needle.

"We can move forward with confidence," said Mrs. Grasso after receiving her shot.

Senate is urged to support bill

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

Douglas Phelps, appeared before the Undergraduate Student Senate last night to urge their support for a bill now in the Massachusetts State Legislature.

According to Phelps, the bill is an act to protect the right of student self-organization and is tied up in the House Ways and Means Committee. The supporters of the bill hope to get it out of the committee and passed through the House before it adjourns. Adjournment is tentatively scheduled for Oct. 16.

The bill has already passed the Senate.

Henry G. Ragin, former Student Government Association (SGA) co-President and other members of the Student Organizing Project have been at the Legislature all week trying to stress to state representatives of the importance of the bill, said Phelps.

"Right now the biggest problem we have is getting the bill out of the Ways and Means Committee. Once we get that accomplished we feel we can get it passed," said Phelps.

The bill is being sponsored by Representative James G. Collins (D-Amherst) by the request of Karl Allen, chairperson of the SGA Governmental Affairs Committee. The bill was first introduced to the House last December.

Phelps urged the entire student body to support the bill and asked them to help get the bill out of the committee. He asked that they call Collins, John Finnegan, Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Senator James Kelly Chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee and their home representative.

In other action the Student Senate passed a motion to allocate up to $100 to print posters advertising the Nov. 2nd national election. An amendment to the motion stated that the referendum questions be also placed on the posters.

A special meeting of the Senate for orientation of new senators will be held Oct. 24 between 12:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. announced Senate Speaker Brian De Lima.

In its committee report Governmental Affairs rejected the application of Good Guys Inc. for Recognized Student Organization status. The committee cited two objections to the constitution of the group saying the committee did not think the constitution allowed for open membership of every undergraduate.

The Senate also voted to sponsor a debate between members of some of the various political organizations. There was some question to the legality of the motion since Senate by-laws state that the Senate must not use any funds for the furthering of any political party.

Four Amherst residents meet in debate of housing problems

By ROB GALVIN
Collegian Staff

Housing problems were the issues last night, when a panel of four Amherst residents appeared on a televised discussion on the topic "Tenants vs. Landlords: Is There a Housing Crisis In Amherst?"

The panel consisted of Ann Hastings, an Amherst realtor, George Scheurer, Amherst Housing Authority, Steven Weisman, Amherst Landlord-Tenants Association, and Jack Tager, UMass history professor.

The longest discussion of the night concerned the issue of rent control. Weisman suggested a three-point proposal for a set-up of committees, as an alternative to rent controls. The first committee would be a "fair rent commission," consisting of five members: a landlord, tenant, and three members of the public. The commission would act as the name implies, making decisions on fair rent standards.

The second committee would be an expansion of the present Landlord-Tenant Committee to deal with studying the problems of rent and housing as they occur. The third would be the Landlord-Tenant committee as it stands, to concern itself with non-rental matters.

Tager said that he favored the idea, but felt that he wasn't sure that it could work. He said he didn't think that the Town Meeting would vote for it. He also questioned the feasibility of the fair rent commission to operate in Amherst alone.

He suggested that the commission be worked out with the assistance of surrounding communities. Tager mentioned the Minneapolis-St. Paul area as an example where such a commission works.

Opposition came from Hastings, who argued against any form of rent control. She said the lack of housing, the supply and demand aspect of the problem, was more important. She argued that rent control decreases, not increases, the supply of housing. She said that new investors would not want to invest in a rent-controlled area.

Another problem discussed was that of the zoning regulation that states no more than four unrelated persons could live in one house. Hastings said this had not been a problem in the past, but now, since the house-buying market is poor, landlords are forced to rent more in these circumstances.

She said there had been numerous complaints from neighbors over the conduct and conditions of such rentals.

Another problem with this type rental, Hastings added, is that many times the tenants would leave without paying the last month's rent. This money point was rebutted by Scheurer, who told of a Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group study that showed that many landlords were illegally withholding damage deposits from tenants. He said that this action justified the tenants leaving without paying.

All four agreed that the basic problem was "identifying the dragon," finding out just who was at fault, and what the problems are. Most believed that finding housing that was affordable, or just the finding of housing itself, was a prime consideration.

Weisman added that there was only a 1.8 per cent vacancy rate, according to the 1970 census, and that this rate had probably decreased since then.

Scheurer stated what he believed the major problem to be as that "market capitalism supply and demand simply doesn't work." He added there just wasn't enough housing stock to fit the town needs.

Tager suggested two solutions that would incorporate aspects outside the Amherst community.

He first suggested that Amherst try to organize a cooperation with surrounding towns, making a gain in housing supply and conditions, if the towns would modify their existing housing laws. He didn't feel too optimistic about this, adding that "Hadley does not want multi-tenant housing, but wants all the supermarkets in the world."

Tager also suggested trying to appropriate federal funds, under the Federal Housing Act of 1974. He said that such monies could be used to improve the conditions of existing housing.

News director reveals reasons for leaving UMass

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

A chance for an exciting job and immediate future professional advancement are what made Peter Gluckler, former news director at UMass, decide to take his new job as public relations manager at Hampshire College.

"Hampshire College offers more responsibility," Gluckler said. "At UMass, the News Bureau was concerned only with state affairs. I was not responsible for publications and I had indirect input into public affairs."

"At Hampshire, I am responsible for media relations and national publicity, I have direct input in public relations affairs."

"I also have a chance to learn more about publications," he said.

The job as UMass news director concerned media relations, running news and news releases, radio shows, and radio and television news spots.

"The News Bureau of UMass acts as the campus spokespersons," he said.

The position at Hampshire College covers a broader territory, according to Gluckler. "We also act as advisers to students."

Gluckler, a native of the South Shore area, is a graduate of Boston University. He majored in public relations.

Before he worked at UMass, he served at several newspapers. At the Lowell Sun he started as a reporter and moved to positions as sub-editor, county editor, metropolitan editor, backup Sunday editor and, finally, he became "night-editor by choice" he said. He remained at the Sun four years. He also ran a chain of weekly newspapers for two years.

"I left the Lowell Sun to write a book," Gluckler said. "I wrote the book, but it didn't get published."

In need of money, Gluckler got a job at the Post Corp. to help create the Daily Transcript of Dedham, which he says "was good in its early years, though I don't know how it's doing now."

Gluckler left the Transcript to work at UMass. His main reason for leaving, he said, was that he will be able to better himself at Hampshire.

"Hampshire College has established itself now, has a bright future and is financially sound. The students here prove that Hampshire is working. The school is entering a new era of development under a new president. There is a lot to look forward to," said Gluckler.

A small part of Gluckler's decision to leave UMass he said, was the School of Education scandal.

"I had anticipated a couple more years of turmoil," he said. "In some respects I am glad to be away but this did not constitute my leaving."

The policy of the UMass News Bureau according to Gluckler, is "to tell the truth unless there are other influences involved which make it impossible."

"Everything in a state system is the business of the press," he said.

"Public relation people are hired to make things look good. But during the School of Education scandal I learned that sometimes when you tell the truth the reporter won't believe you.

University seeks a new Director for News Bureau

By MARY BETH ALLEN
Collegian Staff

The University is looking for a new person to tell its story.

Peter Glucker has left UMass' news bureau for a job as public relations manager at Hampshire College.

"It will be a great experience for him," said Daniel M. Melley, UMass' director of public affairs.

"It's a bigger job for him with more responsibility," added Melley. "We're going through the search process now for a new news director. Applications are still coming in," he said, pointing to several large stacks of applications for the job.

"What I'm looking for is someone with enough media experience to be able to organize the office to communicate with the outside media, such as local newspapers, radio and television. To be qualified for the job, the person must also have worked in public information before, and have a good understanding of what the media needs to know," said Melley.

"The Public Affairs Office will take on the personality of the news editor," he continued. "The job takes a person with many different qualities, who is able to meet all of the small crises that arise every day."

Melley sees the Public Affairs office as playing a dynamic role in how the public views the university. "I think we have been taking new directions for the past several years. How our office operates depends on the trends that the University is taking," Melley said.

"In the mid-60's there was a lot of confidence in public learning institutions," Melley observed. "University presidents like Kingman Brewster (of Yale) were called upon to comment on news events."

"Then with the war and student unrest, the public came to the conclusion that colleges and universities can't be the answer to everyone's problems. You don't see the respect for college leaders that existed before the turbulence of the late '60s. The shrinking job market, and the inability of even college graduates to get jobs, added to public disillusionment, especially among young people.

"In order to regain the public's confidence, we will have to go out and work for it," Melley said.

Contact, a fairly new publication put out by the Public Affairs office, is sent to the parents of University students and is part of an effort to increase parents' awareness of University people, events and philosophy.

"Survival '76" is the title of a series of radio shows produced at the University and distributed to stations across the state. The spots deal with consumer issues and feature University professors speaking on their subjects — for example, an engineering professor

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

"New England, 1976" is the theme and the restriction of a photo contest open to the University community, sponsored by Photo Lab I, a photography supply store, in the Mountian Farms Mall, Hadley.

The prints submitted to the contest, which runs from Monday through Nov. 10, must be taken in New England, and must have been taken in 1976.

The winners of the contest will be announced Nov. 20, after 10 days of judging by mall patrons who will vote by ballot for the photo they think is best executed and printed in both black and white and color categories.

Entry to the contest is free, and the only cost is for film, paper and mount board for the prints.

More than $300 will be awarded in prizes with about three prizes in black and white and three in color photography according to Charles Lang, owner of Photo Lab I. A Bell and Howell DSX 35 millimeter camera, valued at about $249, will also be awarded.

The money will be donated by advertising agents and stores in the mall.

RULES

Prints must be on mount of at least 11" x 14", and a maximum of 16" x 20". The prints must be a minimum of 80 square inches, and a maximum of 320.

Any size film may be used from 110 to 4" x 5" negatives, and Lang stressed that the contest is not open only to those with sophisticated cameras and skills.

Land said most entrants will submit one or two prints, but a limit will be specified on the contest application. Photo Lab I is not responsible for any prints lost or stolen during the contest.

Applications for the competition will be available Monday in the Photo Lab, said Lang.

Lang said interest in photography in the Pioneer Valley has picked up lately but he added that there has not been enough "channeling of information" about photography courses at UMass, said Lang.

"We're trying to involve as many people as possible in photography", he said.

"Sometimes we're too busy in the store to help people with questions about photography. But with a contest like this, people will get ideas from others' ideas," Lang said.

Southwest loses electricity last night

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

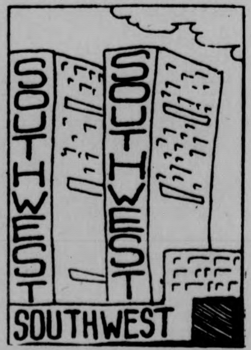
Most of the Southwest dormitory area was without electrical power last night for 90 minutes due to a power failure of a "main line feeder" which supplies better than half of the area with power, according to a Physical Plant spokesperson.

At approximately 8:10 p.m. all power in "about half the dorms and Boyden gyms" went off due to the power failure, said the spokesperson.

The dormitories were on emergency power for the 90 minute wait while they Physical Plant personnel worked to transfer power to another feeder.

Power was restored to affected areas by 9:40 p.m.

The spokesperson said the cause of the outage may have been a short circuit in the system but still called the cause "undetermined".



Increases to $36

GSS fee to rise $5 per semester

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate Fee for academic year 1977-78 will rise five dollars a semester, increasing it to $36 per year. The increase was passed at last night's Senate meeting.

Graduate Senate Treasure Daniel Fisher presented the hike with the admission that the "incredibly short deadline forced on us by the Administration" dicated the large increase. Fisher said the figure represents the "clear advisability of asking for the most rather than the least we can envision ourselves needing."

The combination of reduced student enrollment, increased inflation and the senate's extension of services to its constitutency has resulted in the increase, Fisher said.

He said the preliminary budget projections estimated a "22 percent inflation increase" over last year's budget in the amount of money that groups will request before the Senate in the coming year.

The proposed budget cannot be considered very accurate, said Fisher, because the traditionally funded groups have not begun to request Senate money.

"They are still spending last year's appropriations," he added.

The preliminary budget's due date was moved up this year to faciliate the adoption of a fixed, five-year schedule which is expected to allow incoming students to reasonably compute the cost of a four year education here.

However, the Senate found little to rejoice in the move. Vice-President Timothy R. Austin drafted a motion censuring the Trustees for requiring the budget before it could be accurately set. The Motion passed unanimously a senate disgruntled with the haste needed on their vote, and amended the motion to request that Trustees extend the due date for the fiscal year 1979 budget, due next February.

In other business, the senate heard a report from Federow explaining his involvement in the recent submission of information to the Hampshire County District Attorney alleging illegal practices in the University Health Service.

Federow apologized to the senate for the secrecy surrounding the release of the information, but added "legal considerations" required his silence before the senate.

Also, Austin announced to the senate that tuition waivers and loans were still available to graduate students. He said the Financial Aid Office still had tuition waivers available for Massachusetts residents and loans for American nationals. In addition, the Foreign Student Office administers 200 tuition waivers, Austin said.

The senate voted to approve motions authorizing expenditures to the Graduate Students Employees Union, Outfront, an area news journal, Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group anti-nuclear teach-in and the Commuter Collective Publicity Center. Also voted and passed was a motion that provided for the inclusion of a Senate seat to the Master's Degree Program in Fine Arts English-Writing progaram.

Scientists discuss space antennas and oceanography

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Scientists are discussing such diverse topics as "Spacecraft Antennas" and "Radio Oceanography" at the Campus Center this week.

Antenna propagation is the main theme of the five day conference concluding tomorrow, said Diane St. George, programmer for University Conference Services.

The conference is being sponsored by the International Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers (IEEE), and the International Union of Radio Science (URSI). The IEEE's main concern is with antenna propagation and URSI is involved with radio science, said St. George.

Attending are approximately 750 people, according to Millicent O. Jeffrey, conference registrar.

"There are a lot more people here than we expected," said Robert E. Mcintosh of the University's Engineering Department, chairperson of the steering committee. Only 150 are staying on campus; the others are commuting from area lodgings.

As well as people from all over the United States, the conference is attended by scientists from Russia, Poland, Belgium, Italy, and France.

Four hundred eighty papers are being presented to the conference, said McIntosh.

The University Conference Services has put out two books which are collections of "proceedings". Proceedings are abstracts or outlines of the papers to be presented at the conference by members of the two organizations.

Copies of the proceedings are available for purchase on the basement level of the Campus Center. The cost is five dollars for the URSI book and $15 for the IEEE book.

St. George said, "The conference is particularly large for this time of year. We usually hold large conferences during the summer because we can use dormitory housing."

"The IEEE has been holding these conferences annually for a long time. They (the conferences) are not always held by URSI at the same time."

McIntosh, a member of IEEE, recognizing that UMass has the facilities for a conference like this, proposed the site to IEEE in 1973.

The conference consists of 16 sessions, each dealing with a particular subject. Subjects include "Radio Noise and Interference" and "Aircraft-Mounted Antennas".

Henry Steele Commager, noted historian and a professor at Amherst College spoke on "The International Community of Learning" in the Student Union Ballroom last night.

Historian discusses science, nationalism at Engineer banquet

By KRIS FURRER
Collegian Staff

"Science and nationalism are in combat" said Henry Steele Commager in 2 speech last night before 800 persons in the Student Union Ballroom.

Commager a noted historian, educator, and lecturer was the guest speaker at the 1976 International Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers (IEEE)-Antenna Propagation Society (AP-S) symposium and United States National Committee (USNC) - International Union of Radio Science (URSI) meeting banquet.

Commager contrasted the previous technical topics discussed with some cultural comments. His brief speech dealt with the conflict which exists between scientist and nationalist. The past metaphor that the future lies in the hands of the scientist has become literal in that the survival of life is dependent on the judgement of the scientist, and the extent of his exploitation of the resources, said Commager.

He described how the conflict between science and nationalism has through the centuries plagued and threatened mankind.

He noted the waste from this futile conflict through the loss of many early scientists such as Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin who due to the force of nationalism left the sciences to become our countries founding fathers.

The past division of nationalism and science was further depicted by Commager's statement that although two countries may be at war their sciences are not, for scientists had never been at war, said Commager.

However, he said, the 20th century changed this with the development of the Luftwaffe, the Nazi Germany air force, and the United States Air Force.

Commager concluded that this present situation is a global problem which must be treated jointly, for no country can deal with it individually.

The direction of changing present policies and philosophies must begin with changing the fundamental constitution on which they are based, said Commager.

Commager said then that changes for national sovereignty, an international organization with authority to act, revival of conservatism and posterity a concept which was in the mind of our founding fathers, are the changes which are called for.

Commager, a world renowned historian, is presently a lecturer at Amherst College.

A native of Pittsburgh he has been a member of the Amherst faculty since 1956.

Commager was chosen in 1974 as the honored guest speaker when he was asked to address a British historical group on "Britian through American Eyes".

D.A.'s office to conclude probe of Health Services

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

The investigation of the UMass Health Services now being conducted by the Hampshire-Franklin County district attorney's office may yield results by tomorrow.

"I should be concluding my investigation by the end of this week," State Trooper Thomas O'Connor of the district attorney's office said yesterday.

O'Connor has been investigating the Health Services over the past two weeks in conjunction with the UMass Police. After the findings and recommendations resulting from his investigation are turned over to District Attorney John M. Callahan, a decision will be made as to whether charges should be brought against any Health Services employees or whether the whole matter will be dropped.

"O'Connor said the investigation has gone well, that the Health Services employees have been "cooperative" and that he has had "no problems" conducting his work.

Health Services Director Barry W. Averill said O'Connor "complimented" the Health Services employees on their cooperation and aid in the investigation.

Averill said, "I don't expect anything will be found warranting further investigation."

Averill also said he was very concerned about reports and photographs of records being stored haphazardly in an attic in Marshall Hall. All the records have been removed from Marshall Hall to the Health Services with the exception of piles of x-rays, he said. Space for the x-rays is being sought, he said.

The records, including lab slips, x-rays, and complete patient files had been put in the attic about four years ago, Averill said, without his knowledge of the move.

They were neatly stored and secured until an employee of the Microbiology Department set up a makeshift laboratory in the attic without authorization and moved the records, Averill said.

He maintained that the Health Services is very strict about how records are kept and they never would have been stored in the attic if he had known of the move.

Drinking age hike passes

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Senate, with hardly a word of debate, voted 19-12 yesterday to raise the legal drinking age from 18 to 19.

The bill was amended to allow 18-year-olds to sell or serve liquor in restaurants.

A second Senate vote of approval is needed before the measure is sent to the House where its fate is uncertain. The legislative session is expected to end this weekend and there may not be sufficient time to enact the measure.

Opponents of the 19-year-old drinking age sought to delay Senate action Wednesday, but the tactics were rejected, 23,9.

Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, argued that "failure to vote on this bill would be a terrible abdication of our responsibility."

A similar bill was bottled up in the legislature last year and never moved from the Senate to the House. The bill approved yesterday had been pending in various Senate committees for several months.

Legislative spectators thrown out

BOSTON [UPI] — A dozen persons loudly protesting legislation restricting unemployment compensation in Massachusetts were ejected from the gallery of the House of Representatives yesterday.

Police said eight were arrested.

There were no immediate reports of injuries.

Protestors, members of the Unemployed Workers Organizing Committee, sat quietly through almost an hour of the afternoon House session and then stood and began to yell.

"The unemployed are here today on their feet," one protestor shouted to the bustling 240-member House below. House proceedings came to a halt.

About 20 State House police moved into the gallery to grab the demonstrators.

"Let go of me," one protestor shouted as several police officers grappled with him across worn wooden benches in the public section of the House.

"Let go of my sweater." Four uniformed officers and a plainclothes officer struggled with a strapping protestor who kicked and twisted as police struggled to drag him from the gallery. A reporter saw one officer jab the protestor in the face with his elbow.

A woman protestor tried to intervene in the arrest and a uniformed officer grabbed her from behind by the hair. Another woman protestor hit several officers making an arrest and was dragged down the corridor by three officers and was thrown to the ground.

"Get those cameras out of here," one legislative officer shouted, as he and others pushed news photographers down the corridor.

Leaflets distributed by the protestors at the opening of the session said, "today politicians are going to attack unemployment benefits. Let's set them straight."

The target of the protest was a part of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' comprehensive legislative package to make it more difficult to qualify for unemployment compensation. The proposal was on the House calendar for debate, but no action was taken.

Dukakis has said the state's financially ailing unemployment compensation system may be bankrupt without new restrictions on who gets benefits.

Reporter has trouble while shot watching

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — My journalism teachers never told me it would be like this.

I was on a routine assignment yesterday covering Gov. Ella T. Grasso and state Health Commissioner Douglas Lloyd getting their swine flu shots to dispel concern of the vaccine. The next thing I knew, I was waking up on the floor with cold compresses being applied to my head.

Friends who had worked in Vietnam had told me the blood and gore sometimes turned their stomach and made them feel queasy.

But fainting while watching someone else get vaccinated. What will they think of back home in Monroe, N.Y.?

Well, my seventh grade teacher wouldn't be exactly surprised. I took a header in a similar situation there. But that time at least I was the one getting the shot.

My parents had always wondered why I went into a field fraught with danger — but I think they had in mind the perils of a battlefield, not the hazards of the Hartford Civic Center.

The session began yesterday with Mrs. Grasso cheerfully taking off her plaid jacket and baring her arm to launch the vaccination clinic there. She told a group of reporters we had to follow her lead and set a good example.

I quietly demurred.

Actually, I purposely did not watch the governor get her shot, knowing my past record. I kept my eyes on her face and avoided looking at the Buck Rogers-like airgun that popped the vaccine through her skin.

Mrs. Grasso's presence was meant to boost public confidence in the innoculation program. After taking the shot, she expressed total trust in the program. Perhaps those brave words gave me the courage to watch Lloyd roll up his sleeve.

That was a mistake. When I came to, I told the doctors I was fine and had to get to a telephone to call in my story. They said no, I couldn't walk. They didn't want to take a chance on another collapse

We compromised.

I may be the only reporter ever carried to a telephone by stretcher with a security escort.

Pill, gender—unrelated

BOSTON [AP] — Researchers say taking the pill has no apparent effect on which sex chidlren will turn out to be, even though earlier reports said women who use oral contraceptives are more apt to have girls.

Harvard researchers say they found that of 6,109 children born to Boston area women who took the pill, the babies were divided almost evenly between boys and girls.

Their findings contradict a widely publicized report two years ago by a team of Hungarian doctors.

The Hungarians said that of 560 infants born to women who had taken the pill, 46 per cent were male. And of the 170 babies born to women who had been on the pill more than two years, only 34 per cent were boys.

The report was published in 1974 in the Lancet, a respected British medical journal. The Harvard rebuttal was scheduled to appear in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Kennedy criticized for 'inheritance'

BOSTON [Compiled from wires] — The Republican challenging Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., portrayed the 14-year Senate veteran yesterday as a spoiled rich kid who inherited his Senate seat and couldn't hold the only position of responsibility he ever had.

In addition he accused the senator of lying in his reason for not agreeing to more campaign debates.

Robertson also said he was not trying to embarrass Kennedy by pressing demands for more debates.

"Why was the post of majority whip taken away from him?" Michael Robertson asked at a news conference. "I've never lost a position of responsibility that was given to me."

"The only leadership role he (Kennedy) held in the Senate, they took away from him," said Robertson, 41, president of the world's largest drapery manufacturing firm.

Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., ousted Kennedy as assistant Senate Democratic leader in 1971, 17 months after Kennedy's involvement in an auto accident on Chappaquiddick island in which campaign worker Mary Jo Kopechne was killed.

The incident has not been an issue in Kennedy's campaign for a third full Senate term. Kennedy lost his driver's license and received a suspended sentence for leaving the scene of an accident.

Robertson's attack on the 44-year-old Democrat was the sharpest to date, an aide said. "His strong language was intentional," spokesman Martha Bernard said.

Robertson has little chance of unseating Kennedy Nov. 2, polls show. Kennedy has raised more than $600,000, while Robertson has about $130,000.

"I get discouraged when I already see ... it's really predetermined that Ted Kennedy will win Nov. 2," Robertson said.

"Does he inherit this job?" Robertson asked. "He never held another job in his life until he was elected to the United States Senate. He never did anything else ... Does he get it because his name is Kennedy. He doesn't even have to campaign for it."

Kennedy won a Senate seat at the age of 30 in a special election in 1962 to succeed John F. Kennedy. Kennedy easily defeated his first Democratic opposition in 14 years in last month's primary.

Neither Kennedy's succession to his brother's Senate seat nor the Chappaquiddick incident were issues in the 1970 reelection campaign, newsmen who covered the campaign said.

Nazi helpers facing charges for cruel acts

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Immigration and Naturalization Service yesterday began procedures to deport three alleged Nazi collaborators, one living in Connecticut, accused of committing atrocities during World War II.

The Justice Department announced the INS ordered two former Latvians and one former Lithuanian to appear before immigration judges on Nov. 15 on charges they violated immigration laws because of their wartime activities.

The notices were served on Boleslavs Maikovskis, 72, of Mineola, N.Y.; Karlis Detlavs, 65, of Baltimore, both formerly of Latvia, and Bruno Kaminskas of Hartford, Conn., formerly of Lithuania.

The Justice Department, after investigations in Israel, charged the three with having "performed, participated in, advocated or acquiesced in activities and conduct contrary to civilization and human decency on behalf of done of the 'Axis' countries...."

The agency said it has 80 cases under "active investigation" to determine if there is sufficient evidence to deport them from this country.

Kaminskas was alleged to have participated in executions, shootings and the selection of Jews for execution and assaults.

Maikovskis was accused of participating in the selection of Jews for execution and in assaults on individual and groups of Jews as a member of the Latvian Police Department in Rezekne, Latvia, in 1941 and 1942.

Saxe case ends in mistrial

BOSTON [UPI] — The armed robbery-murder trial of Susan Saxe, a college honors graduate who turned to revolutionary politics, ended yesterday in a mistrial because of a hung jury.

Ms. Saxe, charged with two counts of armed robbery and one count of murder in connection with a 1970 bank robbery in which Boston patrolman Walter A. Schroeder was murdered in a hail of gunfire, still faces up to 12 years in federal sentences for the robberies of a Philadelphia bank and a Massachusetts National Guard armory.

Suffolk County District Attorney Garret H. Byrne, when asked whether he would seek a retrial on all three indictments, answered firmly; "Yes."

Chief Defense Attorney Ms. Nancy A. Gertner said she was disappointed. "We had wanted an acquittal," she said.

Gertner's partner, Thomas G. Shapiro, talking with reporters after visiting Ms. Saxe in her jail cell, said: "She feels the same way everyone feels — disappointed."

The six-man, six-woman jury, which Tuesday told Suffolk Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin it was "hopelessly deadlocked," failed to reach a verdict after five days of sequestered deliberations.

Susan Saxe

McLaughlin warned the jurors "this means there could be a retrial" and told them not to reveal why they could not reach a verdict against the former member of the FBI's Ten Most Wanted List.

"These indictments are still live indictments," the judge said. "I will declare a mistrial on each indictment."

Three months after graduation from college, Ms. Saxe and five others allegedly took part in the $26,585 robbery of the Brighton branch of the State Street Bank and Trust Co. in which Schroeder was gunned down.

McLaughlin Tuesday instructed the jurors to again attempt to reach a verdict against the former magna cum laude student despite their deadlocked position.

Jury foreman Dennis Lee Milford wrote a note to the judge Wednesday saying, "We are numb from this discussion."

McLaughlin said details of the deliberations should be kept secret because "it was apparent" that if the "long and agonizing deliberations were to become public, it would be even more difficult to obtain a fair and impartial trial in the future."

McLaughlin stopped short of ordering reporters not to attempt to interview the principals in the case, although he said several times undue publicity could damage chances for another trial.

707 crashes into schoolyard

LA PAZ, Bolivia [UPI] — A U.S. Boeing 707 cargo plane with a three-man American crew faltered on takeoff yesterday from the Santa Cruz, Bolivia, international airport and plunged into a schoolyard where children were playing and into a line of people waiting to buy kerosene.

The Bolivian Aeronautics board said an estimated 60 persons were killed when the empty plane with no passengers aboard crashed at the edge of the airport. Newsmen at the scene said the death toll was closer to 100 and that the three American crewmen apparently were among the victims.

The Aeronautics Board said the plane, identified as an American-owned jet of the Rodel Enterprises Co. of Miami, arrived yesterday from Miami with cargo and had just taken off from Santa Cruz' El Trompillo airport for the return flight to Miami when the crash came at 1:32 p.m. EDT.

The crew of the plane was identified tentatively as pilot Charles Baldwin, co-pilot Lee March and engineer Leslie Bennett. There was no further identity of the men but the board said the plane bore North American registration No. 730-JP.

Radio reports from Santa Cruz, a city of 50,000 persons some 350 miles southwest of the capital city of La Paz in the tropical lowlands of central Bolivia, said the jet sliced into the Placido Molina school and careened into nearby houses, setting a number of fires when its fuel burst into flames. A number of children were playing soccer in the school yard when the flaming debris struck.

Nearby a long line of people were waiting to buy kerosene. The plane slashed across the schoolyard and hit them before it wound up in front of the swimming pool at the William Bendeck football stadium a few hundred yards away from the airport.

The La Pez afternoon newspaper Ultima Hora reported from Santa Cruz, an important trade center for sugar cane, coffee, tobacco and rice, that authorities had removed 20 charred bodies from the debris, most of them schoolchildren. Police and firemen raced to the scene to aid in the rescue work and to try to put out the series of blazes touched off by the crash.

In Dallas, Tex., a spokesman for Braniff International said the plane belonged to a cargo airline called Jet Power, Inc. based in Miami. However, Lloyd Aero Boliviano, which also flies freight between Florida and Bolivia, said in Miami that the plane was part of the fleet of Rodel, a Miami-based company. The plane was reported under charter to LAB. Neither Rodel nor Jet Power spokesmen were immediately available.

Nukes dangerous—but not enough

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission said yesterday the environmental impacts of atomic fuel reprocessing and waste disposal are greater than previously estimated but still not great enough to stop the licensing of nuclear power plants.

Responding to a federal court order that temporarily blocked licenses for power plant construction and operation, the NRC proposed interim guidelines to allow a resumption of licensing using the new environmental impact estimates.

NRC officials said they hope the proposal can be adopted within three months, allowing work on 49 reactors to proceed for about 18 months while a final analysis is prepared.

Officials said failure to adopt the interim guidelines for 18 months might cost up to $3.6 billion because of construction delays and the use of more coal and oil as power plant fuel. In addition, they said, there could be between 27 and 3,200 premature deaths caused by extra coal smoke pollution.

The agency said its new findings, presented in an inch-thick report, included minor revisions to many environmental impact estimates made by the now-defunct Atomic Energy Commission in 1972 but offered "significant" changes in only five areas.

Major changes included:

— A 54.3 per cent increase in the amount of land permanently committed to waste disposal, from 4.6 to 7.1 acres per year.

Mummy found completing link

ANN ARBOR, Mich. [UPI] — After almost 80 years of detective work, archeologists have finally found the grandmummy of crusty old King Tut.

University of Michigan scientists announced yesterday they have identified the remains of Quin Tiy originally uncovered in Egypt's Valley of the Kings in 1898.

The queen, who played a major role in shaping ancient Egypt's society, lived about 1300 B.C. She was the grandmother of King Tutankhamen, whose mummified remains were discovered in 1922 in the same area.

Dr. James E. Harris, who headed the team that identified the mummy in Cairo, said Queen Tiy is considered the missing link in the royal Egyptian lineage.

She was the mother of King Akenaten, the first pharoah to adopt monotheism by establishing sun worship as the official religion.

Her identification was determined after years of classic investigation. Her body was found in a tomb with other Egyptian royalty in 1898, but grave robbers had stripped all identification. Scientists of the time quickly decided they didn't know who she was.

The queen and several other unidentified mummies, listed as "Jane Does," were placed in a sealed chamber in Cairo, but the location of the chamber was later lost. An Egyptian museum curator accidentally found the mummies two years ago, and he asked Harris to seek an identification.

Harris said the big break in the case came when scientists started using a 3,000-year-old strand of hair encased in a small gold casket that was found in King Tut's tomb in 1922.

Professor focuses on SE Asian agriculture

By ROSE CONWAY
Collegian Staff

A UMass geology professor said that many human and agricultural resources are wasted in Southeast Asia, at a meeting of Issues in Agriculture last night in the Campus Center.

Dr James A. Hafner, who has traveled extensively in Southeast Asia, focused his talk on "Third World Agricultural Development in Southeast Asia."

Hafner said 85 to 90 per cent of the people living in Southeast Asian countries consider rice an institution as well as the basic staple of their diet.

Hafner stressed the lack of adequate technology as being the major problem, and especially cited the areas of fertilization, irrigation, and absence of modern machinery.

The farmers have no control over environmental factors, and no technology to offset this, said Hafner.

These problems make necessary for Southeast Asian societies a labor-intensive economy. Therefore, in off seasons, Hafner said, there are extremely high rates of unemployment.

However, Dr. Hafner said some effort and progress was being made to correct this situation.

Every country is trying to develop irrigation systems and a mechanized plower has been made available to farmers, as has "Miracle Rice", a superior, disease-resistant grain, said Hafner.

Unfortunately, many of the products or programs being offered or experimented with are made inefficient by their high cost to the average, poor farmer who cannot afford them, politically-inspired government resistance, or considerations of the complex problems of population relocation and cultural disruption.

Hafner said the problem of increasing the food production in Southeast Asian countries depends on much more than simply improving the grain and importing higher technology.

He also cited the need for education, improved transporation systems, better health and sanitation services and marketing systems in addition to new technology.

A whole structural change must be implemented to aid these nation's economies, he said, while still recognizing the ways of life of the individuals involved.

"The implications and dimensions of this problem are very broad," Dr. Hafner said.

"I tried to do what I could to represent the press while I was at UMass," Gluckler said, "but you have to expect these things to occur. It can be irritating at times.

"We will handle press releases for student groups," said Melley, explaining how the office helps student organizations.

"We work very closely with the Collegian, and treat them just like an outside newspaper, providing them with all of the information we provide the local papers, plus an occasional 'scoop.' "

Returning to his hopes for the future of the University in public life, he said, "We try to tie the events going on in the world with our expert's views here on campus.

"The education writers were covering student unrest during the latter part of the '60s, so the public doesn't know about the classroom innovations that went on during that period," Melley said. He stressed that one solution would be to have the papers give separate coverage to campus crises, while not neglecting positive, if less sensational, developments in the education world.

"Busing is a current example of this kind of limited reporting. Right now, that is the only issue in the Boston public schools that people are hearing about," Melley said.

Throwing objects off the towers of the Southwest dorms is an example of sensational coverage by local papers, he said. Melley said that the office is being truthful with the media about this. The problem does exist and measures are being taken to discipline the students involved, he said.

"Things are getting better," Melley remarked. "We've gone from one crisis to another. There's a sense of doing positive things now, instead of putting out fires.

"We have an infusion of new spirit in the University administration and faculty. We've finally been able to fill some positions that have needed tilling, such as that of provost.

"I think we're going to have a lot to talk about," concluded Melley optimistically. "This is going to be a pretty good year."

Issues unanswered

But what about next time? Who is going to explain in 1976 that all the people who felt they got burned in '72 should "try again" for another bogus challenger? For years from now there will be two entire generations — between the ages of 22 and 40 who will not give a hoot in hell about any election, and their apathy will be rooted in personal experience. Four years from now it will be very difficult to convince anybody who has gone from Johnson-Goldwater to Humphrey-Nixon to Nixon-Muskie [sic] that there is any possible reason for getting involved in another bullshit election.

Dr. Hunter S. Thompson
Fear and Loathing on the Campaign Trail '72

Discussion of race, the cities, and ecology remain mute while the press editorializes on Carter's licentiousness and Ford's mental mediocrity.

Discussion of race, the cities and ecology remain mute while feminists in butch and Bishops in drag fight the abortion war as if it is a presidential issue.

Race, the cities, ecology are unmentioned in the debates. They are the last things on the mind of the electorate.

People don't want to think about the fact that blacks, Chicanoes and Indians do not fit into our society in any substantial way. We label it the "Black problem" and leave it there. People do not want to realize that man is an ecological factor with no right to waste or pillage the resources in the name of progress. People don't want to admit that our great centers of civilization are unhealthy, inhuman environments.

We shall continue to get polluted and paved over and built up and destroyed by our own passivity which is only reflected in the electoral process. We will be afraid, uneasy, about pulling the curtain behind us and seeing our choice: Ford-Carter. It will scare us careless.

Despite the reality of a vote; our own tangible, democratic toy, we realize that it makes no difference. The choices were made long ago.

A choice between parties which; when we take away the semantics of the convention platforms — is no choice. But we accept that; the choice is simpler, more justifiable. The system survives.

American government was formed from a mold which encouraged and depended upon rational political activism. From the swamp yankee gun toters of New England to the intellectuals of Virginia, voting provided the common denominator.

But somewhere that bond has been lost. The electoral process has become not an active process but a passive process. The candidates and the voters refuse to confront real issues and here the alternatives leave the country benign.

It would be foolish to assert here though that the American people don't realize this. Jimmy Carter built his machine by almost promising a difference, a choice as he trudged his populist campaign through the snows of New Hampshire, Iowa, and Massachusetts last winter. That is the possibility of a choice, of meaning to an individual's vote was used well by George Wallace, inspired with Fred Harris's New Populism and was finally manipulated by Jimmy Carter with his "Good as the American people" speeches. For a while this was a very tasty morsel for the electroate.

But Carter started to fade as he spread himself across the country. He met Richard Daley, he met union bosses, senators and corporate executives. And finally, he sat comfortably in New York City, far above the unnatural paved world of street violence and white racism, and watched as Madison Square Garden was transformed into a bland television studio. The electorate cowered from the issues once and for all on that August night.

Ignore nature's warnings. Ignore Harlem, South Boston, and Chicago's South side. Turn on the news, stay up for Mary Hartman. We will vote for Carter because he is a Democrat. We will vote for Ford because he is safe. We have performed our democratic role. We are pure and concerned.

But it is not far in the future when our neglect, our acquiescence, our self centeredness will find us very deeply scarred, merely because we didn't have the concern, the sheer patriotism and courage to be an active democratic people.

Jocular vignettes

Here is a potpourri of revelations. Setting aside the pen of mordant satire for a week, I offer instead aphorisms from the Wilding files. These are times when every headline makes one shiver, so for a couple of instants turn from the tribulations to the trivia. I've received these bits of information from various horses mouths. The stuff isn't of tremendous importance, but the horses were kind to me. Thus when they requested that I include their anecdotes, I couldn't bring myself to say "nay".

Off the coast of New Guinea there is an island named Anir. Several years ago Anir was being terrorized by rats, huge and ferocious monsters, who were harassing the natives and helping themselves to the island's garbage.

The beleaguered authorities finally imported a shipment of voracious cats to Anir. Recent reports have it that the Aniran rats are even plumper and more jaunty. It appears they ate all the cats.

Tom and Jerry pales by comparison.

Jequirity. This is not a legal term nor a game show that Art Fleming used to host. It is simply the name of the black seeds of the licorice loved by Indians and used in making beads for tourists.

I have no idea why I'm telling you this.

Then there is the ditty from Vatican City.

"Daisy, Daisy
I'm half crazy
Over Pope Pauls point of view.
It may lead to world starvation
But constant procreation
Is what we're for,
It says in your Encyclical made for two."

I have vowed to the heavens and the stars to follow in the footsteps of Martin Luther and nail the above rhyme to the gate of Vatican City. It means that much to me.

The greatest heretic of this century is undoubtedly Bertrand Russell, the philosophical gadfly who was universally scorned and belittled for espousing common sense. When sent to prison as a pacifist in WWI, Russell was asked by the warder the conventional questions — name, birthdate — and finally religion. Here is Russell's description of what ensued. "'I am an agnostic,' I said. The poor man — a very decent sort — looked bewildered. 'A what?' he asked. 'Agnostic', I repeated. He said 'Would you be so good as to spell that out sir?' So I spelled out a-g-n, and so on. When the warder read the strange word he had written he looked up cheerfully and said, 'Well, there certainly are a great many religious sects — but I'm sure they all worship the same God."

And this month's award for "turning a phrase" goes to a Shakespeare buff whom I overhead praising the "The Timing of the Screw". He was a Cockney, I think.

And finally I learned by way of Leo Rosten, of "Joys of Yiddish" fame, that until recently in Argentina, well-bred gentlemen would compliment a lady by murmuring, "Ah, what a lovely bosom."

P.S. to Charlotte Allen: I do not approve of this.

Where is the media, Mr. Nader?

To the Editor:

I asked Ralph Nader, "Where is the media?".

Concerning the Big Government — Big Business de facto alliance of which he spoke, I contend that the media is their vehicle. And that it is through the media that we are fed the nibblets of our dysentery.

Mr. Nader rose to the question well, but it is not an easy one with which to deal, especially politically. [Nor do I think that I presented the question — contention so clearly.]

I mean to express my regrets to Mr. Nader for seeming to badger him with my "where is the media?" question, as if he should or could have made account for their physical absence. I meant, "Where fits the Media?" — in the hierachy of the bedamned, for I wonder if they are not very much a third part in the alliance, perhaps even in control.

Case in point: Has anyone seen the recent Arco Tricentennial Questionnaire — appearing in many of the "respected" news weeklies, dailies etc.. It is nothing less than absolutely programming. You or I might not "eat it up" [23 nibblet-questions in this case that take you right down the road to the 1984 goodisbad- badisgood understanding], but the fact that it is there [see for example, Newsweek 6-21-76, Page 20] is the point. Isn't Newsweek as responsible for the brainwashing as Arco?

[Many times more lethal than what's in print, of course, is that which is imprinted on your brain for you, as you sit groggily before the television.]

Mr. Nader can't do everything, God knows; and who wants to go up against the media? What can? And how?

As the media every-increasingly inculcates the foundation of our values, we should primarily be alerted to it. We weren't.

Another UMass male

To the Editor:

I direct this editorial to the unsigned feminine twosome who so eloquently put down the grossly generalized UMass male. Your argument leaves me with many questions ...

First of all, exactly what kind of guy are you looking for? Should the male intelligently, warmly, and sincerely ask you of your interests, listen attentively, and then ask you to bed? Or should it stop at the questions?

Also, I'm unsure of your true desires in meeting your "ideal" guy. Is it that you're searching for a particular style in social and sexual approach, rather than leaving it up to the choice of your sex maniac and inexperienced bore?

It's evident to me from your repeated attempts to meet guys that you're looking for something. Exactly what is it? Tell you what, why don't you go to a party that I'm at, and we'll take it from there ... After all, I'm just another UMass male.

In pursuit of the bottle throwers

To the Editor:

We're writing this letter as friends in support of Brian Turner. As people who live with Brian, we find the accusations against him to be, at the least, unbelievable.

The charges being brought against Brian are extremely serious. Granted, whoever is responsible for tossing the bottle out of Geo. Washington tower at 6:30 Monday evening should be dealt with accordingly. But Brian Turner is not the person to be dealt with.

We feel that the UMass police and the administration are not dealing with this case as an individual incident. Rather they are, simply stated, trying to fry someone's ass for two main reasons.

First, by getting tough with one student they discourage others and make them think twice before they let anything fly out a window.

Secondly, this proves to students that they are actually making progress in catching offenders.

But are they?

They seem desperate to arrest and prosecute anyone, so long as it will get the public off of their backs.

We appreciate the fact that the police are trying to apprehend the individuals who persist in throwing things out of tower windows.

However, we know that in this case they've yet to catch the right person.

Brian Turner is innocent. We support him 100 per cent.

Balancing

By MARTHA NEWCOMB

This column has been very difficult for me to put together because in order to get across the ideals, I have to bring out a personality; or rather, the persona that comes through the writings of Charlotte Allen. Although I don't know her well, I know her and I want to make it clear that this is not a personal attack but an attempt to derationalize her rhetoric of seeming hate and generalization.

I feel as though I have been personally and spiritually affronted by the rhetoric Ms. Allen employs. It is one of dogmatic pedantry aimed directly at one of the cores of human existance — sexuality.

We exist in a natural system of duplicity in which male-female, positive-negative, and the multitude of opposites play an equal role. Equal becaue they provide a balance.

I agree with Charlotte that in the realms of society, the scale is unbalanced by inequality between the "roles" of females and males. The goals of the Women's Movement are ultimately aimed at balance because we necessarily cannot survive without coexistance.

The Movement must begin (and indeed already has) by relegating into society the awareness and recognition that men and women are of the same mind and spirit (not religious) but are not being treated as such. It is not the male of the species but prejudice that is the demon that must be exorcised; and this can only come about from within.

Prejudice and societal norms are not things of substance and shouldn't be treated as such. Each case of these actions is determined by background and situation and should be handled individually. Every day it is the minds of individuals that are being raped by the systems humans exist in; if the minds were not being raped the bodies wouldn't be.

Men cannot be classified as rapists or sexually incomplete any more than women as housewives; yet, this is the manner in which Ms. Allen chooses to deal with the Women's Movement.

I'm tired to the bitterness and the frustration. Where is the action? Not marches to Washington, but communication instead of blind accusation.

If you are a woman and a man says something that you deem to be a sexist remark then you should say so and why; not, cut him off with, "You're a fucking sexist pig!". It can only cause further separation to accuse. After all, the goal is understanding and respect, right?

Science has only begun to explore the realm of human sexuality and many myths that were taken for fact are being destroyed daily. I was offended by Charlotte Allen's gross generalization that the male sexual peak is inclusive in the teen years. If my Grandfather was alive, he probably would have punched her in the nose.

Hate and misunderstanding are the cancers of our society and will ultimately destroy it unless people of conscience work to mitigate them. It is truly not so difficult a task; where the negative is encountered, the positive must balance. That's nature.

Ford's touchdown

By PAUL FISHMAN
and PAULA L. GOODMAN

The civilized world was stunned at President Ford's declaration, during this past week's televised debates, that "there is no Soviet domination of Eastern Europe under a Ford Administration and there never will be." The liberal press, inexplicably, hurled a torrent of abuse upon the shoulders of our Chief Executive. The New York Times (a well-known leftist rag) chortled that it was a "glaringly erroneous statement." The London Evening News chimed in that Ford had dropped, "a clanger." And a spokesman for the National Captive Nations Committee termed Ford's remarks, "preposterous" and "stupid".

Indeed, if our President's assertions are to be properly grasped, they would suggest that Hungary, Romania, Poland, Czechoslovakia and Eastern Germany have been liberated from years of communist domination in one fell swoop. Ford, scratching his head through his football helmet, ratified this conclusion: "The United States does not recognize Soviet domination of Eastern Europe." (White Huse informants confirm that the President was not chewing gum at the time of the statement.)

Running-mate Bob Dole's remarks that Ford "does have a little problem with clarification" on foreign policy decisions give the President's genius for world politics short-shrift. There can be no question that Ford's statements were actually a diplomatic breakthrough of monumental proportions, dwarfing in significance the Treaty of Versailles, the Helsinki Agreement, and the Elks Convention. What years of struggle and negotiation were unable to accomplish, Gerald Ford has achieved in 49 decisive seconds of televised confusion: the people's liberation of seven communist bloc nations.

Reactions throughout the Soviet bloc of Eastern Europe have been swift. Stunned, the 300,000 Soviet troops occupying Poland have begun the awesome task of melting down their tanks into guard railings for national parks.

And, in a scene that reminded many correspondants of the Allied triumph through Paris, thousands of tearful, cheering Czechs lined the streets of Prague as Jack Ford pedelled down Litvak Place in a Red, White and Blue bumper car.

In this age of despair, Ford's optimism in the face of reality is an endearing quality to American voters. Where Richard Nixon's "Peace with Honor" failed miserably, Gerald Ford's "Liberation Through Imprecision" may well reign supreme.

On Friday, White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen explained, "essentially, the thing is over." Analysists were unable to determine whether Mr. Nessen was referring to the verbal confusion, the countries of Eastern Europe, or the state of Ford's mind. Mrs. Nessen was unavailable for comment.

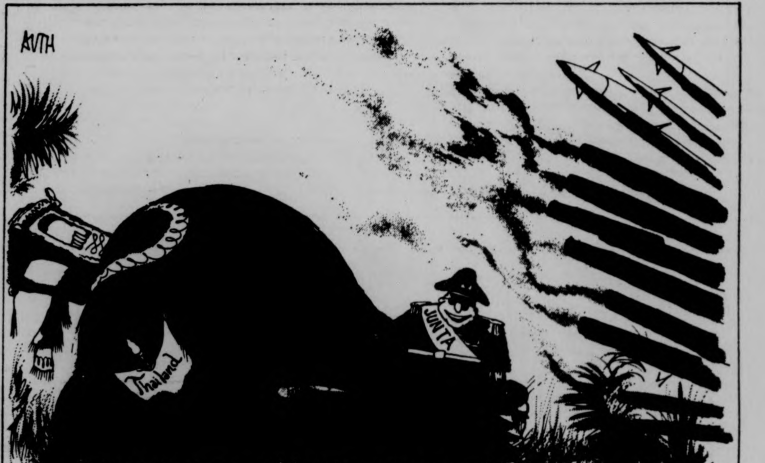
Tension in Thailand

By DAVID MILLIKIN

On October 6, news again reached us all at UMass of a right-wing military takeover of a democratically elected government, this time in Thailand. With the pictures of beaten and bleeding students, of protesters burning alive, and of their well armed military tormentors, we have been brutally reminded of the now familiar process of de-democratization taking place in various places throughout the world.

What is not made so apparent in the news stories and photographs that adorn American newspapers in the role that American tax dollars and interests have played in these too distant tragedies. Just as the economic needs of ITT and the danger of having a socialist alternative succeeding in the midst of an oppressed South America led to the U.S. government and CIA policies which brought about the overthrow of the elected Allende government in Chile, similar policies set the stage for the coup in Thailand: Economic aid was decreased to the moderate civilian government for the past few years while an increasing level of military aid flowed in to support the right-wing military group.



'It was necessary to prevent further violence.'

In October, 1973, mass popular demonstrations ended a 40 year reign to terror by successive military regimes in Thailand by causing the ouster of the two leading generals and leading to the establishment of Thailand's first democratic constitution and elected government. In the last year of these dictators' rule, U.S. economic aid was $39 million, while aid to the military totalled $68 million. With the beginning democratic rule it was inevitable that the Thai people would begin to normalize relations with their neighbors in the interests of demilitarization and local stability. Because Thailand's 'neighbors' included the new Viet Nam, Laos, and Cambodia, the U.S. response to Thailand's move toward democracy was an immediate decrease in the economic aid to the elected government (down to $17 million by 1975), while military aid to the powerful right wing was increased to $83 million.

The drop in economic aid disrupted public aid projects, fueled inflation, and greatly exacerbated unemployment, increasing drastically the flood of destitute people into the already teaming and poverty filled cities. The result was massive human suffering and social unrest, student demonstrations and unprecedented labor strikes. On the other hand, the increased military aid from the U.S. went to the same conservative military generals and structure which had ruled by terror and dictatorship until 1973. This aid and training from the U.S. and CIA enabled the military to retain and strengthen their position in the country and ultimately allowed them to brutally crush popular movements and unrest and destroy the country's march toward democracy with the coup on October 6.

While the democratic government in Thailand had worked to develop stability in Southeast Asia, this U.S. policy of supporting the undemocratic, right wing elements in the country resulting in a dictatorship which is fervently anit-communist to bring armed conflict once again to the embattled people of Southeast Asia.

Since the U.S. backed coup, over 40 people have been killed, 100's injured and thousands imprisoned. All civil liberties and democratic rights have been abolished, and the death penalty re-instituted, to be applied with or without due process of law. In other words these thousands of Thai patriots now in prison may be murdered by the U.S. installed Junta at any time. Among these people are many of my personal friends as well as friends and relatives of Thai students at UMass and other US universities.

On behalf of these people and of Thai people all over the world, I urge you to please write to your senator or congress person, or to Senators Kennedy or Aboureszk, Rep's. Harrington, Drinan or Abzug and demand that they have congress:

—stop all military aid to the junta until a democratic government is elected.

—gain full disclosure of the names of all those killed and arrested.

—release all political prisoners being held without charges.

—ensure a fair and public trial procedure for all those captives to be tried.

Please write these letters to the President, your senator or congress person, or to the junta itself c-o Admiral Sagnad Chaloryu; "National Administrative Reform Council"; Bangkok, Thailand.

Surfeit of absurdity

By J.M. van TOL

One of the pleasures of being a Collegian commentator is that there is such a surfeit of absurdity on this campus to comment on. On some topics, it's just plain hard to decide whether to get angry, or to do the youthful equivalent of clucking one's tongue. A few words on some of this weeks's cluckers.

The latest controversy at the Undergrad Senate concerns an invitation for eight student "leaders" to a weekend-long, all expenses paid picnic in the country with leaders of the University Administration. The raging disputes in the Senate Office center not upon what student concerns might be usefully discussed or negotiated with Administration heads, but rather on who gets to go on the junket. The resultant verbal brawl among contenders for the spots reminds us irresistably of a bunch of piranhas in a bucket being tossed a chunk of meat.

The method of selecting student negotiators currently favored by the SGA President's Office calls for the floating of several disparate lists of candidates in the hope of eliciting the loudest possible protests from those not included on some of the lists. But while loud mouths are valuable negotiating tools, this approach is somewhat lacking in elegance and dignity.

We are personally torn between two superior methods of choosing. Offering the spots as prizes in a lottery holds out the promise of a handsome profit, but also arguably discriminates against the poor. Alternatively, random selection of student numbers by a neutral computer would ensure impartiality (although admittedly the fact that most computer designers are white males could cast some doubt on the validity of the results).

However gracefully the choices are finally made, we hope that the "leaders" keep in mind that the ostensible purpose of this plum, ah, conference, is "to represent a wide range of student viewpoints and concerns". Given that concern, we might also suggest that the representative of the mediocrity viewpoint be nominated from among the members of Baroque Enterprises.

Tch, with the Senate, it always seems to be plums or prunes...

This week's award for Self-effacing Righteousness must surely go to the Collegian's Board of Editors, which saw fit to exorcise "Metawampe's Grid Picks". While the departure of that Spirit may be lamented by neither fans nor poets, the Boards action seems to be a bit gratuitous. That column's author was concerned solely with the beefies, not with the denigration of American Indians. While purging souls is admirable to atone for actual wrongs, attributing evil to petty trivia is at best tedious, at worst self-defeating. Ah well, at least we can sleep sounder for the knowledge that the world is now infinitesimally less racist than it was before...

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Thursday, October 14 — Born today, you are a proud and ambitious individual, but you are not so possessed of either pride or ambition that you allow one or the other to give you an unrealistic view of yourself, your talents, your prospects or your life in general. In short, you are an extremely realistic person who wishes nothing more than to fulfill a natural desire for fame and fortune through existing talents developed to the ultimate. Willing to work hard and long in the interest of your own success, you are equally willing to give time and effort to the betterment of other people's positions in life. Your disdain for those who refuse to cultivate their talents is tantamount to outright dislike; your admiration for those who "make it" through hard work much of little knows no bounds.

Because you are much respected in your own community for your realistic approach to life and living, you stand an excellent chance of becoming a leader. On the other hand, your desire to "do your own thing" in very much your own way may cause you to turn down invitations to take over any top spot, no matter what rewards are offered as an incentive. Your powers of intuition may lead you into activities both profitable and pleasurable; they may also be neglected if you spend too much time seeking your own fortune.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Acknowledge your indebtedness to another and you will take more pleasure from the rewards of your recent efforts. Seek a meeting of minds.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Benevolence brings more rewards than any self-seeking industry. Don't allow another to misinterpret your activities.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Your solicitude is appreciated; even so, you would do well to appear less concerned with other people's personal affairs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You would be better off following than leading at this particular time. Don't expect to be listened to without an argument.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — A number of instances of difficulty in understanding another's motives should be fair warning. Place your confidence elsewhere.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — A combination of work and fair play make your opinion difficult to fault. Play into another's hands — on purpose.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A weakness for life's luxuries makes you easy prey for those who would take advantage of others. Keep abreast of companions' whereabouts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Your quick action should be enough to save the situation on the home front from becoming hazardous. A question of health arises.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Your need to be a power for good is satisfied today through action taken in the interest of another early in the morning.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Perfection eludes you; improvement, on the other hand, is not difficult to come by at this time. Move ahead with a clear purpose.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Take care that in an attempt to expose the weakness of another, you don't at the same time expose a weakness of your own.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Keep alert to the possibility of change where a new project is concerned. You may wish to change your mind regarding the immediate future.

Sugarloaf grabs NE title

The Sugarloaf Mountain Athletic Club won its third men's AAU New England Championship of the year when it brought back the 15 kilometer championship from Manchester, New Hampshire last weekend.

The eleven-man team put four runners in the top 10 on the hilly, windy roadrace course. This year's times were slower than last year, when five of the ten fastest 15-kilometer times in the nation were posted at the Manchester championship. Winner John Dimick from Brattleboro, Vt. ran an excellent effort of 46:53, or 4:58 per mile. The first Sugarloafer was Tom Derderian, in only 21 seconds behind Dimick. Next Sugarloafer was Chris Chambers in 6th, followed by Al Smith, 8th, Tony Wilcox in 10th, Bob Rosen in 18th, UMass Sophomore Jimmy Scheer in 20th, and Ed Sandifer in 31st. Other Sugarloafers included Rich Zawacki in 47th and Andy Jaffe in 57th. Over 200 runners from all over New England started this race.

Sugarloaf won the team prize and the New England Championship with 31 points, followed by the Boston AA, sponsors of the famous Boston Marathon, with 41, and the giant North Medford club, with 67.

Derderian and Chambers graduated from UMass two year ago. Wilcox, Sandifer, Zawacki and Jaffe are currently graduate students, and Al Smith recently moved to the area from Ohio, where he was an All-American in cross country running for Oberline College.

The Sugarloaf club is a long distance running club with about 125 members in the area, both men and women.

To the Editor...

To the Editor:

I feel I must relay to the students of this University a very sad tale indeed.

Being a frequent visitor to the Boyden Bowling Lanes, avid amateur bowler and a staunch supporter of the UMass bowling team, I was appalled to learn the team will not have the support of the University this year due to "other" priorities. This notice comes not at the beginning of the semester, but four days before the first match play at the Coast Guard Academy. Considerable time, effort and money have already been put forth by the members of the team and it now appears to be all for naught.

The team this year is superb and in years past has surely been a "winner". This fact alone has brought this University prestige from many fine schools and communities.

It is truly a shame to see this sport which requires a minimum of financial support from the University, no great physical attributes or power, but a sincere desire and spirit to support one's school by those persons unable to do it in the other sports, go down the tube.

I appeal to the student community and all "sports" everywhere, support your bowling team at Boyden — your program could be next.

Bell leads PAC-8

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — If Ricky Bell were a team, he would be fourth in the PAC eight in rushing.

Bell has rushed at a 201.6 yard a game clip for USC through five games. Latest PAC Eight figures show that only UCLA (325.4), Bell's Trojans (315.6) and Washington (253.8) can top that figure.

USC is the top offensive power with 484.6 yards a contest and Washington State leads passing figures with 289.8.

USC is scoring at a 37.4 point per game clip.

Four different teams share defensive honors.

Washington has allowed just 240 yards per game, while USC has the best ground defense (138.6) and Oregon State the stingiest pass defense (60.0). UCLA has surrendered just 11.2 points per game.

Linksters take Penn. to defend ECAC title

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team will battle a challenging field, and demanding Hidden Springs Country Club in Horsham, Pa. today, as it attempts to capture its second E.C.A.C. championship in three years.

Thirteen eastern state schools will be vying for the 36-hole marathon championship, the most formidable opponents being West Point, last years runner-up, and Indiana University, not to be confused with the Hoosiers from the midwest. Other challenges will be mounted by West Virginia, Gannon, Cornell, Oswego, and Plattsburg, along with more familiar squads from Central Conn., Princeton, Salem St., and U.R.I., the team which defeated the Minutemen in its sectional match last week.

The linksters traveled to Pennsylvania on Tuesday, and acquainted themselves with the surroundings yesterday by playing 36 practice holes. The match is held on two separate courses, the professional, and classic, with the players alternating between the two during the morning and afternoon.

"The classic is the shorter and the easier of the two, however both are in bad condition," said a concerned coach Fan Gaudette. "The greens are rough, and how we putt will determine the match."

Last week's qualifying team will remain intact with senior co-captain Tim Diskin occupying the number one slot. The remaining members of the five man squad are seniors Bob Sanderson and Bill Locke, sophomore Jim McDermott, and freshman Flynt Lincoln.

Last fall in a darkness shortened 27-hole championship, the Minutemen placed fifth, 18 strokes behind perrenial powerhouse Temple. The year before at its home course Hickory Ridge, UMass squeezed by a determined Yale squad by one stroke, for the championship.

Martin sends Figueroa to rescue Yankees

NEW YORK [UPI] — Nineteen-game winner Ed Figueroa was named to start on the mound for the New York Yankees in tonight's decisive game of the American League playoffs but manager Whitey Herzog was undecided about his choice for the Kansas City Royals.

"Why Figueroa?" asked manager Billy Martin of the Yankees, repeating a question he had been asked. "How's 19 victories this year for a reason?"

Herzog said he will make his choice from among Dennis Leonard (17-10), Marty Pattin (8-14), Al Fitzmorris (15-11) and Paul Splittorff (11-8).

"I have no idea right now," said Herzog. "It would have been Splittorff but I had him up working in the bullpen. Right now I'm leaning toward Leonard because he's got an exceptional fast ball and throws strikes when he's on.

"Winning is new to me so I didn't really think about selecting a pitcher until now," he added. "I'll go to my room and have a couple of scotches and maybe I'll come up with a gem."

"The shoe is on the other foot," said Kansas City's Hal McRae after the Royals beat the New York Yankees 7-4 Wednesday to send their best-of-five American League playoff to a decisive game Thursday night.

"They're in the position we were in today," said McRae, who broke out of a slump with a double and a triple to help the Royals to victory. "We beat their big man, their ace, Catfish Hunter. He's the man who was supposed to win the pennant for them and we beat him.

"Now we have the momentum. I don't care who they pitch Thursday night, they're just not going to have the same confidence in him as they have in the Catfish."

Fred Patek, the Royals' 5-foot-4 shortstop who drove in three runs, felt Hunter wasn't as effective as he was in the first game last Saturday, when he handcuffed the Royals on five hits to win 4-1.

"You got to get to the man early," said the smallest player in the Major Leagues. "He gets stronger and stronger as he goes. If you don't get him quick, the chances are you aren't going to get him at all. Today his slider was up and he wasn't getting his breaking stuff down and we hit him good. We got him out early and that was the game.

Baseballers hang on again, 10-9

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Entering the ninth inning of a baseball game, a six-run lead will usually prove to be more than enough to win. But for the second straight game, American International College came from behind and almost tied the UMass fall baseball team.

But unlike last week, the Minutemen didn't have to win the game in the bottom of the inning with some last-minute heroics. This time, UMass held on to beat the Yellow Jackets, 10-9, yesterday at Lorden Field.

UMass trailed, 4-2, going into the seventh, before a pair of two-run home runs gave the Minutemen the lead. After first baseman Bill Hendy singled, rightfielder Bob Alves hit a roundtripper which barely cleared the fence in left. Then, following a base hit by leftfielder Art Chianese, designated hitter Chris Koperniak rapped almost a carbon copy of Alves' shot.

The Minutemen scored what proved to be four very necessary runs in the eighth, on a walk to centerfielder Mark Sullivan, a run-scoring double by catcher Dave Oleksak, and after a walk to Hendy, an RBI single by Chianese. Hendy, who moved to third on the hit, came across on a wild pitch by AIC reliever Frank Green. Chianese, who stole second, went to third on the wild toss and score as Koperniak hit into a fielder's choice.

AIC, though, wasn't quite ready to call it quits. After a single and a walk, centerfielder Richie Gerard rapped a two-run double, and moved to third on a single. Gerard scored on an error by UMass third baseman Art Weinslaw, while another tally came across on a wild pitch. After Yellow Jacket third sacker Bill Cornetta rapped out another run-scoring single, he was thrown out trying to stretch it into a double by Alves.

The Minutemen's 15-hit barrage was led by Koperniak's three hits and three RBI's, Alves' three hits and two ribbies, Skribiski's two hits, and Chianese's two hits and one RBI.

The Yellow Jackets, meanwhile, got two hits out of Olinski, two hits from Cornetta, and a total of five extra-base hits out of their 11 overall.

UMass, which lost to Springfield College, 4-2, last Monday, upped its record to 6-3 with the win. The Minutemen close out their fall season tomorrow with a 1:00 doubleheader against Dartmouth College at Lorden Field.

Yankees tight in Howard show

So it all boils down to one game to decide the American League championship.

The series between the Yankees and the Royals has been a good one. The National League's championship series was another ho-hum affair with the Reds once again, taking three straight games to win yet another NL title.

With ABC doing the playoffs, we were subjected to five consecutive days of Howard Cosell, who also did Monday night football.

Many people were surprised that Cosell was selected to do the playoffs. After all he has spoken out against the sport on numerous occasions. But of course this all changed when his network got a big baseball broadcasting contract.

Too bad he didn't do the National League playoffs. Then we could have been rid of him as of Tuesday afternoon.

One thing ABC tends to do is overdo things. For example, on Sunday afternoon we saw as much of Mrs. Jim Lonborg as we did the former Red Sox pitcher.

As for today's game, the Yankees should be the favorites because the game's in their own ballpark. But don't sell the Royals short, they've been in pressure situations before.

The Royals were hurt this year by losing the ace of their pitching staff, Steve Busby. But their other pitchers came through and they beefed up the staff by adding guys like Larry Gura and Andy Hassler.

The Yankees must have been mighty confident after winning Tuesday night's game. After all they had their ace, Catfish Hunter going against one of their own castoffs, Larry Gura.

However, Hunter was working on only three days rest instead of the normal four. Maybe Billy Martin was thinking ahead to the World Series.

Now the Yankees have to decide whether to use Ken Holtzman, Ed Figueroa or Doyle Alexander tonight. One thing Holtzman has going for him is playoff experience, as did Hunter and Dock Ellis, who ironically own the Yankees playoff wins.

The last time Holtzman was in the playoffs (last year against the Red Sox) he was knocked out early. This year he did not have a good record against the Royals.

One thing the Royals could use is the long ball. But John Mayberry hasn't been too productive this series. Neither was Hal McRae until yesterday.

But the Royals have been getting timely hits from guys in the bottom of their order. Guys like Freddie Patek and Buck Martinez have come through when needed.

The Royals have come a long way in eight years. Everything was going against them this year and they still survived. That's the sign of a good ball club.

So I'll take a hunch and go along with the Royals. Like the Mets in 1969, fate seems to be with them.

Big starter since soph

Fenton fills line

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

At 6'4-235 lbs., there's a lot of Dennis Fenton to fill.

No, this isn't a commercial plug for Lite Beer, instead this is a warning to all the quarterbacks and running backs in the New England area who think they can get the ball past this highly talented and powerful senior defensive end.

If you don't believe me, just ask the Toledo, Maine, Harvard or BU backfields that attempted to run over or past him, and you'll see how successful they were in budging him an inch.

So far this season, Fenton has been a standout in anchoring the Minutemen's defensive front line. In Saturday's game against BU, the Springfield, Mass. native turned in another stellar performance as he successfully disrupted the Terrier's running attack. For his defensive excellence he was presented the game ball by coach MacPherson and his fellow teammates after the game.

In the previous Minuteman game against Harvard, Fenton was honored as the ABC-Chevrolet "Defensive Player of the Game" for his performance in which he made seven solo tackles and assisted on another.

"I am very honored that I was chosen defensive player of the game," Fenton said. "But to tell you the truth, I feel that I could have played a lot better than I did," Fenton said modestly.

After spending his freshman year on the JV football squad, Fenton found himself a home starting in the UMass defensive line since his sophomore year, and has improved steadily each campaign.

"Dennis has played three years for us now, and he's better now than we ever thought he would be," Minuteman football coach Dick MacPherson following the Harvard game. "He's the hardest working individual we have on the squad," MacPherson continued.

Don't think that MacPherson is kidding around when he says that Fenton is a hard worker.

"Sometimes after practice when I feel that I need some extra conditioning, I run up and down the steps in the football stadium. It keeps me in good condition and it also better prepares me for the wrestling season in the winter," he said.

An All Western Mass. football player while at Springfield Classical, Fenton really had his mind made up since he was in the 10th grade that he wanted to come to UMass.

"When I wrestled in high school, our team would come to UMass once a year for a wrestling tournament and I came to know the UMass wrestling coach, Homer Barr and he really impressed me as person and as a wrestling coach," Fenton said.

Not only did UMass have a lot of interest in Fenton during his high school years, but Penn St. also expressed some in him.

"I heard from them kind of late in the year, and it was very tempting, but I decided to go to UMass anyway," he continued.

With all the budget cuts that have hampered the growth of th UMass football program, Fenton has no regrets about passing up an opportunity to play at Penn St. where football is king.

"No, I don't have any such regrets," he said. "However, I am very sad to see a lot of the coaches leaving because of th situation here at UMass," he continued.

When Fenton finishes banging around quarterbacks or pounding on little halfbacks trying to run around his side when the season ends, he will put on a new uniform, and compete for the UMass wrestling team.

The New England Heavyweight Wrestling Champion in his high school days, Fenton has been one of the outstanding heavyweight wrestlers in the New England scene for the past three years.

"Wrestling is a lot different from football," Fenton explained, "in that football is a team sport and you combine the talents of your teammates to beat an opponent. In wrestling it is very indididualistic. It's you against your opponent and there is no one who can help you beat him but yourself."

Fenton claims one of his biggest influences in life was the late Homer Barr former UMass wrestling coach.

"I looked up to him a lot and I admired the way he wrestled. The program is missing something since his death, but our new coach is a product of Homer and I think he will add to the program," he said.

Women harriers breeze, shutout Dartmouth, 15-48

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The biggest difficulty the UMass women's cross country team had in its meet yesterday was stifling yawns as it cruised the course for an easy 15-48 sweep over Dartmouth.

Running without four of their top harriers, the women still managed to sweep the top five places against their Ivy League counterparts. Wesleyan, which was also supposed to run in the meet, cancelled at the last minute, saving the school from the indignity of being overrun.

Engineering the sweep were five familiar names. Julie Lafreniere broke away from her teammates over the last half mile to win the race. Her time of 18:58 was well off her winning time of last week's Williams meet, but considering the low-pressure nature of this race, the 21 second gap was not really significant.

Running second was co-winner of the Williams meet, Johara Chapman. Her time, as well as that of third place Maggie Crowley and fourth finisher Sue Swartz, was slower than that run last week. It was in the next positions that an improvement was shown.

Anne Bradshaw ran her best time as she finished fifth. Monica Scott and Bonnie Bukowski also improved in seventh and eighth, respectively. Also showing improvement were Jeannette Sturman and Cathy Martin, who clipped several seconds off her time.

"I was pleased with this," said Coach Ken O'Brien. "The kids up in front didn't run as well, but the kids further back ran better, which is a plus for us. Most of the kids viewed this today as a workout, so they didn't overtax themselves by working hard."

As planned, the Minutewomen went out and ran a fast first mile.

"They went out about 20 seconds faster than they did last week at the Williams meet, and they all said they felt good, said O'Brien. "Everyone knows they can race well now — we'll rest a little from this, then get some distance work in, then sharpen up next week for the New Englands."

At the end of their grueling week, the women have three wins to show for their efforts. They are also fatigued, both mentally and physically, and have several key people injured. Fortunately, the team has 10 days in which to recuperate and prepare for the first of several post-season tests, the New England Championships.

"I was pleased we did the three days of work," said O'Brien. "I think the three races in seven days, although I wouldn't recommend it as far as a training program, allowed us to compete on a demanding schedule. We didn't do a lot of hard workouts in between, so I guess if we looked at it, we worked on a lot of individual things in the three races, things like fast miles, hill work, downhill work, finishing and so on."

O'Brien also expressed concern for his injured runners. Jane Welzel has a strained back which needs a few days rest. Diane Perry has a pinched nerve in her back which will keep her idle until next week. Debbie Farmer has an arch strain that will also keep her out until next week. The most serious injury is probably Barb Callanan's sprained ankle. Hopefully she will be back early next week as well.

At Long Last Wonderlove

STEVIE WONDER
Songs in the Key of Life
by Craig Roche

Anticipation coupled with dread, waiting for the release date of Motown's Boy Wonder. Finally out, and in my hands as soon as I was told the vinyl made the racks at Sun Records, the whole thing was now between Stevie and me. The release date of Songs in the Key of Life had been delayed more times than you and I have toes, each date time wetting my appetite, each withdrawal increasing my fears. I remember how I had awaited other 'monster' releases, like Harrison's All Things Must Pass, all of which did, quickly. So it was a sado-masochistic anticipation that caused my hands to quiver as Key of Life, Side One slid out of the sienna jacket and onto an eager Dual 1229.

Right off, this is music that is as intimate, surprising and desirable as a lover's wet kiss greeting you when you slip into bed late at night.

For some unknown reason, praise the Lord, this blind kid from Detroit, Mr. Steveland Morris aka Wonder, was born out of synch with the rest of us. What he sees and hears he is wonderfully able to relate to us through his consummate gift of music. This we've known for years, this he has proven with each release. But the two year lay-off created such tension. For us it was in the waiting. It must have been worse for Stevie, for he's let us expect so much.

One listen to Songs in the Key of Life could well reshape your whole concept of music-making. Is there any one album to compare with this? Pepper was supposedly the album of the decade, but now it sounds so dated in parts. Key of Life has music that will be eternal. It is masterful in its scope, it's reaching for heights and goals that everyone in music is content to let slide by. This is music from the performing, composing genius of the last half of the twentieth century.

Sparkling, silver, shining flecks
Of energy flowing from your eyes —
These threading around my mind,
I am drawn to you.

Laughing, earthen chuckles escape merry cheeks
Spiked and tilting with watching you,
I say I am merely amused
But I am entranced.

You look at me strangely and dark corners
Question the hostility in banter.
Why don't you look beneath
I am only trying not to fall in love —

Graffman in Superb Control

by Eric Hansen

Last Thursday night in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall pianist Gary Graffman played to an appreciative but undemonstrative audience of no more than four hundred people. The tepid character of the evening, however, was by no means Graffman's fault. The diverse program of Schubert, Brahms, Prokofiev, and Rachmaninoff left no doubt as to his virtuosity and versatility.

Gary Graffman began playing the piano at the age of three and at seven he entered Philadelphia's Curtis Institute of Music. At eighteen he debuted with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy and he later won the national Rachmaninoff and Leventritt competitions. He then studied with Vladimir Horowitz and Rudolph Serkin. Since then he has toured extensively throughout the United States and Europe.

The recital began with Schubert's posthumous Sonata in C Minor, D. 958. This sonata, like most of Schubert's works, requires a great deal of precision and restraint in execution. Graffman played it with amazing clarity, carefully avoiding and kind of excess that would do violence to Schubert.

This was followed by the Variations on a Theme of Pagannini, op. 35 of Johannes Brahms. This piece offered a marked constrast to the Schubert sonata in that its different sections present a wider range of technical and expressive difficulties. Graffman adjusted to all this perfectly in his performance of Brahms exhaustive treatment of Paganini's theme from his twenty-fourth Caprice.

The most satisfying part of the program occurred after the intermission. Graffman first played the Sonata no. 3 in A Minor, op. 28 of Prokofiev. This sonata was originally composed by Prokofiev in 1907-8 when he was a student of sixteen and revised by him ten years later to be published as the Third Sonata. Graffman executed Prokofiev's strident, uneven rhythms forcefully.

There then followed a number of short Rachmaninoff pieces: two preludes, the G major, op. 32, no. 5 and the A minor, op. 32, no. 8; Barcarolle; and three etudes, the E flat major, op. 39, no. 5, the C major, op. 33, no. 2, and the B minor, op. 39, no. 4. Here as in the rest of the program, Graffman's superb control was very much in evidence, both in the gentle lyricism of Barcarolle or the more tempestuous romanticism of the etudes and preludes.

It was unfortunate, though, that the recital was held in a hall as large as the FAC concert hall. A hall that size is less than ideal for the presentation of small ensembles and solo performers because of the distance it establishes between the audience and the performer, especially when the hall is only one-sixth full. As it was, the situation last Thursday did neither Graffman nor the audience any justice.

Fleet Faculty Feet

by Ann S. Murphy

The last performance of the University Dance Faculty Concert was given in Bowker Auditorium on October 9 to an audience of approximately 700 plus. The program contained a series of eight dances which were all choreographed by the dance faculty and performed with the students.

The first piece "Dance to Dance", choreographed by Marilyn Patton was a fast paced modern with the dancers alternating on and off stage leaping, running, and even hand springing. They also built poses of body sculptures in different groups, conveying a happy and excitable feeling.

The timing of the steps never left the stage empty, therefore never losing the continuity of the dance.

"Rain, Water and Older Containers" choreographed and performed by Andrea Watkins was a serious dance to which she used a large green plastic trash can with which she used to show anger by throwing it around stage, punching it, and bending it as if ripping it apart.

The accompaniment was the sound-track of a crashing surf and her chanting voice, and at one point in the dance, she put the trash can over her head and punched visciously inside it, making some audience members laugh nervously. Watkins probably created this dance with a deep theme in mind which she tried too hard to convey.

Richard Jone's dance "Master of Fate" looked like a space-age drama of the future, with the music being electronicly combined with eerie voices. The robot-like motions of the dancers showed them surrendering to the booming voice of their "master," their faces intense and eyes piercing to the audience.

As the piece continued the dancers in unison tried to break away from this "master" with long reaching movements at last standing tall and moving confidently.

"Master of Fate" was electrifying to watch because of the transitions from inward strict movement to commanding and forthright poses.

"Mountains and Molehills," choreographed by Andrea Watkins, proved easily to be a natural crowd pleaser, as in the concert last spring. A crazy conglomeration of short skit-like dances with singing and speaking, there was an added touch of wit and confidence that made it enjoyable to watch with frequent audience laughter throughout.

Dan Peterson choreographed "Quartet" which was four separate dance styles containing an "Overture", "Two Solos", "Duet", and "Line Dance." Two women and two men danced "Overture" in partners, changing off and on, while "Two Solos" was performed by members doing two separate dances while complimenting eaoh other from opposite corners of the stage. "Duet" was amusing, mimicking the ballroom or social dance and exaggerating the steps with bits of tango, waltz, and cheekto-cheek. "Line Dance" with all four dancers was exactly what the title implied, being similar to a folk dance with the performers never letting their clasped hands break apart.

"Sailing", was a ballet choreographed by Andrea Watkins where in the first movement of the piece the dancers presented themselves in a traditional ballet manner. They wrapped flowing scarves around their necks and finished the dance by whipping them off while lossening their movements.

A huge cloth that was originally the back drop of the set was pulled down by the dancers and tossed up in the air like a sail billowing in the wind. The dynamic, satiny colors of orange, yellow, red, and blue made the dance eye catching.

Dan Peterson created the dance, "Tarcosic Dialogue" which was performed without music, while spoke the words: "questions" and "answers." Taking these words apart syllable by syllabel he put his body into the words and interpreted them, disproving that dance must have music, because he showed that language can be music in itself.

"Turkish Bath" was the last dance in the program exhibiting Richard Jones' skill of creating dance to entertain as well as to show the body reactions.

The women were snakelike and rhythmic sliding across the stage in this one-shouldered jumpsuits to a fast and jazzy tempo. The men boldly presented themselves with suggestive moves with the hips and arms swinging. The timing was rhythmic and harmonious with a proficiency of the dancers awesome to watch.

The sound was clear and loud, but not overpowering with the lighting not differing too much throughout the dances being basicly light or dark with some colors mixed in.

Once again the University Dance Faculty and their students have shown us that the definition of dance isn't all uniform; a series of separate feelings and emotions communicated to the audience through the body. Basically the concert was a crowd pleaser, having us all looking forward to the dancers next production.

Susans in Concert

by Joyce Goldberg

Sounds of classical music and scenes of modern dance were uniquely blended to form "Susans in Concert" at Smith College.

This company under the Smith College Dance Department performed October 1st and 2nd in the Scott Gymnasium Dance Studio which was about half full with only fifty people in attendance.

Featured were Ms. Susan Waltner and Smith staff member Ms. Susan Lowenstein accompanying on piano.

Choreographed and performed by assistant Professor of Dance Ms. Susan Waltner the movements communicated an uplifting mood as her slight figure carved designs through space.

Ms. Susan Lowenstein's clear and confident piano playing separated each of the three modern dance movements, and she appeared in the center of the studio after the first dance to perform with the accompaniment of Ms. Regina Tager to Brahms. The waltzes ranged from light and lively tones to a more sedate and solemn disposition.

At the conclusion of Ms. Lowenstein's performance, the piano was removed from the floor and talented Mr. Chris Henderson subsequently produced some amazing rhythms on a balaphone; a wooden instrument played similar to a xylophone.

Henderson also produced vocal sound affects to the body movements of Ms. Susan Waltner, who danced with an inner sensibility to her body's parts; arousing emotion.

I thought Ms. Waltner danced in feeling of an overwhelming happiness; a oneness with nature as she "fell to the land" and "rose toward the sky."

The evening of music and dance ended on a light note as both Susans teamed up to perform a piece entitled "Puzzle Pieces."

Choreographed by Ms. Waltner and the song "Building a Piece," (composed and played by Ms. Lowenstein) "Puzzle Pieces" was described to the audience by Ms. Waltner as intentionally illustrating the influential people who fit into her life.

The characters were dance-acted by Smith College students, portrayed with the aid of props, a sculptor, a runner, a cyclist, a hugger, a reader, and some dancers.

Ms. Waltner thanked her mother who was seated in the audience, and a pleased audience applauded the talents of the artists.

Because there was no stage the gym was a poor facility to observe dance, because one had to stand to see the dancers.

Some of the neatly dressed Smith audience members actually sat on the floor by the dancer's feet during the performance.

I found this a major fault and don't know why the producers of the show chose a gym in a college where there are better facilities for concerts to take place.

It could have been due to the hasty organization of the production, and according to Susan Lowenstein, Ms. Waltner and she had discussed the majority of the concert plans via cross-country phone and met to rehearse only one week before the show.

"Susans in Concert" impressed me as a demonstration of some innovative styles, including the mixture of modern dance and classical piano.

There was an assortment of tastes from different eras present in the production, leaving something for everyone to enjoy.

CASA LOMA ORCHESTRA TO BE HOP FEATURE

Orchestra has Proven very Popular At Many Other Colleges and Universities

This baroque selection, turned up only recently in a Utah canning plant, reveals to us, more or less from the first time, the surprisingly varied state of the little-recorded Midwestern Fern Jazz of the '20s. This brief and nocturnal blooming of America's only indigenous art form flourished mostly among Veterans of Foreign Wars and their cribbage partners in and around Grafton, Wisconsin, city of choice for those accidentally assigned in the Great War to James Reese, Europes 367th Brigade Colored Infantry Orchestra. A 103-piece band, known as the "Ponderous Ragtime Mistake", it sprang into being from the pen of Gen. Pershing, who thought he was requisitioning baloonists, and was later known in post-war American ballooning circles as "Pershing's Ponderous Ragtime Mistake." By 1919, this was the name of some thousand-odd balloons in the U.S.

Sparty (Melvin) Azimuth is one of the most intriguing characters in Jazz, about whom little concrete is known. Son of an electroplater for the Lagoon Bros. Mfg. Co. from Rudolph, Indiana, he was originally the wireless operator on the ill-fated Zeppelin "Injustice" before being called to join Europe's band. The last message from the "Injustice" was received as it was sucking wind badly over the Straits of Houdini, but the intoxicated and wildly incoherent tone of the distress call was strangely inappropriate for an S.O.S., and has puzzled cryptographers ever since. Upon leaving the Army on a Discolored Discharge, he put his newfound musical knowledge to the test, briefly joining Horus Egg and His Rhythm Washouts for a tour through the South. One of the first Atonal bands in the country, they found themselves ill-received in a Philistine South too Backward to Appreciate their Advanced Arrangements. Frustrated by the prejudice against former wireless operators then widespread in the South, and increasingly unable to negotiate the complex ocarina parts, Azimuth left the band in Blacklist, Arkansas with a nasty room service bill and took off, some still say from religious inspiration, others that he knew where he was going, for Grafton. Until the discovery of this recording, the known facts of his career were few, for he covered his tracks well. There were shady rumors of interstate hair-tonic smuggling during Prohibition, other accounts have him merely balding. In any event, it appears he made contact with the accidental European community in Grafton, and formed the Wild Root Hairdevils with some like-minded fellow veterans of that band. City Hall records reveal a marriage to Claire Deluthe on Veteran's Day, 1928. The Nov. 11, 1929 Grafton Circumciser carries a notice of incorporation bearing his name and that of one S. Nehi regarding a weasle breeding venture. Then we have the Police Gazette for Feb. 1931, noting the recovery of a Melvin Nadir, aka The WildRoot Kid, in cement overshoes, from Lake Champlain.

The music here presented to us bears little resemblance to contemporary descriptions of Midwestern Fern Jazz, with its delicate, impressionistic melodies, its lush textures, its rhythmic sophistication. This apparent disparity is partially dispelled when one realizes that these accounts come largely from the musicians themselves.

"Sure I remembers Sparky," recalled Nelson Biddle, sometime trombonist for the Hairdevils, "he was my cribbage partner in those days. Tall, balding guy with gasoline breath. Always wore a whaleskin slicker, rain or shine, hot or cold. In fact, I think he slept in it. He was very musical, but he had strange ideas. He would always insist on starting a tune in the middle. "If you know how it starts, why bother?" he would say. "I don't got all day, let's get to the good part," he would say. He used always to carry around a hip flask of some kind of terrible stuff, tasted like hair remover. I think also there was some kind of band. It was always tank up on that stuff and then honk, honk, honk. I don't remember nothin' after that."

In keeping with Mr. Biddle's recollections, the piece starts somewhere in the middle, although how much was left out is impossible to say There is first, a loud clamor. Then an extended silence, punctuated by the shouting of Mr. Biddle, apparently in some pain. Abruptly, there is music, though each musician seems to have a different conception of where in the piece to begin. Soon the chaos resolves, revealing a bass saxophone solo by the energetic Dr. Death, who mounts an attack on the instrument anticipating by some years the work of the Maginot line. A loud explosion at this point leaves the musicians unperturbed. A lyric is then offered whose content would even today be risque. A faltering interlude is rescued by a neat four-point landing by Mr. Absinthe, thus revived, the ensemble charges on to what must have been a thrilling climax, had Spark Azimuth any more respect for endings than he had for introductions.

SUGAR AND SPICE AND?
by: Luis Garden-Acosta
"The Medicine Man"

PART I

Willie Wonka — All right, all right . . . a triple cream cup for Christopher . . . a sizzler for June Marie and listen, Wonka's got a new one today!

Kids — What is it?

Wonka — This is called a Scrumdidilyumptious Bar.

Kid — Scrumdidilyumptious Bar? How does he do it?

Wonka — My dear boy do you ask a fish how it swims?

Kid — No.

Wonka — Or a bird how it flies?

Kid — No.

Wonka — No siryee you don't! They do it because they were born to do it — just like Willie Wonka was born to be a Candy Man and you look like you were born to be a Wonkera.

I'm not sure if I was born to be a "Wonkera" but I sure got into it early enough. Not that any of us were born "sugarholics." As a matter of fact, once upon a time, sugar was virtually unknown on this planet earth. The Romans, whose image of natural strength and macho vitality is pushed to sell us on "Roman Meal" never tasted sugar although today Cesaer Salad Dressing and just about all breads contain sugar.

Willie Wonka — Who can take a sunrise, sprinkle it with dew, cover it in chocolate and a miracle or two. The Candy Man, the Candy Man can, The Candy Man can 'cause he mixes it with love and makes the world taste good.

My first "Candy Man" was my father (actually it was my mother but neither she nor I knew at the time that most of the baby food I devoured was "jam" full of sugar). Papi was the original "Sugar Daddy." I mean my father refused to drink anything that wasn't laced with a little azucar. To this day anytime I spy a plate of arroz con dulce ("rice with sweetness" — read that as rice pudding), I think of my father first and a split moment later jump on it. My mother is still uptight because I learned to say Papi first, and only learned to say Mama after I had polished my father's favorite expression: "Where's the sugar."

And why not? That's not a bad question for a kid. You see, sugar like Sister Mary Theresa's ruler, whenever I tried to rip off a cookie in class, is everywhere. Indeed, as Dr. Jean Mayer advises us; "Next time you're in the supermarket, glance at the labels along the aisles and in every food case. Sugar is omnipresent, not just in sweet baked goods and frozen desserts (and soft drinks) but in ketchup, chili sauce and Worcestershire sauce; baby foods; cocktail snacks; "fruit" drinks; salad dressings; canned and frozen vegetables and most canned and frozen fruits; "fruit" yogurt; and, of course, the breakfast cereals, "natural" ones included. Some cereal manufacturers have been known to combine the various grains and separate the sugars on the list of ingredients. Only thus can they keep cereal first on the list. (Though there is no legal requirement that the proportion of ingredients be given quantitatively, they must be listed in decreasing order.)"

— And a lot of other things it seems like: cigarettes, peanut butter, toothpaste and even salt. In fact sugar is by far the leading preservative used by large food manufacturers. The average goody-goody downs 120 lbs. of sugar a year and "76 per cent of it is invisible contained in foods and beverages prepared outside the home."

So there I am, folks, at the height of my pre-adolescent boyhood. Sweat pouring through my starched shirt, I kneel and kneel and kneel and beg and beg and beg this novena to the "Sweet" Heart of Jesus to be over. Without fail every Tuesday afternoon, at least twice during the novena I would swear off "Devil Dogs" and almost in the same breath pray for a "miracle reducing plan." I never got the miracle though after some snotty remarks by the school "physician" I was forced to attend every Friday morning the Brooklyn Hospitals' Diet Clinic. It was my first conscious bout with oppression. Afterall, 10 to 20 per cent of all American children not to mention 35 to 50 per cent of all middle aged parents are today as then overweight. So why pick on me?

Willie Wonka makes everything he bakes satisfying and delicious, talk about your childhood wishes, you can even eat the dishes.

Well, that was yesterday and today a bit slimmer and a lot smarter I'm hip to the fact that sugar or as Peter Frampton calls it, the "White Evil" has been implicated in such diseases as Diabetes, Obesity, Tooth and Gum Decay, Vericose Veins, Stomach Trouble and indirectly mental disturbances (the organic kind as well as Imperialism, Racism and Sexism.)

Who can take tomorrow dip in a dream, separate the sorrow and collect up all the cream, The Candy Man, Willie Wonka Can, The Candy Man Can. The Candy Man Can, cause he mixes it with love and makes the world taste good. And the world taste good cause the Candy Man thinks it should."

ECM's Continental Class

GARY BURTON QUINTET Dreams So Real

By now, it should be obvious to any music listener that (a) Gary Burton is the world's premier vibraharpist and (b) he and his group have created for themselves a totally singular niche in today's music. Their style bears only passing resemblance to previous musical forms, more in the realm of jazz in terms of improvisation, but incorporating country tangents and flirting with odd bits of rock. The dynamics of the present band is the factor that separates it from any other. The brilliant ringing sonority of vibes and two electric guitars, the consistently odd harmonic routes of the solos, and the fleet, multi-directional rhythm make the quintet's interplay a joy to hear and be familiar with.

The sometimes hazy, sometimes angular melodies of Carla Bley have fit Burton's low key sophisticated conception beautifully before (Genuine Tong Funeral on RCA was entirely her composition) and all of her seven pieces on this album have been part of the band's repertoire for some time. So this is a re-investigation of the quintet's more resourceful vehicles, more a showcase for the leader's amazingly involved structural sense than his sidemen's virtuousity.

There is scarcely an improviser other than Burton who could deal so delicately and surely with a piece as subtly fragile as Bley's "Jesus Maria." "Vox Humana" and the title track seem very close to straight ballads, until the harmonic path veers suddenly away from the espected and we are led by Gary's unfaltering vibes down other infinitely varied and introspectively fascinating roads. The more familiar the way becomes, the more one sees what there is to see. Even at my early point of listening, there is quite a lot.

PAT METHENY
Bright Size Life
(ECM)

This first release by the 21 year old guitarist with the Gary Burton Quintet is something of an anomaly. Here is an up and coming guitarist who plays as though John McLaughlin never existed. He plays with the clear golden tone of ans undistorted electric guitar and — get this — he actually follows chord pregressiona. There isn't an non-stop modal monotony here. This is some of the most lyrical guitar playing around. Lyricism practically oozes from the kid's armpits. His solos, even on the faster selections, never degenerate into high-speed scale exercises and, on the other hand, they are never merely 'pretty'. "Sirabhorn" and "Midwestern Nights Dream" particularly standout for their haunting beauty but there isn't a single weak cut on the album. Drummer Bob Moses and bassist Jaco Pastorius should also be commended for their excellent playing, the latter especially for his solo on "Midwestern Nights Dream". Pat Metheny is one of the few young musicians from whom we will be hearing for a long time to come.

—Eric Hansen

KEITH JARRETT
Arbour Zena
(ECM)

Best known for his remarkable solo piano improvisations, Keith Jarrett has provent that he is also singularly adept at dispensing his own particular energy to the rest of his ensemble.

This album features some very good string arrangement arrangements, performed well by the string section of the Stuttgart Radio Symphony Orchestra. Jan Garbarek plays angelic saxophones, a perfect compliment to the Jarrett style.

One of the most outstanding things about Jarrett, even on his solo piano albums, has always been the rich texture of his music. Jarrett, on this album, has made full use of the strings with some lush string arrangements, and has reached a sonority of texture that is nothing less than brilliant. Garbarek is extremely sensitive to this, and the results are rapturous.

The album consists of three long, contemplative Jarrett compositions, each interestingly dedicated by Jarrett. Side one has "Runes", dedicated to the unknown, and fluid "Solara March", dedicated to Pablo Casals and the Sun. Side two is a single, winding composition called "Mirrors", which Jarrett dedicates to his teachers.

Upon first listening, the music seems always poised but never leaping. Repeated listening, however, begin to unfold textures that will continue to keep unfolding through many listenings.

Mark Leccese

JAN GARBAREK
Dansere
(ECM)
TOMASZ STANKO
Balladyna
(ECM)

Both these albums are of a style common to a number of ECM recordings, as they offer a stark, rather arid musical landscape of sharp, cutting horns and reeds over slow, full bass figures and light percussive work on the cymbals.

Dansere features Jan Garbarek, the Norwegian saxophonist who has worked with Ralph Towner, Keith Jarrett, and Terje Rypdal, and who is one of the major figures of European jazz. His quartet includes Bobo Stenson, a pianist who gracefully works thoughtful, halting piano passages. But it is Garbarek who more fully expresses the mood of the album, as his distinctively sharp, reed-like tone of the saxaphones evoke a strange sort of warmth over the wintry broodings of the piano, bass, and drums.

Tomasz Stanko is a Polish trumpeter who is able to carve fiery bursts of expression with his trumpet, although at times he falls into playing pure screech, which weakens parts of this album. He is backed by two other Polish musicians on saxes and drums, and the sax man sounds remarkably like Garbarek. The bass work is done by Dave Holland, who is perhaps the best, and certainly the most versatile, bassist in the world today. Hollands throbbing, bouyant bass lines lend a remarkable feeling of depth to this album.

These two albums embody a brand of music peculiar to Europe, but it is a music of great depth and expressiveness, which is enhanced by the excellence of ECM recording. Neither of these records should be overlooked by anyone interested in progressive developments of that form of music so inadequately referred to as jazz.

—Bob Armstrong

JACK DEJOHNETTE'S DIRECTIONS
Untitled
(ECM)

Good God(s)! Can it really be happening? A major record company like Polydor actually giving challenging, creative, contemporary music like this a push toward the people? Apparently so.

DeJohnette is a super drummer—musician, incredibly talented and uncommonly versatile, having played with more highly respected and highly charged leaders than any skin-stroker in recent memory. Guitarist John Abercrombie, one of ECM's steady stable of super sidemen, and reed player Alex Foster joined forces a while back with Jack to play around with a bit of the "fusion" music and came out with a quite varied recording on Fantasy.

Whereas that album examined some of the newer ways of getting at the music, Untitled doesn't toy, it hits head on in about 360 ways. With the addition of little known Warren Bernhardt on keyboards, the new band exhibits strength, fire, humor, clarity in acoustics and electronics and an overall adventurous sense that buoys them above the slimy swampwaters of commercial complacency and hearkens back to the salad days of Weather Report.

Jack's drumming percolates instead of dominates, freeing the other players to toss in studiedly random interjections on the loosely compelling "Flying Spirits" which develops into a long sinuous insinuation of suggested directions. "Pansori Visions" is legitimate as part of the whole album, but is rather lame on it lonesome. "Malibu Reggae" contains more than a touch of the humor that Zappa made manifest in "Holiday in Berlin" while staying musically intriguing. Warren Bernhardt's very beautiful "Morning Star" and the airy sax duet on "Here Come the Vikings" are well suited to the trademarked ECM sound. There is something not only valid, but also exciting on every cut and that is more than a bargain, it is an event. You will doubtless hear more of this disc. It is among the year's tops. Get contemporary, you all.

— Jack Cahill

Undercurrents of universal love, religious fervor, and Stevie's playful sense of humor run throughout the 21 songs. I hear touches of Sly, the Beatles, much gospel, salsa, and a few amazing jazz licks. From such disparate sources of music emerges an ever tasteful blend, not the confusing potpourri you might expect. And along for the creation of such music are a number of music's big talents. (Face it, who'd turn down a chance to play on an album by Stevie Wonder?), the likes of Herbier Hancock, Minnie Ripperton, Syreeta Wright, and Sneaky Pete Kleinow.

Our man Stevie is able to bring out things in these assembled people that I am sure they didn't know they had in themselves. Shirley Brewer acquits herself most admirably when Stevie steps aside and gives her room to move around on "Ordinary Pain's Reply".

But to dwell on individual cuts would ruin some of the fun of hearing and exploring Songs in the Key of Life, so I'll forgo that and merely highlight a few spots.

The entire opening side is a plea to brotherhood and universal respect for people's rights, a theme Stevie comes back to many times. Often eloquent, the only low point for me is the one song on side one that Wonder didn't write lyrics, and that song is "Village Ghetto Land" which drags for me because of the lack of imagination used in conveying the message. The situation is worthy of the subtlety of a Jack Webb Dragnet scenario. "Sir Duke" is simply a bitch. The hit and a half of the side.

Side two opens with a funky "I Wish" as Stevie looks back on his happy childhood days, and follows it with "Knocks Me Off My Feet", a song in which I hear o little of "My Cherie Amour". "Ordinary Pain", already mentioned, is solid stuff too.

Side three has three longs cuts on it. The first, "Isn't She Lovely" is a song written for his daughter. Full of parental pride, it also is the first song that has his Wonderful harmonica work up fron. "Black Man, closing three is a musical history lesson, an education in racial self-respect. And one that you can dance to.

Four is quite diverse. First cut is a Zulu-Spanish-English lovesong. "I Am Singing". Remember, he can speak 'very, very fluent Spanish'. "If It's Magic" is just Stevie singing to harp accompaniment. Serene and beautiful. "As" is a slow building pressure cooker tune, a love pledge that becomes a mantra-like chant. And "Another Star", with George Benson sitting in on guitar and vocals, has the tightest arrangements of horns and percussion (single out Carmello Hungria Garcia on timbalas and Raymond Maldonado on trumpet for excellent work).

The bonus alluded to on the album cover is a 45 size, 33 and one-third record with four songs totalling 18 more minutes of musical beauty. "Saturn" written with Mike Sembello, who did most amazing lead guitar work on the album, is hot fun. Everytime I though I heard a super star guitar lick, it was Sembello. I hope he's a part of Stevie's band Wonderlove, whose album Wonder is producing, because the combination is dynamite.

The Black Bull is back. Two years is too long to wait, even for a masterpiece. And it will be hard to remain patient as I await the next Stevie Wonder album. I am just musing now, but I question how much longer we'll call him Stevie. It's not indicative of the maturity, the respect, or the genius of the man. Could you imagine anyone referring to the young Beethoven as Ludwiggie? Or the young Duke Ellington as Eddie? These are names best left to their mothers. Still 'Stevie' seems right for him. He's been Stevie since "Fingertips Parts I and II" and with us for so long that the name might be lide that of a childhood friend, now grown to adulthood, but one so close, we refer to him by the nickname given him long ago.

YOUR MIND IS ON VACATION
(ATLANTIC)

Mose is the Hip man's Thinkster. Arrogant possessor of one of the most jive voices in the world, it is the perfect sling for his arrows of outrageously dry wit. A voice that comes loping up so loose and goofy that you almost get a chance to chuckle at its mojo antics before it strips you naked and dances off happily on a vertiginous Flight of the Bumblebee piano that came around the corner from nowhere and god man, watch out for that maniac sax player! Dave Sanborn! Joe Farrell! Al Cohn!

And he writes all these fantastic songs! Good chance you've bumped up against Your Molecular Structure somewhere, a sly, lecherous peon to une femme slung in hilarious scientific jargon:

> "Your molecular structure—is really something swell
> A high frequency modulated—Jazebel
> Thermodynamically—> you give 'em to me
> Your molecular structure baby—
> oooeee."

That's on here, with other gems like the title cut, Foolin Myself, Swingin' Machine, If You Only Knew and I Feel So Good. And you'll be feelin' so good if you go out and cop this witty, romping, thoroughly Up set by this natty man who will hip you to the truth about the boys in the back room, vapid people ("Your mind is on vacation and your mouth is workin' overtime"), you and me ("No matter how you spend your time, you gonna be more ridiculous than sublime"), himself, and numerous other topics of general interest.

Mose Allison was born next door to the blues, he's been around a long time, he's sat down and thought about it all, and he'd like nothing better than to tell it to you.

—Rob Chalfen

VARIOUS ARTISTS
Live At CBGB's
(Atlantic)

Some writers would have you believe that The Ramones, Television, The Talking Heads, et al.., constitute a New York Sound. Bullshit — all of the top level bands in NYC sound quite different from each other, so how can they constitute a "sound?"

If there is indeed such a current thing as a New York Sound it is represented very well on this record. Seven out of the eight bands presented here (excepting only The Tuff Darts, but they're allowed to sound different cause they're a top level band) have much in common: a good feel for city life and for that elusive and seductive "darker side of life"; shared lyrical and musical influences, particularly The Velvet Underground and other, more secondary, avante-garde groups; unusually strong vocals; status as being, for the most part, very good; and status as being, for the most part, not very successful.

That last point can be attributed to the seven's singular similarity — it takes a gimmick (witness The Ramones). But I too am a sucker for a gimmick, which is why The Tuff Darts steal this show. With songs like "(I'd Rather) Slash (My Wrists and Cut My Throat Than Have To Spend A Night With You)", they make this record a must-have. The few copies sold on the CBGB label will be collector's items. (A-)

CHER
I'd Rather Believe in You
(Warner Bros.)

I must admit this album isn't bad. What saves this particular album from sounding like the rest of her albums is her selection of material — all middle-of-the-road but good.

The main song "I'd Rather Believe in You" has hit potential but it is far from the best track on the album. "Spring" is a beautiful, sentimental song about an orphaned girl. It's well worth the album. The two songs "Knock on Wood" and "I Know (You Don't Love Me)" have been done by many other artists but Cher's style is a nice change.

The album is Cher and her show, no more and no less. If you love her show you'll love her newest album. If not then it still makes good listening.

HOMECOMING CONCERT
Rahsaan Roland Kirk—
Back Again

It was a sad day in the music world last November when doctors said that Rahsaan Roland Kirk would never perform again. Paralyzed on his right side just before Thanksgiving, the future looked bleak for this master of the Tenor Saxaphone. But for a man who had already overcome the handicap of being blind, Kirk provided himself once again by electrifying the crowd at the recent Berkeley Jazz Festival. With that remarkable weekend and many other outstanding engagements behind him the Program Council Music Committee will present Rahsaan Roland Kirk and The Vibration Society in concert on Friday, October 22, 1976, at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are on sale on the Campus Center Concourse. The members of the Vibration Society are Hilton Ruiz on piano, Walter Perkins on drums, Phil Bowler on bass, Steve Tourre, trombone and Michael Hill on vocal. Rahsaan Roland Kirk is a man who has mastered every wind instrument in music along with some of his own instrumental inventions. As an artist he has a unique way of playing three instruments at one time by a technique developed by Mr. Kirk called Circular Breathing. Also as a composer and conductor Rahsaan Roland Kirk has worked along with Julian Bond in a television series called Rush Toward Freedom which is a modern history of the civil rights struggle.

The public is invited to witness this inventive musician who has a flair of humor, style and seriousness and who has the ability as a performer to generate excitment and leave his audiences on their feet applauding for more.

JACKSON BROWNE
Orleans
Springfield Civic Center
Friday, Oct. 8, 1976
by Mark Harris Levitan

The contrasting styles of Orleans and Jackson Browne (and band) met in the hollow shell of the Springfield Hockey Rink last Friday night, and neither group rendered particularly inspired performances. Browne captured the imagination of the audience with much greater ease than the formulaic Orleans show, but his short set ended abruptly with no encore, and thus left everybody hanging.

Orleans opened the show with an exceedingly short set, yet still provided their fans with a good dose of what they came to find. Running blindly, yet craftily through their hit singles and rhythmic boogies, one could not help but feel an urge to dance. They'd be a great dance band, and at one time they were, but their body-messages were lost on an audience anticipating Jackson Browne's head messages.

As Browne came onstage, he appeared to be uneasy. A long layoff from touring, compounded by the death of his wife and a subsequent delay in finishing his new album, seemed to put some distance between Jackson and the audience. He began with a new song entitled "Walls of Babylon," singing in front of a new band, and looking unusually out of place. The song begins tentatively, but it builds powerfully towards its conclusion. The song appears to be another Browne tour de force about the state of the world. When he moved to more familiar material, Browne seemed to loosen up a bit and hit what I considered to be the emotional peak of the show, six songs into the set, with a stunning rendition of "Late For The Sky."

He then introduced two songs from the new album. One of them, "The Pretender" is the title song, and it's full of biting humor. Jackson hides behind his sunglasses and becomes "a happy idiot in search of the legal tender," while he ignores the rest of the world's problems. But as if to remind us that we can't run away, Browne followed with the apocalyptic "Before the Deluge," featuring some fine fiddle work by David Lindley. Lindley's was the only familiar face in Browne's six-member band. The band produces a full sound built around two keyboards and Lindley's fiddle, lap steel guitar or slide guitar.

After a couple of faster rock songs, Browne dismissed the band save for Lindley, and together they played a very humorous version of Dave van Ronk's "Cocaine Blues." It was one of the show's special spots; Browne's voice was crystal clear, his picking was fine-line and Lindley's soft fiddle rolled around the brain.

Jackson Browne writes personal songs that a mass audience can draw meaning from. But he also straddles the border between the singer-songwriter and the rock and roll star. He gets off on the rock star role, but his rock music lacks the energy and creativity of his deeper side. The three rock songs at the end of the concert left a void that was never filled. The audience was primed for more, but almost as soon as "Walking Slow" had ended and the band left the stage, the house lights came on and we were gone.

New Details and Abstract Images

by Sandra I. Lubov

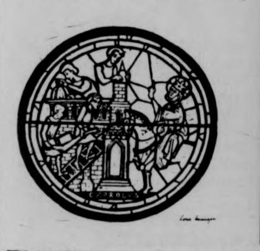
The Herter Art Gallery is currently exhibiting a one-man show of photographs by Charlie Erickson. The show consists of 21 color photographs all taken from color slides. Erickson is currently a sophomore at UMass. This is the first time that his work has been displayed for the University community.

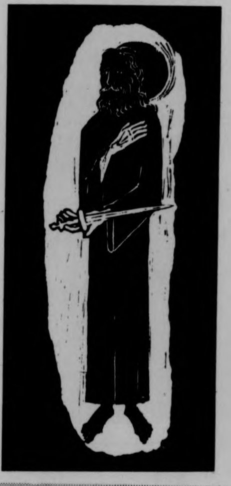
Erickson is a self-taught photographer. He has never had any formal training and so depends on a great deal of trial and error in his work. Although he would have liked to pursue photography academically he says, "Since UMass cut the hell out of the photography department there was no place for me to do it here." Erickson spent four years before coming to college doing "idiot" work. However, he often carried his camera with him and one of the shots in the show was taken from his delivery truck.

Most of the photographs in the show are nature shots. They range from close up views of butterflies to telephoto shots of telephone poles. He says he likes to magnify nature to see the world, "like a bid with a magnifying glass."

Erickson began by taking thousands of color slides but then he realized that he would have a shot and say "Oh whooa, that is something I would like to be able to look at and think about outside of the many "boring" slide shows I have my friends sit through. And so he had his favorites printed. His success rate is about one in thirty-six, he says, "Out of every role I shoot there will usually be only one picture that I feel is really extraordinary and sometimes it is not even the shots that I really concentrate on." An example of this is seen in the show. Erickson shot 120 pictures of the Tall Ships on July 3 but the picture that was most meaningful and interesting to him was the one of his sneakers on the bow of the boat he was on. Erickson was wearing the same green sneakers during this interview.

Erickson concentrates mainly on color and form in his photographs. "I like color for its own sake but I am also interested in the more formal contrasts between colors and shapes." He tries to get beyond "prettiness" in his photographs. Although there are a lot of sunsets and other beautiful manifestations in nature he tries to get a "meditative" quality. The purpose of the photographs is not to give a single poetic content but to arrest the viewer and to invoke the viewers' own surreal invocations.





Erickson says of the photographs in the show, "I'm involved in my work and I like them. For every picture in the show I know what went into it and how many other slides I had to throw away. Sometimes the photos that I like best are not the ones that other people find the most interesting. That is why I am so excited about having this show. It will give me the opportunity to get some feedback. Sometimes I look at my slides in my viewfinder and new details and abstract images will reveal themselves to me. The viewer can never duplicate my own response but if he looks closely enough he can bring his own imagination into each picture and that is what I want."

Erickson uses double exposure in some of his photographs to "marry the images that are found separately in nature for a graphic effect." The point of these photographs is not so much in their technique as in their ability to add a mysterious, dream-like effect. Although he is interested in how technical skills and methods can improve his work he feels that the photographs are much more dependent on what "my eye and my mind sees."

He says of his work, "The last thing I want to be is pretentious in my images. They are all there in nature. I try not to rearrange or manipulate nature but to capture nature with my own particular viewpoint. I consider that some of my best pictures were just good luck. I happened to be someplace at the right time. Other pictures I had to look long and hard for."

Erickson now feels that he is developing a more discriminating eye in his work. He tries to avoid taking shots that are just "pretty" because he realizes that they will soon be boring even to himself.

Erickson's shots are of New England scenes particularly from the Old Lyme, Conn. area. Many of them are in the splendid colors of New England autumns and seem particularly appropriate for viewing at this time of the year. The exhibit will run through Oct. 22. The gallery hours are from 9-4.

AN X-RATED MUSICAL COMEDY

City Studio Theater

By Joe Mahoney

Except for a few infrequent Five College productions, there has been a virtual absence of the threatrical arts in the Valley area.

So when City Studio Theater (CST) in Northampton opened its doors (or is it parted its curtains?) for the first time last May, area theater goers were treated to an innovative, sensitive and exciting new dimension in the thespian arena.

Located at 25 Main Street (next to Fitzwilly's pub), CST rents a high-ceilinged room on the fourth floor which was once a ballroom and a recreation room. The room bears little structural resemblance to your typical stage setting; but then CST doesn't try to be your typical theater. What is strives to do, is remove the glossy commercialism, sensationalism and elitism, while preserving and honing the artistic strokes in its productions. With their makeshift stage settings, CST gets by just fine.

Before CST was spawned in May, an ill-fated attempt by the same people was made earlier this year to establish a year-round theater in Northampton, "New Stage Two." That company was closed down after presenting several performances. Zoning regulations prohibited the theater since it was located in an apartment building.

Thus far, CST has been beset with one major problem: revenue. As a group concerned with entertaining people and not generating profit, they have barely managed to cover their operating expenses with their shoestring budget. The situation has been somewhat alleviated, however, with their recent allocation of funds from CETA (Comprehensive Employment Training Act) for a salaried position.

One of the prime movers behind CST is Margaret Van Sant, a UMass graduate.

"I wanted to go on to grad school but there are some things you just can't learn in a university," Van Sant commented. She has worked at a year-round theater company in Provincetown and at other theaters on Cape Cod.

The common thread of feeling the people of CST have, Van Sant said, is that, "We are trying to prove we can make theater our lives."

"We think there's ground for a community-oriented theater here. We feel the theater can bring people closer together," she said.

Mark Cuddy, director of CST's upcoming production of Lenny, explained that CST "is gradually establishing a trademark."

Cuddy, a UMass senior, said he chose the play because of its "incredible social importance."

"The original Broadway version of Lenny was a theatrical extravaganza, a head-trip, which treated Lenny Bruce as a symbol and not a person," Cuddy pointed out.

"I've stripped away all the theatrical bullshit and created a night club atmosphere for the audience, with a five-piece jazz ensemble, making it more of Lenny's world," he said.

(Lenny will open at CST on October 28. Performances are also slated for Hamden Dining Commons at UMass from October 20 through October 23.)

As for the future direction of the theater, that is uncertain. "Our goals are continually changing," Van Sant said.

"There's a lot of energy in this spot. We're pulling in more and more of the creative people in the area."

CST's latest production, Play with a Tiger by Doris Lessing, is their most brilliant effort yet. Anna and Dave the two central characters, struggling to break through their roles and masks expose their hopes, fantasies and frustrations in an effort to break through the barrier which separates them. Lessing's play provides a stunning insight into both the frightening and beautiful aspects of relationships we have all witnessed and experienced.

Van Sant's directing is masterful.

Play with a Tiger will be performed again tonight through Sunday and next week from Thursday through Sunday also. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

With the accolations CST has been receiving from area critics, better make reservations before you set out.

Even if you are not a "theater buff," you owe it to yourself to check out this enthralling experience. The phone number is 584-3978.

What B Sawyer Saw

What the Butler Saw
by Joe Orton, Dir. by Wm. Pullman
Curtain Theater 10-9-76
reviewed by
James F.B. Sawyer

What the Butler Saw, a farce by Joe Orton, is currently being staged by the University Ensemble Theater under the direction of William Pullman, a second year M.F.A. candidate in Performance. The play will be shown through October 16 in the Fine Arts Center's Curtain Theater.

Primarily, the Play centers around the ill-fated attempts of a middle-aged psychiatrist (Greg Bernet) in an exclusive clinic to seduce a young applicant for the post of his secretary (Debbie Friedlander). But this apparently simple day-to-day situation is complicated by the introduction of other characters, from whom the doctor would like to conceal his indiscretion.

He subsequently attempts to cover up the would be seduction by saying that the girl is a mental patient and trying to keep his story consistent to: his nymphomaniac wife (Barbara Crook); his wife's latest companion (Jim O'Connell), a bellhop in a hotel with a mean reputation and a blackmailer; a "representative of Her Majesty's Government" of his "immediate superiors in madness", a fellow psychiatrist (Bob Verini); and a bumbling but ever-so-proper police sergeant (David Ambos).

The action spirals and builds throughout the play, until in the last few minutes, with half the cast either certified insane by the doubtfully sane Dr. Rance from Her Majesty's Government, or shot by the doubtfully insane wife of the unsuccessful seducer, there comes the revelation that more than half of them are blood relatives. At this point, the police sergeant, who has been searching for the missing parts of a statue of Sir Winston Churchill, descends through the skylight of the doctor's office to lead them all to a new life outside the madhouse.

Since the entire two acts of the play take place inside the office of the head of an exclusive clinic for the insane in England, and since Orton himself was English, some of the language from the original script had to be altered for an American audience. But those alterations which were necessary did not detract at all from the overall production.

Joe Orton does not leave anything to do with society alone in this wildly candid script. He treats every subject as fair game for his biting satire and nonsensical remarks.

Facial and Manual expressions team with Orton's dialogue to further intensify the myriad messages the characters send flying out into the audience.

Such expressions are especially prominent in the portrayal of Dr. Rance given by Bob Verini, a first year M.F.A. in Performance candidate. Verini brings across the very essence of the government psychiatrist, who tends to look down on the world from somewhere in the ozone and listens to what the world has to say only insofar as it can be traced back to insanity. Verini uses his expressions, looking off into oblivion while pronouncing the most nonsensical judgments to reinforce Orton's original character.

Greg Bernet, also a first year M.F.A. Performance candidate, plays Dr. Prentice. In his many abortive attempts to hide his lust and still keep his excuses running smoothly, Greg is able to wring sympathy from a laughing audience. But throughout his misfiring escape plans, the doctor still clings to the hope that "All will be well."

Debbie Friedlander, a junior Theater major, carries the part of the naive, out-of-work secretary, Geraldine Barclay, very well, even while scampering across the stage in bra and panties. Her most effective lines were not even included in Orton's original script; while running around, trying to conceal herself and possibly get into some clothing, Debbie whimpers like a little girl. This brings across Geraldine's character far more effectively than any words could have.

Barbara Crook, a senior Theater major, portrays Mrs. Prentice. Outwardly a woman with class and culture behind her, Barbara depicts Mrs. Prentice the nymphomaniac extremely well with a simple adjustment of her facial expression. From lofty Mrs. Prentice, Barbara transforms the character into a sex-starved woman, whose hungry eyes immediately fasten onto any male who enters the room. As Mrs. Prentice the potential lunatic, Barbara portrays a gibbering near-basket case.

Jim O'Connell, a third year candidate for M.F.A. in Performance, plays Nicholas Beckett, a hotel bellhop and Mrs. Prentice's lover-blackmailer.

David Ambos, a sophomore English major, appears for his first time with the University Ensemble Theater as Sergeant Match. With his bumbling stiffness, David well interprets Orton's version of an English bobby.

Besides numerous doors, a typical gimmick for the farce, an impressive innovation was added to the scenery by Director Pullman and Scene Designer Terrence McClellan. In his original script, Orton calls for a desk in the doctor's office. But this production uses a desk on casters, whose left-hand corner can be rolled away to form an additional chair.

The desk itself was of conspiciuos value in a scene with Dr. Rance and Mrs. Prentice in which Mrs. Prentice is seated on one end of it. Dr. Rance, listening intently to what Mrs. Prentice is saying, rotates the desk, bringing the lady closer to the audience. This action, coupled with spotlighting from above, served to underscore what Mrs. Prentice had to say.

The chair which alternately was and was not a part of the desk, served very well in a scene with Dr. Rance and Dr. and Mrs. Prentice. In a mock interrogation, Dr. Rance and Mrs. Prentice roll the seated Dr. Prentice to center stage, where they attempt, unsuccessfully, to call him to accounts for his actions.

With all of the above factors going for it, What the Butler Saw at the intimate Curtain Theater is well worth the roughly two hours it takes out of a cold evening. An excellent script to begin with, the University Ensemble Theater players make it that much better.

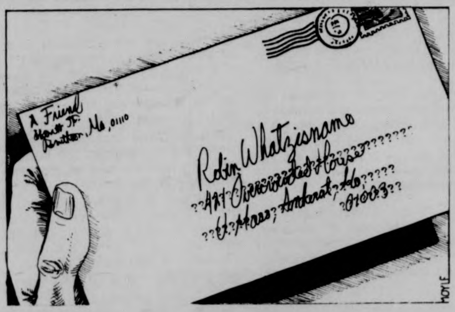
Mailroom can't deliver

By DEBORAH EDWARDS
Collegian Staff

The UMass mailroom has a few thousand pieces of undeliverable mail because many of the students living off-campus have not yet reported their address to the housing office.

According to the Assistant Director of Residential Resource Management for Administrative Services J. Bruce Cochrane, there has not been the incentive to report off-campus addresses this year, because students' dorm security deposits have already been returned. Previously, students had to report their address to get back their deposit.



Cochrane estimated there could be as many as 3,500 to 4,000 students who have not reported their off campus addresses.

Cochrane said the Housing Office sends out a list of students' addresses to all departments, including the mailroom.

"But the real problem," he said, "is there are so many students who haven't given us their address, so we can't give it out."

Jene St. Germain, supervisor of central mail, said there were two alternatives other than letting the mail sit there until the addresses were known.

"We could send the mail to the permanent addresses," he said, "but that would mean the parents would get the student's mail. The other alternative would be to send the mail back to the senders.

According to Germain, a lot of mail comes in with just "UMass" as an address. Mail is first sent to the Amherst post office, and if it has an off-campus address, it goes out from there. If it says, "UMass" it is sent to the University.

Cochrane said the mailroom is understaffed to begin with, but the back up of the mail was complicating things.

"Another complicating factor," said Cochrane, "is a problem we are having with the computer at Whitmore." He said the computer, used for administrative purposes, has a "capacity overload," and a "battery of IBM personnel from the National Corporation of IBM have been called in to solve the problem."

He also said that after three weeks of working on the problem, the IBM people said they were near to a solution.

"The capacity overload," he said, "was affecting about three to four per cent of the students, by putting them in different rooms than they really are."

"The computer," said Cochrane, "can only handle so much information, before it starts to do crazy things. The computer has reached its limit, and just can't take anymore."

Cochrane said because of the expense in renting a computer of the kind that services UMass, it would be impossible to have two. Cochrane said President Robert C. Wood's office is presently looking into renting a larger computer, but the cost would be much greater than the hundreds of thousands of dollars a year spent on renting and maintaining the computer UMass has now.

According to Cochrane, the UMass computer serves not only the Amherst campus, but also Boston, Worcester and President Wood's office.

"There are about 22,000 students here in Amherst, about 10,000 students in Boston, and about 3,000 students in Worcester, all depending upon this computer for

UHS preps for flu shots

By MARY ANN MAYNARD
Collegian Staff

As University Health officials were being educated on the upcoming innoculation clinic for the swine and victoria flu vaccine, news reports indicated the death toll for persons recently injected with it rose to 38.

Meanwhile, a United Press International story reported that, "Officials of the Center for Communicable Diseases in Atlanta, which is officially carrying only 14 deaths, stressed there was no known connection between the deaths and the vaccine. Most of the victims suffered from health disorders, and some died in bed at nursing homes."

According to Arthur Hyman, head administrative assistant at the infirmary, the UMass Health Services is going ahead with its program to innoculate those people in the UMass community who are eighteen and over and have chronic illnesses, and anyone over 65 who wishes it. When asked what his feelings were on the recent death reports he said, "no comment".

Hyman told his staff that the injections are only to be given to those who say they have chronic illnesses. The workers are to ask the people what their illness is, but he admits that they have no way of actually proving if the illness is genuine.

Before any one of the eligible people can receive the vaccine, an information sheet and consent form will be given to them to read and sign. The information form gives a brief history of the disease which had its last major outbreak 45 years ago, the symptoms of the disease, the vaccine which is being injected, the possible side effects, and several precautions.

According to the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare the following people should not be given the shot: children under a certain age (under eighteen at the infirmary), anyone allergic to eggs, anyone with a fever and anyone who has gotten any other type of vaccine within the past 14 months should consult a doctor.

The clinic, which will be held on Oct. 25 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, is being designed for an estimated 1,500 to 2,000 participants to be innoculated.

About 25 health services employees will be working at the innoculation clinic.

Two union groups ready for election

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

The two organizations vying to become collective bargaining agents for the UMass faculty will find out today which faculty will be included in their bargaining unit and the date of the election between the two groups, according to the president of one of the organizations.

Joseph S. Larson, president of the American Association of University Professors said last night he had been informed by a representative from the Massachusetts State Labor Relations Commission (MLRC) that the decision would be made public today in their Boston offices.

Larry S. Roberts, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), the second group who wants to be voted in as the collective bargaining agent, said last night he was not informed of the decision by the MLRC, but said he had been out all evening.

Both the MSP and the AAUP have disputed the University administration on which faculty and staff should be included in the bargaining unit, thus determining who will be allowed to vote in the upcoming elections.

Both professional organizations claim that department heads and chairpersons, librarians, part-time teaching staff and staff whose jobs relate more to teaching should be included.

Halloween cents is marching

By BOB DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

Halloween at UMass usually prompts many students to dress in costume and parade around their dorms, residential areas and the Campus Center.

But a national service fraternity and sorority hope that this year Halloween will prompt students to parade on a 12-mile Heart Fund Walk.

The sixth annual Heart Fund Walk, sponsored by Gamma Sigma Sigma (GSS) and Alpha Phi Omega (APO), will commence at Haigis Mall in front of Whitmore on Oct. 31 at 10 a.m., according to Lynne Miskewich, membership vice-president of GSS.

Miskewich yesterday said that some of the proceeds from the walk will be sent to the Western Massachusetts Chapter of the American Heart Association, while the remaining funds will be sent to the national headquarters of the American Heart Association.

The walk, which will follow a 12 mile route, has been organized by the fraternity and sorority in cooperation with Audrey Anderson, a member of the Western Mass. Chapter of the American Heart Association.

According to Miskewich, GSS and APO will have a walker sign-up table on the Campus Center concourse from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. on Oct. 18, 20, 22, 26, and 28. People signing up to walk will receive a walker number and a sponsor sheet at the table. Sponsors are asked to pledge a minimum of five cents per mile.

Walkers may represent an organization, dormitory, Greek House, athletic team, or themselves. According to Miskewich, the organization that turns in the greatest amount of money by the Nov. 19 deadline will receive a Heart Fund trophy that is passed on from the previous year's winner and a plaque that is to be kept by that organization. Last year's winner was McNamara House which was represented by one woman who collected over $150.

In the past six years, the Heart Fund Walk has averaged over $1000 per year in collections.

"Last year we had pledges for $800, and when the money came in, we had actually over $1000. Even Jerry Lewis can't do that," said Miskewich.

Both APO and GSS sponsor many other community service projects throughout the year. Among these projects are Las Vegas Night, scheduled for Oct. 23 and sponsored by APO, the used book exchange that GSS sponsors at the beginning of each semester and the blood drive which is sponsored collectively by APO and GSS each semester.

The GSS and APO will be sponsoring the 25th annual national convention at UMass in June.

Miskewich added that information about the Heart Fund Walk or APO and GSS may be obtained at the table on the Campus Center concourse or at its office. The office is located in room 304 in the Student Union Building and the telephone number is 545-2068.

OH art fair Sunday

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

Do your walls remind you of Gerber's baby food ... that is to say ... bland, boring and basically blah? Did your philodendrun outgrow its pot a year ago and is crying out to you for a new one? Have you been wearing the same earrings for so long that you've forgotten they were pierced?

Do not despair ... the Orchard Hill Art Fair is taking place this Sunday from 12-5 p.m. in the Orchard Hill bowl between the dorms and any or all of the above problems can be solved there.

The fair, described as a "grass roots event" by Helen Schneider, one of the organizers, will have booths of pottery, paintings, sculpture, print makings, macrame, needlepoint, photography, jewelry and various other crafts.

Added attractions include a booth sponsored by the Butterfield Art group selling baked goods. The Orchard Hill Art Council will have a booth where cider, cheese, breads and other titallating treats will be sold. Strolling musicians will add their voices and instrumentals to the event.

The Art Fair's purpose is "to promote arts on the hill and promote the hill as a community," Schneider said.

"People from the University and the community of Amherst are encouraged wholeheartedly to participate," Schneider said.

For residents of Orchard Hill and Central there is no charge for the privilege of setting up a booth. Others wishing to sell their wares will be charged $5.

Anyone interested in participating should call Rick Alliegro, 6-7081, or Fritz Walker, 5-2138.

The Art Fair is organized by students and heads of residence to give "area artists in the dorms a chance to sell their various arts and crafts ... but we invited people not on the Hill to participate," Schneider said.

The Orchard Hill Art Council has just recently been formed. Although they admit to still being in the embryonic stage, participants are enthusiastic about "giving support to people who want to do artistic things," Schneider said.

The group feels a definite need for an art group on the Hill. The fair is "just a beginning and we realize that," Scheider said.

Future plans include a gallery show, poetry readings and cultural activities which would include work of artists in the dorms.

So if you're an artist, take part. If you're not, but could use something new in your life, go and look around. "Come and enjoy yourself," is the feeling organizers say they are trying to promote.

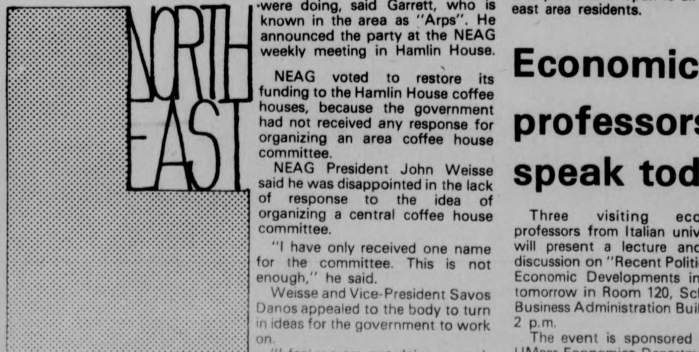
NE lobster party tonight

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

While the Northeast Area Government (NEAG) cannot seem to interest area residents in organizing government-sponsored coffee houses, a Northeast resident last night announced a sequel to a successful, informal B.Y.O.B. party held in the Quad two weeks ago.



Due to the overwhelming response to the first event, there will be a "First Annual, Oh Holy Cow, There's A Lobster Loose, Alright Get Nekkid, Ooh Wow, Midnight, yip Yow Party, Part Two" in the Quad at midnight tonight, according to organizer Richard Garrett.

The party is for those who missed it the first time or for those who wish to continue what they were doing, said Garrett, who is known in the area as "Arps". He announced the party at the NEAG weekly meeting in Hamlin House.

NEAG voted to restore its funding to the Hamlin House coffee houses, because the government had not received any response for organizing an area coffee house committee.

NEAG President John Weisse said he was disappointed in the lack of response to the idea of organizing a central coffee house committee.

"I have only received one name for the committee. This is not enough," he said.

Weisse and Vice-President Savos Danos appealed to the body to turn in ideas for the government to work on.

"I feel we are not doing enough for the area," said Weisse.

Suggestions were brought up for a winter carnival for the Quad, a skating party on the Campus Pond, a Quad night at a Celtics game, and donating time to a project similar to Boltwood. Area residents interested in such projects or starting a project of their own are asked to contact their dorm representatives.

The next meeting of NEAG will be held Thursday in Lewis House at 6:15 p.m. and in open to all Northeast area residents.

Stubby Kaye

Stubby Kaye on Benjamin Franklin

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

"You know, Ben Franklin was many things. He was a writer, an inventor, a politician, but you know what I like best about him? He was the first American swinger," says Broadway star Stubby Kaye who will portray Franklin tonight on the Fine Arts Center stage, joining a cast of faculty, students and local actors.

Sporting a congressional wig and gold-framed glasses, the former "Shenanigan's" host says he loves every part of the show. "If I were to name my favorite scene, that would be giving the show away, wouldn't it?" Kaye said grinning.

Three years ago, Kaye starred as Franklin at the Melody Pop Theatre in Milwaukee, Wisc. Although he performed in a theater-in-the-round, Kaye said he had no trouble adopting the part to the Fine Art Center's stage.

"When I was first hired for the part, I asked them if they were sure they knew what they were doing," Kaye said.

"You see, my New York accent doesn't actually fit this swinger from Philadelphia. But, they said it was perfectly alright. I just have to tone down my accent."

Stubby Kaye, 58, who insists his real name shall be known only to his parents and his draft board, was born in New York City. The date was November 11, 1918, Armistice Day of World War I. In 1939, he won an audition to appear on the radio program, Major Bowe's Amateur Hour, and then made his professional bow as comic and master of ceremonies with the Bowe's unit playing in St. Louis.

He hit broadway in 1950 in the role of Nicely-Nicely Johnson in "Guys and Dolls," went to London with the show and, in 1955, when Samuel Goldwyn turned the stage hit into a move, played Nicely-Nicely once again. One year later, he was in "Lil Abner" as Marryin' Sam, a role which he repeated in the Paramount film version. Early in 1967, Stubby played the role of magician Houdini's manager in the British stage play, "Man of Magic". Next, he was Herman, the owner of a Manhattan taxi-dance emporium in the film, "Sweet Charity."

In addition to countless TV appearances on variety shows, Kaye was also in the series, "Love and Marriage" and "My Sister Eileen." He continued his motion picture career and has recently completed a five-month tour in "Last of the Red Hot Lovers," starring as Barney Cashman. During the summer of 1976, he played in "Journey to Day" and "God's Favorite," in addition to repeating his role of Ben Franklin in 1776.

The Tony Award winning musical attempts to chronologically recreate the events leading up to and signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Under the direction of Alan Light, the cast has been rehearsing for six weeks. The cast includes faculty and students of the University as well as other actors from surrounding communities. The 24-member-crop was joined last week with the four Broadway stars: Kaye, William Linoton performing as John Adams, Barry Busse as Edward Rutledge and Darrell Sandeen as Thomas Jefferson.

Fritz Steinway, director of the Fine Arts Center and producer of "1776" noted the idea for using both Broadway and local talent was so that the local talent could have

Computer fair in Campus Center

By NOREEN PRINCIPE
Collegian Staff

A two-day computer fair, to be held next week in the Campus Center, hopes to attract Five College students interested in learning more about the different uses of computers and how they affect their lives, according to organizers for the event.

Sponsored by the Faculty Senate Computer Committee, in conjunction with the University Computer Center, the fair will feature over 50 exhibits contributed by faculty members and students in the five college area.

One of the fair's organizers, David W. Hosmer, an assistant professor of biostatistics in public health, said the fair will use posters and graphic presentations rather than lectures to present the various uses of computers.

The UMass computer center is located in the Graduate Research Center and has various terminals throughout campus. It serves the five-college area and also the UMass campuses at Boston and Worcester. It costs the University $400 per hour to operate the computer when it is "up", or activated.

Hosmer said he hopes the fair will generate more interest use for the computer, and said he sees the computer as being analagous to the library, urging students to use it as a resource center.

Hosmer said the graphic presentation of the fair is superior to oral presentations because the subject matter is often very technical and difficult for students to visualize.

For those attending the fair, computer terminals will be available for use which have been programmed for simulation games, or for drawing pictures.

In addition to poster presentations, publishers of books in the computer field will be present, Hosmer said, and members of the Contra Data Corporation will demonstrate the Plato system, a computer aided instruction system that applies the computer to a wide variety of fields including zoology, psychology, math and statistics.

Abstracts of posters used in the fair will be published in a special edition of Bits and Bytes, the computer center newspaper. Bytes refers to the jargon used for the architecture in computers.

Telescope dedication today

By JANE LITTLEJOHN
Collegian Staff

UMass President Robert C. Wood and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery will deliver addresses this afternoon at formal dedication ceremonies of the nation's largest radio frequency telescope.

The ceremonies, in the Five College Radio Astronomy Observatory at Quabbin Reservoir, are expected to attract 300 scientists from throughout the world, attending a convention at the UMass campus.

The dedication was planned to coincide with the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers (IEEE) conference being held Oct. 12-14, according to a University spokesperson.

"The telescope is the most exciting thing to happen here in terms of scientific research. Researchers have said that the telescope might challenge some of the laws of physics," said the spokesperson.

The dedication ceremonies are by invitation only and not open to the public, said the spokesperson.

David Helfand, of the UMass astronomy department, said the telescope is the second largest of its kind in the world and by far the most sophisticated.

The telescope may enable astronomers to study atmospheric conditions of other planets, he added, astronomers may now study molecules in interstellar space and will be able to detect radio frequency waves.

Other speakers scheduled are Dr. William Irvine, of the Five College Astronomy department, Dr. Robert E. Hughes, assistant director of the National Science Foundation and John F. Snedaker, of the Metropolitan District Commission (MDC).

Congressmen Silvio O. Conte and Edward P. Boland will also address the dedication ceremonies.

The telescope is located on Prescott Peninsula, on land owned by the MDC.

The telescope is funded with grants from the National Science Foundation and the five area colleges.

Boland is the chairperson of the House Appropriations sub-Committee, which also assisted in the funding of the telescope.

Kennedy's son meets with area coordinators

By DEBORAH EDWARDS

While Senator Edward M. Kennedy was out stumping somewhere on the campaign trail last night, his nephew represented him in a strategy skull session in Amherst.

David Kennedy, 21, son of the late Robert Kennedy appeared before 15 Western Massachusettts area co-ordinators at the Lord Jeffrey Inn. He said that his visit was intended to "get the campaign moving again" and rejuvinate interest in the senator's effort.

Kennedy is opposed by Michael Robertson and two other candidates in the Nov. 2 election.

Young Kennedy, a student at Harvard, is not the only member of the family that is participating in Sen. Kennedy's campaign. Joseph P. Kennedy III, eldest son of Robert F. Kennedy, is the campaign manager, and Robert F. Kennedy Jr. has taken active role in Sen. Kennedy's effort.

At last night's meeting, plans for a poll to generate more workers for the Kennedy campaign and plans to get voters to the polls on election day were discussed.

The Kennedy campaign is planning a telephone poll among Democrats to bring more workers into the campaign . The new workers' task, in turn, will be to convince Independants to vote for Kennedy.

Kennedy is a heavy favorite to be elected to his third term in the U.S. Senate. He will debate Robertson and the two other candidates on Oct. 31. The debate will be aired over channel 57 in the Amherst area.

Robert has announced plans to visit UMass on Monday in search of votes.

It was also determined at the meeting last night to commence heavy leafletting in the area between now and election day. The area co-ordinators, who have been very quiet since Kennedy's September primary victory, were encouraged to work harder to insure the re-election of Sen. Kennedy.

The sky grew dark as thunderheads rumbled over us. Winds gusted up the river, signaling troublesome weather. Unable to just close the windows, Transcontinental Canoe Lines had to find cover — fast.

Below Ste. Genevieve, Mo., we were stuck. Mon Capitaine had already announced a day of rest for the crew tomorrow, but the storm that swept towards us promised a soggy night.

On the Missouri side, a half dozen tow boats and barges lined the shore. I asked Stan if he was going to seek cover in their midst. I got no answer.

Paddling on, the wind built waves that crashed over the bow. Sroka must've finally decided his usual tactic of running in a storm (and getting drenched) wasn't safe. He ran "Joie" up onto an open sand bar. Incredulous, I dove out of the bow and we tugged her high above the river. We covered the packs, donned our leaky raingear, and waited for all Hell to break loose.

It never came. The wind sandblasted us, but the "rainless storm" blew over us. Somewhere in Illinois, it rained that night.

We put back in, me cursing under my breath. I couldn't understand why Sroka hadn't taken refuge on the tows across the river, or at least pulled up in Missouri, where the banks were heavily wooded.

We only traveled a half mile before Cap'n Stanley pulled us to the western bank. He said he was tired, so he decided we'd stop. After supper, he slept three hours while I caught up on log entries and other paperwork.

When he woke, we had roughly three hours of light left. We decided to find Ste. Genevieve.

Our charts told us the town was directly inland, about a mile. We didn't know that to get there we had to cross a lot of field.

Because the Mississippi floods occasionally, Ste. Genevieve's settlers took advantage of the rich floodplain. The French colonists of 250 years ago planted a common field, about one of two miles long, next to the river. This field is still planted. Although owned by several private farmers, the field traditionally has no fences. Almost nothing broke up the seven foot sea of corn. With rows only six inches apart, we fought between the ripe ears.

Finally we found a dirt field road. A pickup truck barrelled straight at us.

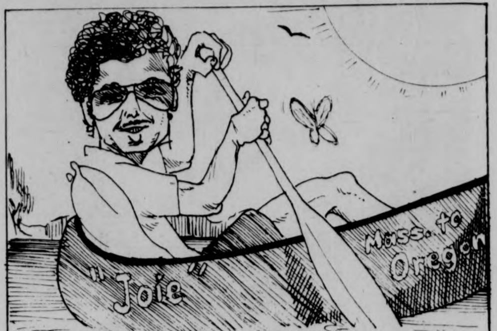
"What's the easiest way to get to town?" we asked.

"In the back of my truck!" laughed the driver.

Two local boys and their cousin from Alaska got us drunk and we swapped tall tales all night. They dropped us off at the public ferry landing, a mile over our camp. We picked our way over rock dikes until we reached "Joie".

The next day, we strolled up the beach again, heading for a festival our new friends had told us about. "Jour de Fete", the annual day of celebration in Ste. Genevieve, happened to be that Sunday.

As usual in our touring, Stan and I split up. As I approached town, I could hear the noises of the festival. "Pete the Whittler", an old man with a derby, long grey beard and pipe, sat under a portrait of himself, carving and selling animals. A blacksmith hammered wrought iron trinkets (his larger works hung all around his stall) and various artisans hawked their wares. Like any good fair, food was everywhere.



One unusual treat was "pork burgers" for 50 cents. Fresh pig shoulders are ground, spiced lightly, and mmmmmm....Delicious.

I had to keep my spending down to avoid blowing all my cash before my reserves came in in Jefferson City. I spent a lot of time just wandering the streets, admiring the Phi Eta Sigma, the national freshman scholastic honor society for men, will initiate 47 new members Sunday, at 3 p.m. in Herter 227.

Dr. George J. Armellagos, director of Honors, will address the initiates. He will also receive an honorary membership into Phi Eta Sigma.

Phi Eta Sigma recognizes and encourages first year scholastic achievement of the UMass campus. Men receiving a 3.5 cumulative average on their first or second semesters while carrying a 15 earned credit load per semester were invited to join during the fall of their sophomore year.

They are considered active members for one year. Phi Eta Sigma provides its members with recognition for superior academic achievement, and a chance for contact with fellow students having similar interests. The national organization offers scholarships for graduate study to senior members.

Before this year, Phi Eta Sigma initiated new members in May. Two considerations prompted the change to an October initiation.

Freshman now become eligible on either their first semester's or their first full year's cumulative average. Previously, only the first semester was considered.

Phi Eta Sigma's membership lost contact among themselves during the long summer intersession. The new arrangement provides a better chance for group unity, and more closely parallels that of Alpha Lambda Delta, Phi Eta Sigma's sister society.

Phi Eta Sigma was founded for men at the University of Illinois in 1923 and established a UMass chapter in 1955. Its sister society, Alpha Lambda Delta, was founded for women at the University of Illinois in 1924 and established a UMass chapter in 1959.

Dr. Louis Greenbaum (History) advises the UMass chapter of Phi Eta Sigma. Dr. Jean Sherrow (Leisure Studies and Services), and Ms. Ruth Green (Office of the Vice-Chancellor for Studet Affairs) advise the UMass chapter of Alpha Lambda Delta.

Cannons, fifes open '1776' tonight by reflecting pools

Two special events for the opening night performance this evening of '1776' were recently announced.

The Fine Arts Center production of '1776' will officially open at 7:00 with a firing of cannons and muskets by the 2nd Hampshire Regiment. The volley of fire power will be directed by Ed Berube, Commander of the 2nd Regiment.

The cannons will be located on the north side of the Fine Arts Center and will point between the library and student union.

At 7:15, the Spirit of '76 Drum and Fife Corps, a 28-member corps, will present a concert using authentic reproductions of colonial instruments between the reflecting pools of the Fine Arts Center.

The Spirit of '76 plays at 95 beats per minute which enables the drummers to employ a wide open style of drumming typical of the style used during the revolutionary period.

The award winning musical '1776' under the direction of Alan Light, will open tonight at 8:00, and plays both tomorrow and Sunday. The production then resumes its salute to the bicentennial on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 23 and 24.

The hit Broadway musical will feature Stubby Kaye as Benjamin Franklin. Other professional actors in for the production include William Linton as John Adams, Darrell Sandeen as Thomas Jefferson, and Barry Busse as Edward Rutledge. The "Tony Award" winning musical played for two years on Broadway during the 1970-1972 season.

The supporting cast is comprised of local talent from the Pioneer Valley. The cast includes faculty and students of the University as well as other actors from the surrounding communities.

Tickets for all performances are available at the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets. For more information call 545-2511.

WASHINGTON: President Ford told a news conference last night he was "very pleased" he was cleared of any campaign wrongdoing and said he hoped the presidential campaign would now reach a "level befitting the American people." (UPI telephoto)

Ford rips into Carter during press conference

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Ford accused Democrat Jimmy Carter yesterday night of "slandering the good name of the United States" in his challenge of Ford administration foreign and defense policy during the second presidential debate.

Ford lashed out at Carter during a nationally broadcast news conference which he opened by declaring his pleasure that the special Watergate prosecutor had put to rest "once and for all" allegations that he misused campaign funds as a congressman.

The President called for a shift in the focus of the campaign to the serious differences between him and Carter.

"Gov. Carter and I have profound differences of opinion," Ford said. "I hope in the 20 days remaining in this campaign we can talk seriously and honestly about the serious differences."

Responding to questions about the role in efforts to block an investigation of the Watergate break-in while he was minority leader of the House of Representatives, his acceptance of golfing vacations and his use of campaign funds for travel and clothing, Ford said all such allegations had been thoroughly investigated and no wrongdoing had been found.

Ford said he had been questioned fully during hearings on his confirmation as vice president about any involvement in trying to block the House Banking Committee from holding hearings on the Watergate break-in.

As for recent allegations by former White House Counsel John W. Dean III that he met six times with a White House aide to discuss strategy for blocking the probe, Ford said, "I'm not going to pass judgment on what Mr. Dean now alleges."

Ford already has said he accepted a number of golfing trips from William Whyte, a longtime personal friend and lobbyist for U.S. Steel Corp. Asked if there may have been other such trips not yet disclosed, Ford said, "There may be one or two more, but I can't recall the instances."

All the trips took place while he was a member of the House.

"I have not accepted any such trips since I have been vice president or President," he said.

Ford said campaign funds he used for traveling to Vail, Colo., for vacations were returned to his congressional election account.

When a reporter questioned whether the check Ford wrote to reimburse the campaign account would have overdrawn his checking account, Ford smiled and said, "A few people have written checks and waited until the end of the month to mail those checks."

The President said he covered the check "with my paycheck."

A questioner referred to the second debate between Ford and Carter, a confrontation in which the President often seemed on the defensive, and asked how important Ford felt it was for a President to be able to think quickly on his feet.

"I believe it is vitally important for the President to make right decisions in the Oval Office and I think I have made the right decisions," he said.

Ford acknowledged he had erred during that debate when he said there was no Soviet domination of Eastern Europe. Then, turning to Carter's statements, the President said:

"I'd like to say very strongly that the attitude he took on that occasion when he said America was not strong, where he said the United States government tried to get us into another Vietnam in Angola, and where he said the United States had lost respect throughout the world, I don't approve of any candidate for public office slandering the good name of the United States. It discourages our allies and it encourages our adversaries."

Asked why it took him so long to admit he had made a mistake in his statement about Eastern Europe, Ford said one reason for the delay was the need to make a careful judgment.

In addition, he said he had been to Poland and had seen the Polish people. By the look on their faces, he said, "freedom is in their heart and in their mind. They are not going to be dominated over the long run by any outside power."

Ford met with reporters only hours after the Watergate special prosecutor had cleared him of allegations of mishandling campaign funds in his past Michigan congressional campaigns.

"I hope that today's announcement will also accomplish one other major task: that it will elevate the presidential campaign to a level befitting the American people," he said.

As he has done in recent campaign appearances, Ford accused Carter of advocating increased government spending and higher taxes for middle income families, allegations the Democratic candidate has denied.

Prosecutor clears Ford of wrongdoing

President Ford won a clean bill of health yesterday from the Watergate special prosecutor in a probe of allegations that Ford had misused political campaign funds while a member of Congress.

"The matter has now been closed and counsel for the President has been so advised," special prosecutor Charles Ruff said in a two-page statement handed out to reporters.

Word that Ford had been cleared of the charges came about the same time that Ford was rolling up his sleeve at the White House to receive a swine flu shot administered by his personal physician, Dr. William Lukash.

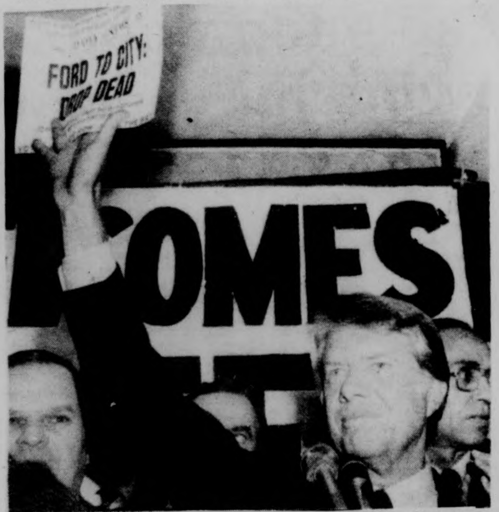
Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter, meanwhile, was flying to New York to begin another three-day stint of campaigning that will take him to Detroit, Kansas City and several cities in Ohio.

Ford himself ended a two-day campaign visit to the New York - New Jersey area Wednesday, and the vice-presidential candidates, Democrat Walter F. Mondale and Republican Bob Dale, were heading for Houston, Tex., where they will meet in a nationally televised debate on Friday night.

The announcement be Ruff that Ford had been cleared of all suspicion in connection with the misuse of campaign funds was certain to provide a lift to the President's effort to win the Nov. 2 election.

But there remained another potentially troublesome inquiry, also by Ruff's office, into claims that Ford, while House minority leader, may have discussed with members of President Richard M. Nixon's White House staff ways of blocking an early investigation into the Watergate affair.

And the Washington Post reported that the Democratic National Committee plans to file a complaint with the Federal Election Commission about Ford's alleged use of aides and Cabinet members, who earn government salaries, for campaign duties.



FORD TO CITY: DROP DEAD

Carter accuses Ford of avoiding questions

NEW YORK [UPI] — Jimmy Carter said last night that President Ford turned his news conference into a one-man debate instead of answering questions about his finances and other matters.

Carter, addressing several thousand persons at a New York City Liberal Party dinner a few hours after Ford's nationally televised news confence, called the President's performance "remarkable".

The Democratic candidate said he had been critical of Ford for not having a fullscale televised news conference since Feb. 19 and now that Ford has conducted one, "I'll have to be critical of him for having a press conference and not answering any questions."

"It's remarkable," Carter said. "He thought he'd have a debate without my being there. I don't know how I did in the first two debates but I think I did pretty well in the press conference tonight."

Carter's remarks drew some snickers and a round of applause. Carter, in his initial response to Ford, did not allude to Ford's charge that Carter was guilty of "slandering the good name of the United States."

In his formal speech, Carter called for new steps with the Soviet Union to halt the further accumulation of atomic weaponry.

In Syracuse earlier, before Ford's news conference, Carter had said he accepts findings of the Watergate Special Prosecutor that Ford did not violate the law in his use of congressional campaign funds.

Three Americans sweep the Nobel Prize Awards

STOCKHOLM, Sweden [AP] — Economist Milton Friedman and two American medical researchers were awarded Nobel Prizes on Thursday, giving the United States a clean sweep on the first day of the 1976 awards.

The Royal Caroline Institute gave the medicine prize to Dr. Baruch S. Blumberg of the University of Pennsylvania Medical School and Dr. D. Carleton Gajdusek of the National Institute for Neurological Diseases at Bethesda, Md., "for their discoveries concerning new mechanism for the origin and dissemination of infectious disease."

Friedman, of the University of Chicago, the dean of American conservative economists and a Newsweek magazine columnist, was awarded the economics prize by the Swedish Royal Academy of Science.

Informed academy sources said the award to Friedman stirred some controversy among members because of his activities in politics and popular journalism. Deliberations of the Nobel committee are secret.

Friedman, 64, learned of the award before giving a news conference in Detroit. "I am, needless to say, delighted," he said.

"But I would not myself choose the particular seven people who make these awards as the jury to which I would want to submit my scientific work." He said he would prefer a panel from all over the world.

Blumberg, a 51-year-old native of New York, said he was "especially pleased that someone from Philadelphia won" because it was the Bicentennial year and "makes up in part for the Phillies not making the World Series."

Blumberg was cited for isolating a major cause of hepatitis and devising tests to locate the disease in potential blood donors. Gajdusek, 53, a native of Yonkers, N.Y., was honored for opening new avenues of research into mental and nervous disorders through his study of a cannibalistic tribe in New Guinea.

The Nobel Prize this year carries a cash award of $160,000. The medicine prize will be divided between the two winners.

The prizes for medicine, physics, chemistry, literature and peace were established by the will of Alfred Nobel, the Swedish inventor of dynamite, and have been awarded since 1901. The economics prize was established by the Swedish Central Bank in 1968.

Fed's top doctor insists swine flu vaccine safe

United Press International — Swine flu vaccine did not cause the deaths of 14 elderly persons who died within 48 hours of receiving it, the government's top physician said yesterday.

Dr. Theodore Cooper, assistant secretary for Health, Education and Welfare, also said there was nothing wrong with the way the vaccinations were administered to the deceased.

"All the test results so far and the evidence at hand do not indicate any connection between the vaccine and the reported deaths," he said.

The 14 were those whom the federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, working slowly from official reports, has so far confirmed as succumbing within two days following innoculations.

Unofficial figures based on state reports indicate at least 41 persons died nationwide sometime after receiving an innoculation since the government's program began Oct. 1.

A CDC spokesman said more names would be added to the official list on Friday — but he stressed that the listing only means the person died following a flu shot, not that the flu shot has been found in any way responsible for death. On the contrary, he pointed out, many of the deaths already have been traced to other causes.

"Someone died while reading the flu shot consent form," said a CDC spokesman. "Those kinds of things have to be discounted."

Some state-wide innoculation programs which had been halted were starting back up. Only Michigan, Maine and Wisconsin have not announced resumptions, and Michigan officials were scheduled to speak to the question Friday.

Besides Allegheny County, Pa., Texas and New Mexico Thursday announced a resumption of innoculations.

President Ford and members of the First Family were immunized at the White House to emphasize the safety of the administration's $135 million, nationwide program to protect Americans from a feared flu epidemic this winter.

"I didn't feel a thing," said Ford. "You mean it's all over?"

In Pittsburgh, where three deaths Monday triggered nationwide concern over the flu shots, Allegheny County Health officials said 13 neighborhood swine flu clinics would reopen for the elderly next Monday, with modifications to eliminate stressful situations for aged recipients.

The CDC said the "official" deaths occurred in Pennsylvania 5, Florida 1, Massachusetts 1, Georgia 1, Tennessee 2, Louisiana 1, Colorado 1, Texas 1, and Ohio 1.

Soviets launch Cosmonauts

MOSCOW [UPI] — The Soviet Union, pressing the most active period of space activity in its history, blasted two men into earth orbit yesterday — the fourth major space flight in as many months.

It said the cosmonauts, both first-timers in space, would carry out experiments with the earth-orbiting Salyut 5 space laboratory.

The men, commander Lt. Col. Vyacheslav Zudov and flight engineer Lt. Col. Valery Rozhdestvensky, were carried into orbit from the Baikonur launch site in Soviet Central Asia aboard the Soyuz 23 spaceship.

"Onboard systems are functioning normally and the crewmen are feeling well," the official Tass news agency reported following the launching at 1:40 p.m. EDT.

Western experts said they expected the Soyuz would dock, probably Friday, with Salyut 5 and the men would enter the space laboratory and stay there for an indefinite period carrying out scientific and biological experiments.

Mass. House sends Senate two unemployment bills

BOSTON [UPI] — Moving toward adjournment, the Massachusetts House yesterday passed and sent to the Senate companion bills boosting unemployment compensation payments nearly 50 per cent and clamping new restrictions on unemployment compensation.

Action on the measures — considered a legislative trade off with organized labor — came as legislative leaders announced plans to end the 1976 session Friday or early Saturday.

Adjournment was expected as soon as the House and Senate enacted a $103 million capital outlay budget and a $24 million supplemental budget.

As adjournment approached, the Senate enacted and sent to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis a bill increasing the salary of Probate Judge from $31,000 to $36,000.

The Senate Thursday also approved a House-passed bill giving local school committees authority to decide if girls should be allowed to play contact sports with boys.

The unemployment bill, which stiffens penalties for jobless persons who refuse state-defined "suitable work" had triggered a 13-person demonstration in the House gallery Wednesday in which eight persons were arrested. No action was taken on the measure the day of the demonstration.

Approval of the legislation Thursday came on a voice vote by the 240-member House without debate.

It would hike from four to eight weeks the disqualification penalty an unemployed person faces if he refused a job termed acceptable by the state.

The proposal was part of a broad legislative package offered by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis at the opening of the session. The governor warned new restrictions on who receives unemployment benefits were needed to insure the financial health of the multimillion unemployment compensation system.

Massachusetts' unemployment rate steadily has been higher than the national average.

Dukakis initially asked for permanent disqualification for persons refusing "suitable work." But the provision was softened in bargaining in the final days of the session. The measure raises minimum earning requirements from $1,200 a year to 15 weeks of work.

Deleted in final bargaining was a proposal to cut the deficit in the system, expected to be $500 million within three years. A restriction adopted earlier limits benefits to persons who quit jobs.

Organized labor had been in on the initial drafting of the legislation, but boycotted sessions to protest changes in the legislation.

To molify objections from organized labor, State House insiders said the maximum benefits for workmen's compensation were hiked in exchange for labor support for the modified unemployment compensation package.

The legislation approved by the House and shipped to the Senate hikes from $95 to $140 a week maximum benefits for persons injured in job related accidents. Special payments for dependents would be eliminated.

Boston disco denies excluding minorities

BOSTON [AP] — The president of a firm that owns a Boston discotheque has denied the club has a policy of excluding minorities, despite complaints to a city agency.

The Boston Licensing Board, during a five-hour hearing Wednesday, was told by nine black persons that Whimsey's refused to admit them on the night of Sept. 18 when they could not produce membership cards.

However, according to the blacks and several white witnesses before the three-member board, white patrons were being admitted routinely. The complaints of racial discrimination were the first brought before the board, which has the power to suspend or revoke liquor licenses. A decision in the case was not expected for at least two weeks.

Alan Tremain, president of Hotels of Distinction, which owns Whimsey's and the nearby Copley Plaza Hotel, denied the discrimination charges. Two of his employes professed no knowledge of the incidents.

Tremain said he was elsewhere when the Sept. 18 incidents occurred, and said the complaints were the first such lodged against him in five years of operation.

Richard Willis, a lawyer for the city Human Rights Commission and who coordinated the complaints, did not ask the board to take specific action.

However, he said, "I think we have more than proven a case of discrimination. We feel what happened is wrong."

Commission releases campaign figures

BOSTON [AP] — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., has spent $541,264 on his reelection campaign since the first of the year, and Edward J. Markey went $20,231.96 in debt to win a Democratic nomination for Congress, federal elections records show.

Kennedy, who defeated four primary election challengers to win renomination on Sept. 14, ended the primary campaign with a $117,087 balance, according to the records.

The campaign spending and fund-raising records of U.S. Senate and House candidates are filed with the U.S. Elections Commission in Washington. The Massachusetts Secretary of State's office keeps a copy.

Among the contributors to the Kennedy campaign were several political committees of labor unions in Washington and executives in Massachusetts, and elsewhere. Kennedy's opponents have not filed their reports.

Markey, a state representative who defeated 11 other Democrats for the nomination in the 7th Congressional District to seek the seat of the late Torbert H. Macdonald, spend $80,975 on the campaign.

Accomplishments of 1976 session of Mass. Legislature a mixed bag

Editor's note: The 1976 session of the Massachusetts Legislature is moving toward adjournment this weekend. The 9½ month session is analyzed in a UPI report.

BOSTON [UPI] — If it is remembered at all, the 1976 session of the Massachusetts Legislature will be noted more for what it did not do than what it did.

The nine-month meeting was long, tiresome and generally fruitless. And when the end finally comes there will be few winners or losers among the state's six million residents.

On one hand, 1976 produced virtually no new social or economic legislation to help individuals or businesses. On the other hand, existing programs were kept, in some cases expanded slightly, and no new taxes were imposed.

The year was in sharp contrast to the late sixties and early seventies during which the Massachusetts launched bold new programs for the poor, the elderly and the disadvantaged.

It also was in marked contrast to 1975 when Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and the legislature were forced by economic conditions to cut many of these programs and raise record amounts of new taxes to pay for the ones which remained.

The major accomplishments of the 1976 session were passage of a $3.9 billion fiscal 1977 state budget, a drastic revision of the state's auto insurance laws and enactment of a bill to control hospital costs.

The budget contained some $969 million in local aid and restored some welfare programs cut last year. The legislature also passed a $102 million building budget and was expected to pass a $24 million supplemental budget giving pay raises of up to 25 per cent to six top elected officials.

The salary of Probate judges was increased from $31,000 to $36,000 a year. The salaries of probate registers also increased.

A pay raise for legislators was voted earlier in the year. But action on raises for most state employes was put off until after the administration reaches a collective bargaining agreement with the workers union. A special session may be called to fund the agreement.

The auto insurance bill repealed the no-fault property damage coverage and set up a merit rating plan in which bad drivers will be surcharged and good drivers will have their rates reduced. The bill also allowed companies to set their own competitive rates. Currently the state sets the rates.

A companion bill set up a state rating bureau to assist the commissioner of insurance in reviewing company-set rates to determine if they are excessive.

The hospital bill gives the state Rate Setting Commission broad authority to review hospital budgets and charges for private as well as publicly-aided patients.

Other significant legislation enacted included laws:

—Allowing optometrists and opticians to advertise the price of eyeglasses; —Making it illegal for Massachusetts companies to participate in the boycott called by Arab countries of firms that trade with Israel or are owned by Jews;

—Suspending the state's absolute civil service reference law for veterans and substituted a limited point system. The absolute preference law was stricken by the courts and is being appealed.

Reagan supporters back Ford without hesitation

WASHINGTON [AP] — As Gerald R. Ford became his party's nominee at the Republican National Convention last Aug. 19, some of Ronald Reagan's delegates booed when asked to make the presidential nomination unanimous.

There were predictions that the Reaganites would sit out the fall election.

But an Associated Press survey of Republican officials in 22 states now shows that most Reagan delegates and supporters have come around to backing Ford's election.

While Ford does not inspire the kind of intense loyalty and fervor Reagan supporters gave the former California governor, they are working at all levels of the President's election compaign.

"The Republican platform turned out to be one that every Reagan supporter could avidly support," said Sam Tate, Reagan's campaign manager in Georgia.

"After the convention it was completely normal that most Reagan supporters needed a few days to sit down and realize that we still had a race with vast differences between the two candidates Ford and Carter," Tate said, "and as far as they were concerned, "there was only one decision — to support Ford and running mate Bob Dole."

As the cochairman of the Ford campaign in Georgia, Tate is visible evidence of a concerted effort by the President's campaign leaders to draw in former officials of the Reagan camp to work for the President. Only John Sears, Reagan's campaign director, is missing from among a list of top Reagan staffers now working in the President Ford Committee.

Ford's state organizations are also attracting Reagan supporters.

In New Hampshire, Gov. Meldrin Thomson, a vigorous Reagan supporter, has endorsed Ford's election. But Thomson's son and campaign manager, Peter, says his father's election campaign has been given top priority.

"But we're all working for the Republican ticket which includes Ford and Dole," the younger Thomson said. "I think Ford has come a long way in his conservative beliefs..."

Bill Perrin, a GOP county chairman in south Texas, said: "Quite frankly, we had a problem attaining the help of Reaganites at the beginning of the campaign. But now most of our hardest workers are Reaganites."

In New Mexico, Ford chairman Colin McMillan, said while the President's election drive was slow in getting off the ground, all 21 former Reagan delegates from his state are now actively working in the campaign.

Committee proposes alternatives to ME. Bottle Bill

PORTLAND, Maine [AP] — Two privately-financed antilitter proposals were unveiled Thursday by a group organized and funded by opponents of Maine's bottle referendum.

The plans, contained in a 26-page report from the Committee on Litter Control Options, Inc., was attacked by referendum supporters as an attempt to "short-circuit" the bill to place a mandatory deposit on beer and soft drink containers.

The committee said its recommended plans, each with an estimated yearly cost of up to $400,000, would be more effective and less costly litter control alternatives to the bottle bill.

One plan, described as the Clean Maine System, called for industry to parcel out money to towns and cities which make a commitment to solve their solid waste problems.

The second proposal was the adoption of a Maine Model Litter Control Act, which the committee said was similar to statutes enacted in the states of Washington and Virginia.

The committee, created last month with money from referendum opponents, said its recommendations were based on research on solid waste and litter control.

The report recommended that industries opposing the bottle bill — brewers, bottlers, distributors, can and bottle manufacturers and retailers — be prepared to finance half the cost of the program.

A spokesman for bottle bill opponents said these industries have made no commitment, financial or otherwise, to the recommendations. But he added: "We know now that industry will make a response on Monday morning. That will be a dynamite response..."

Supporters of the bottle bill said the report was vague, and didn't compel industry to spend any money for litter cleanup. In any case, the costs of the two plans would be borne by consumers, either in higher prices or additional taxes, a spokesman for the supporters said.

The committee which produced the report, headed by Gordon Weil of Harpswell, said the Clean Maine System would amount to a nongovernmental "revenue sharing" program for communitities which participate in efforts to control litter.

Such efforts, the report said, include adoption of a model litter control ordinance, participation in a solid waste management program, local antilitter drives, education programs and improved enforcement of litter laws.

The report said other industries would be encouraged to finance the other half of the $400,000 yearly cost. While no specific industries were mentioned, a bottle bill opponent said fast food chains and other industrial sources of potential litter were likely sources.

The proposed statute, based on the Washington model, would identify a single state agency as having prime jurisdiction for litter control.

Among its provisions would be requirement that owners of all vehicles and watercraft keep and use a litter bag. Violators would be fined no more than $10 for each violation. The report also suggested that cars be manufactured with built-in litter bag receptacles.

The University claims department heads are part of the administration and that librarians should not be included in the bargaining unit.

The decision by the MLRC has been pending since the four-month hearings concluded last March.

According to Larson, a pre-election hearing will be held Oct. 22 in Boston to determine where the elections will be held on campus, and how they will be conducted.

It is expected that the elections will be held by the end of November.

The MSP claims a dues-paying membership of 350 faculty, and is affiliated with the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) on a statewide basis and the National Education Association on a national level. The MSP is also affiliated with another group at the Boston campus, both under the auspices of the MTA. The MSP was begun about four years ago at Amherst.

The AAUP has a dues-paying membership of about 200 faculty, and Larson estimates that the organization was begun at Amherst in the mid-1950's. The local chapter is affiliated with the state and national chapters of the AAUP.

When the faculty at Amherst and Boston vote, they will be choosing between "no agent" and the two organizations. The majority vote will determine if there will be representation, and if so, which organization will become the agent.

MSP President Roberts estimates there are about 1400 faculty here that will be affected by the MLRC's decision, and about 300 to 400 at Boston. The University administration has never answered Roberts' request for a faculty roster, he said.

Roberts says the MSP will lobby for faculty concerns at the state house, while Larson says the AAUP will seek to work within the UMass administration to further faculty concerns, and then approach the legislature in conjunction with the UMass Board of Trustees.

The AAUP has not yet filed to become an organization lobbying without a paid legislative agent, although the MSP, through their state affiliate, has lobbyists representing over 60,000 state school teachers at all levels.

In a similar election in 1973, the faculty voted out the organizations in favor of having no union.

their scheduling. The computer also handles records, inventory, grades, and payroll checks. All of the full time employees at these campuses, and the part time employees including students, get paid by checks from this computer."

Cochrane said there are three shifts of personnel running the computer 24-hours a day to get the maximum usage out of the computer.

According to Cochrane, there are two aspects to the workings of a computer — capacity and programming. The capacity stores knowledge and information in a data bank, which can be retrieved in a milli-second or less. A program is designed to retrieve information from various stores of knowledge for a specific purpose.

He gave as an example OSCAR, a program used for scheduling purposes. The computer has so many of these programs to work with, it cannot handle all of the information given it, so those low on the priority list are affected first. The housing situation is a result of the capacity overload.

Cochrane said one of the foreseeable problems with students not reporting their off-campus addresses, is that spring pre-registration materials will have no address to be sent to. According to Cochrane, when a student is living off-campus, it is considered his permanent address, and all pre-registration material is usually sent there.

According to Cochrane, a lot of students who have just moved off-campus do not know what their address is going to be when they get up here, and before they tell the Housing Office their address, mail comes in for them with just "UMass" as an address.

the chance "to work and learn with the stars."

From 10 days of rehearsing together it appears that it is coming true since members of the cast have expressed satisfaction with the total experience.

"They're a great bunch of people and I'm having a marvelous time," said Kaye.

"They're acting cool. No one is acting in awe of me or any of the other Broadway stars," said Kaye. "They show an awful lot of respect."

"I suppose the biggest piece of advice I can offer to them is that they shouldn't rush off to Hollywood and Broadway right after college. I tell them that the two big towns just aren't ready for them," Kaye said.

"Get experience, stay in your own back yard for a few years, I tell them," said Kaye. "Get a few years of practice working with people and get to know different parts."

"One thing I tell them, don't think it's easy to be Hamlet. It's rough and it takes an awful lot of hard work," Kaye said. "Nothing good comes easy — and I know that."

old French stucco and wrought iron and watching people.

Ste. Genevieve was deliberately kept a small farm town. When industry wanted to swallow the precious farm land, the town fathers sent them north to the new settlement of St. Louis. Today, Ste. Genevieve is still a small (pop. 5,000) farm town, whose main claim to fame is that their bank was once robbed by Jesse James and his gang.

The days passed slowly. Bluffs dotted the Missouri side. The land got wild enough that my mind's eye could almost see Indians scouting from the cliffs. Coming around the bends, I almost expected a fleet of birch-bark canoes to swoop down the river.

We kept finding remnants of civilization on the sandbars. Tennis balls and frisbees were plentiful (we saved them and gave them to people). One night, Stan came up over a dune with a broken chaise lounge. He propped a pot under its weak support and stretched out in luxury.

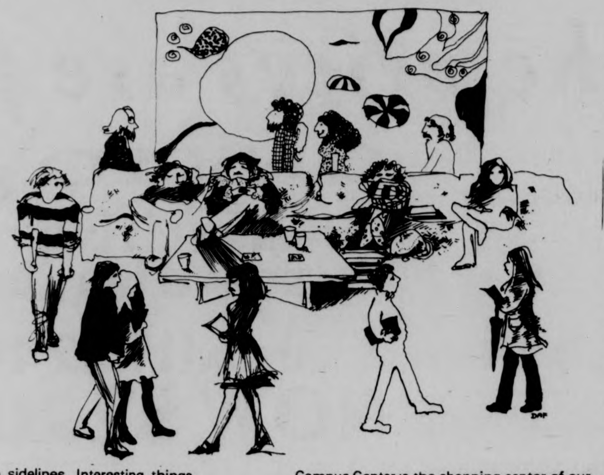
People-watching



Green cushions stacked on a wooden frame humbled below a large, brightly colored mural is stretching my imagination. Here I sit on the edge with my eyes open on the passers-by, people-watching.

It's raining outside, leaving everyone to green, yellow, red, and blue raincoats huddling through the campus center between classes — emerging from hidden stairways and between the piles of Collegians stacked-up for its audience.

So nice to have an hour to spare and stare at stacking strains of people. I'm a people-watcher and so I watch this one, that one. Everyone so different; everyone so free not really hit by the constraints of society. Here is an escape from some of the sickness of the world. One thing unique: so many different people in the same age group carrying on the antics half real-world, half college-world.

Three women dressed to the "tee": green corduroy gauchos, red skirt, black tight pants with red rouge and pink lipstick, idling by one of the couches. Oh, excuse me, says one man in a flowered shirt bumping into one of the women. Can I buy you a drink?

And knapsacks floating into one another. Excuse me. All milling at the tables set up on the sidelines. Interesting things.

Friends talking in chants, bees humming, no, a rumble is what it all sounds like. The Campus Center is the shopping center of our campus. It's the information center of our UMass world.

Some people walk, hoping no one will notice them hunching their heads low, eyes glancing side to side glancing quickly at faces about them. Trying to remain unobtrusive, but they are really the most obvious.

Food. Hunger — want something to eat? Bluewall and Hatch by day or the coffee shop any time. People passing by my coach munching, munching making me hungry, too.

Two lovers walking hand in hand. Two other lovers arguing, trying not to make it obvious. But I didn't mean to — of course you did — but no I didn't — shshshshshshshshsh — people will hear.....

Did you ever notice how many different types of walks there are? The basketball walk, up-down then up again, or the dainty walk.

No two people look alike. Funny even in this bizarre crowd. Black hair, red hair, brown hair, all different like the brightly colored mural above my head.

Colors cascading across the canvas all in different strains of color as the people I watch from the green couch.

Continental Walk needs your help

To the Editor:

The Pentagon is ripping off the people. Thirty-one years after Hiroshima we have more nuclear weapons and less "national security" than when the insane arms race began. Forty-four years after Roosevelt's New Deal we still have massive poverty, unemployment, and all the garbage big business pushes. Fifty-six years after women took the right to vote, we still don't have equal rights and America remains macho to the core more willing to invest money in napalm, B-1 Bombers, and bombs to kill than in programs to feed, house, and clothe. Johnson, Nixon, Kissinger, Ford all showed us their "manly" ways.

One hundred thirteen years after the Emancipation Proclamation Third World people in America are considered second class citizens by the Power Elite. Racism is an institution that keeps Blacks, Puerto Ricans, and Chicanos in rotten jobs, redlined neighborhoods, and poorer schools. Two hundred years after our "revolution" we still do not respect the treaties signed with the Indian nations. The Native Americans, whose lands we seized, have been made aliens in their own country.

It is time for America to see how HUMAN we can be. For this we need to work for a New America. Demonstrate in Washington, D.C. this weekend to take another step in that direction.

Schedule

Friday [tonight] 7:30 p.m. Women Strike for Peace greets Continental Walkers [folks who have been walking through communities since January from the East and West coasts to talk with residents and support local activities] at the Washington Ethical Society ... 8 p.m. Ralph Abernathy, Eugene McCarthy, and others speak at D.C. Community Rally in Lafayette Park.

Saturday 9 a.m. The Continental Walk including UMASS student converges on the Lincoln Memorial from three directions: 1] across the Key Bridge from Arlington; 2] down Connecticut Ave.; 3] down Rhode Island Ave ... 1:30 p.m. Walkers meet at Lincoln Memorial and walk to Sylvan Theater ... 2 p.m. Rally at Sylvan Theater [Washington Monument grounds] with Daniel Ellsberg, David Dellinger, Ralph Abernathy, Sid Lens. Anne Braden, Cora Weiss, Sam Lovejoy, Dave McReynolds, and others.

Sunday 9 a.m. Ecumenical Religious service ... 1:30 p.m. Peace and Justice Fair and workshops [locations to be announced].

Monday 9 a.m. Gather at Lincoln Memorial for march to the Pentagon ... 12 Noon Speakout at the Pentagon ... 12:30 p.m. March from Pentagon to HEW ... 3 p.m. Speakout at HEW ... 3:30 Proceed to White House to present demands to Ford.

The immediate demands include elimination of the death penalty; defeat of the Nixon S-1 police state bill0 moratorium on the construction of nukes; end of all aid to military dictatorships; unconditional and universal amnesty for all war resisters; recognition of and economic aid to Vietnam; passage of the Equal Rights Amendment; passage of Day Care legislation; an immediate halt in the production of nuclear bombs; full employment; passage of the Kennedy Health Bill; a 25 per cent cut in the Pentagon's budget for the next fiscal year, including elimination of the B-1, Trident, and Cruise Missile programs; repeal all laws making the use of marijuana illegal and all laws which discriminate on the basis of sexual preference; and statehood for the District of Columbia. Not one of the preceeding needs to wait years for action. Each could be carried out in six months.

We realize the capitalism we have artifically raises prices, causes unemployment, buries small farmers and small operations, wastes natural resources, pollutes and leaves cities in decay. It must be changed.

Our topsy-turvy global, domestic and economic priorities are highly correlated with war and to turn them around we must deal with sexism, racism, militarism, hierarchy, and the prevailing ripoff.

Join us in Washington tonight or tomorrow and stay awhile. We'll be sleeping in churches and listening to speakers and music together. MANY PEOPLE NEED TRANSPORTATION. IF YOU HAVE A CAR OR VAN AND LIKE TO SHARE EXPENSES, OFFER A RIDE. WE HAVE FOLKS WAITING WHO CANNOT AFFORD AMTRAK OR THE BUS. PLEASE CONTACT US NOW AT THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE.

Victory in unity

To the Editor:

The economic crisis continues to worsen despite all of President Ford's statements to the contrary. The Jerry-Jimmy show offers no alternative but continued cutbacks of essential social services and increased unemployment.

Right here in Western Massachusetts agents of the Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms Division of the Treasury Department work at destroying the labor union movement. The police in Northampton continually harass Puerto Rican young people. In Amherst landlords band together to block passage of needed rent control laws. And here at the University special education programs are slashed in budget saving measures. While all of this is going on major corporations continued to reap record profits.

The cure for all of this is the creation of a unified movement of trade unions, community organizations, and students to fight for control over our lives. A model for that movement is the struggle at Hostos Community College in New York. Hostos, the only bilingual college on the East Coast, was ordered shut down last year by the New York City Board of Higher Education. Hostos serves a 98 per cent black and Latin American student body. Adults over 25 comprise 51 per cent of its students.

In response to the order to close the school, a coalition of students, workers at the school, and staff banded together and demanded that it be kept open. For a time members of the coalition occupied the school and ran classes there — even setting up a day care center in the school president's office. There were repeated large-scale demonstrations, culminating in a march of several thousand people on the Emergency Finance Control Board of New York City, demanding that the school be kept open. As a result of this massive community organizing the school remains open.

Ramon Jimenez, a leader of the struggle to save Hostos College will be speaking Monday October 18 at 7:30, 917 Campus Center. Ramon will share his organizing experiences with all of us at that time. The fight for a decent education is part of the struggle for self-determination. Come out and hear Ramon Jimenez. In unity there is victory!

Some observations

To the Editor:

Thus far this semester the Collegian editorial page has consisted of two features of note. They are Charlotte Allen — champion of hate, and Martha Newcomb — champion of wisdom. Charlotte's articles usually raise my blood pressure while Martha's characteristically raise my spirits. Charlotte shares with us her bitterness towards life while Martha shares her eagerness.

A few things are thus brought to mind. One is bewilderment over the fact that Charlotte Allen is essentially the only feminist writer the Collegian sponsors. Does it take Charlotte's brand of fervor to get a pen moving? She alone carries the banner but we are distracted from the flag as we're clobbered with the flagpole.

Martha Newcomb did me a tremendous favor Thursday. In her column she said absolutely everything I've wanted to say and or hear about sexism in general and Charlotte Allen in particular. For this I thank her.

And Charlotte Allen, you deserve some praise as well. You prompted Marth's essay just as she did mine.

What Charlotte Allen has done for the women's movement, Evel Knieval has done for the space program [borrowing from Buchwald]. She must be given credit for one thing — she keeps this editorial page alive.

Driven to rage

To the Editor:

The attempt by the GSS to blame the Administration for a 38 per cent increase in the GSS tax is at best transparent. It becomes particularly transparent if one considers that the same GSS Administration of Stack and Federow raised the tax by 40 per cent last year. I am tired of the GSS "old boys" digging into my pocket to fund their radical political friends. The building of their little empire at my expense must stop.

I am certain that the GSS Officers think that what they do is important. They are mistaken. The GSS serves a trivial function. I do not share their notions of morality and social conscience. That is my privilege. Unfortunately, it is their privilege to tax me to fund their friends and pet causes and that undemocratic fact drives me to rage.

The ultimate test

For those of you who don't know, the Graduate Records Exam (GREs), are being given this Saturday at UMass and hundreds of other colleges across the U.S. As for myself, and the others who are taking the exam, this could mean the difference between getting accepted to a graduate school and not being accepted. So in light of its tremendous importance and the weight it carries for graduate school admissions, I was wondering how the subject of the GRE's would have been handled in biblical times. (The part of God is played by Woody Allen.).

THE PSALM OF GRADUATION

Chapter One: "The Ultimate Test."

He stood alone. About him was the flower and seed of his ancestors and countrymen. He had traveled over miles of rock and dirt; Through mud and rain and finally he was at the point of deliverance. Here he was to speak with He Who Speaks To All, and he was to learn the way.

So he waited. Until far unto the night when suddenly, he was awoken with the flash of lightning which made him think it was the end of the world. Then, he heard the voice of voices proclaim for all to hear,

"I am the voice of destiny! There is no other voice like mine! Who is it who comes unto the valley of which I am king!"

"It is I, oh one who judges all and is judged by no one. Only one of the many who have traveled far for your audience."

"What is it you wish from me, you, who are but one of tens and tens of thousands!"

"I wish to be recognized and counted".

"Recognized as what?"

"As the person I am."

"Counted for what?"

"For being allowed to continue in the direction of my choosing."

"There are others like you who also wish the same but you cannot all continue."

"I stand apart from the rest. No one can do what I can do."

"Each one says unto me the same, That he alone should be chosen from among the others."

"Then how shall you choose?"

"I shall present a test to you and the others and whoever succeeds the best shall be my choice."

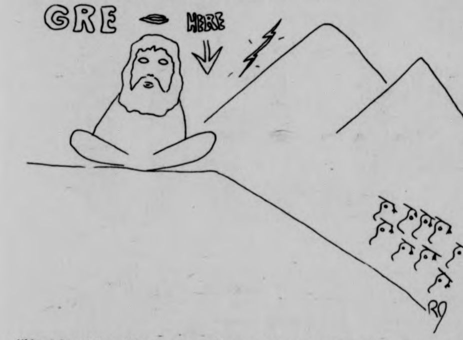
"Will it be a test of survival?"

"Nay."

"Will it be a test of pureness of heart?"

"Nay."

"Will it be a test of humanity and communication?"



"Nay! Nay! It will be a test unlike any you've ever seen. I shall ask from you answers and I shall put before you words and names of which you have never seen before and will never see again and I shall command you to fulfill my requirements and if you do not do satisfactory, according to my standards, then you shall fall into a deep pit of depression and will spend many hours in idleness."

And he looked upon the test and it was the longest and hardest he had ever seen and he said unto the giver of the test,

"Are you to say that my direction will be determined by this one test?"

"I am to say that you are to meet my standards or you will have to find your own way through the valley!"

And he left, leaving he who was alone to be alone once more.

Censorship is elitist

By PAUL SHEPARD

Editor's note: this is the second commentary in a two-part series on pornography and censorship. The first part appeared in Tuesday's Collegian.

Personally, I disagree that pornography tends to encourage sexist and oppressive attitudes. In fact, I find most pornography to be so shallow, so boring and so unsatisfying that, far from being led to imitate the attitudes and actions depicted, I am led to seek something better.

However we might define the problem of pornography, if a definition can be found, I would suggest that censorship can never be a solution to the problem. In fact, I would suggest that pornography is the result of censorship and not the reverse.

Sex has always been censored, both officially and unofficially, in our Judeo-Christian society. People go to see sexually explicit films because they are curious, not because they approve of the sexist attitudes depicted there.

If we react immaturely to pornography initially it is because censorship has prevented an earlier development of healthy attitudes. If sex is exploited crassly and commercially it is because censorship has distorted our values. It is ignorance and repression that gets exploited and ignorance and repression are the result of censorship.

It is not difficult to find agreement upon the desirability of a non-sexist, non-oppressive society. The question is how to get there from here. I fail to understand how oppression can be resisted by further oppression.

Censorship itself is oppressive and non-oppressive goals cannot be reached by oppressive means. The means must not contradict the ends because in the final analysis there are no ends but only means.

Censorship is not merely oppressive to some particular point of view. It is oppressive in principle. It establishes the principle that there exist some point of view which must not be examined, that some ideas are simply too powerful to be rationally considered and recognized as self-defeating.

Censorship is elitest. It is an obvious truism that if censorship is to exist there must be at least two groups of people, one doing the censoring and another being censored. If it is true that some ideas are too dangerously powerful to be rationally resisted then it is unclear how the censors are to remain uncorrupted by those same ideas.

To the advocates of censorship, however, the answer is clear. Some ideas may be too powerful for some people, perhaps even for most people, but not for all people. There are some people who are inherently stronger, more rational, more sane and more capable of judging than others. It is this latter group of superior being which will make judgments for us all.

Censorship is elitest because it implies that rational judgment is a gift bestowed upon the few and which cannot be learned by the many. Censorship is elitest because it implies the existence of an entire class of inferior people, people who can never be trusted to judge for themselves what is in their own and society's best interests.

Censorship denies that good judgment must be learned by actually making real decisions and evaluating the consequences in a free and open society. Censorship denies that good judgment is more than mere indoctrination and conformity to the official position. Finally, censorship denies that people are inherently capable of censoring themselves.

Censorship is ultimately a form of slavery, perhaps of the worst kind because it aspires to be total. Having denied the people access to competing ideas, the censors can not appeal to reason to support their position but must ultimately resort to force and deception to maintain their power.

What is needed on this campus and in this society is not more censorship but a genuine dialogue between competing ideas. It is only in free and open dialogue that we acquire the skill to make good judgments, to rationally evaluate our goals and the means of achieving them.

There is no lack of persons to tell us what to think but there is a pathetic lack of persons willing to help us learn to think for ourselves.

Readers respond to 'UMass Male' letter

To the Editor:

We the undersigned residents of the eighth floor of Washington Tower, would like to make the following response to the letter to the editor, "the UMass Male?". We feel that the two extreme classifications of the UMass Male [especially the constant referral to Southwest males] were unfair and unjustified, putting the average male completely out of focus. We will agree that we are all somewhat sexist, and often have the urge to breed, but it takes two to copulate. The epitome of human relationships is a serious matter, and at times results in communication without words.

In our opinion the girl who wrote the letter must be radiating two extreme messages; 1] seductive messages, which bring out the male's urge to fulfill the need for deep, personal relationships; turning him into an uncontrollable sex maniac; 2] totally uninteresting, unstimulating messages, which turn the guy off and makes it hard for him to communicate on an interesting level.

Therefore, we feel that the woman who wrote the letter is sexually frustrated, and does not appear to know how to handle it. We feel her techniques of soliciting attention need serious revision. And in conclusion, we feel that her means are at fault, not the UMass male.

Donald Bishop and five others

To the Editor:

It is said "behind every strong man stands a strong woman". Let it also be said that "in front of every boring man sits a boring woman."

Please don't generalize, Sex maniacs and bores? Come on! Blonds are dumb and ALL divorcee's are hot to trot? It's a limited man who believes that, just as it is a limited lady that holds your point of view.

Men do get boring if they must play a one-way twenty questions gig. Show some genuine interest in your men and I'm sure they will become less boring.

As for sex maniacs, men and women alike are first noticed for attractiveness and personality, emotions come with exposure to each other. When a man is sexually attracted to you and shows it, be complimented, even if you don't share his feelings it shows you're an interesting woman.

If you don't share his feelings at least be civil and return his complement by not acting like he has three heads.

There's still a few BOYS and GIRLS into "Wam-bam thank you mam," But I hope there's other men and women that believe "IF IT'S MORE THAN ONE NIGHT, THAT'S A GOOD LOVERS DELIGHT".

Jarrod Hurley

To the Editor:

In reply to the questions put forth in the "THE UMASS MALE?";

a] These men probably adopted their tactics in response to the teasers and "inexperienced bores" of the female sex.

b] Yes, there are "normal" guys on campus, Virginia.

c] They probably don't "hang out", at least not at bars on Southwest beer blasts. Why not just relax and see what happens?

d) Enjoy the movie.

Erik Aretander

This is in rebuttal to that ludicrous article about the UMASS male published in Wednesday's edition. Never have I heard such half-truths, unsupported statements, and sweeping generalizations. Am I to understand that on a campus of this size that all the males fall into two categories: the sex maniac and the inexperienced bore? When I was in Sociology 101 it was called stereotyping.

Are things really that bad that you are reduced to seek male companionship at parties, bars and the sort? Instead, why don't you try museums, movies, art exhibits, concerts, some cultural festival or community projects.

This would provide an excellent opportunity in which to meet people of your own choosing. But don't expect Prince Charming to appear and sweep you away. Or judging from your statement maybe you would be better off with a programmed robot.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Everywomen's Ctr. offers new service

Everywoman's Center is offering a new service to area women beginning immediately. A welfare and survival counselor will be available at the center on a drop-in and appointment basis from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Tuesdays and 1 to 4 p.m. on Thursdays.

The counseling will be done by Jane Holappa, a member of the Western Mass. Coalition of Welfare Lawyers and Advocates and one of the founders of the Community Survival Center in Amherst.

This service will be in addition to the services of the Poor Women's Task Force at Everywoman's Center, who help women on welfare return to school at UMass, provide counseling for these women, and advocate for welfare women within the University.

Holappa stresses that all women adversely affected by the economic situation, not only women currently receiving welfare benefits, are urged to use this service for help in finding ways to meet basic survival needs.

Holappa can be reached by phone at the center during the above hours at 545-0883.

Science exploration at Hampshire Coll.

Quarks and quasars, the mysteries of the human brain, the origins of life ...

Over 400 college teachers have applied to participate in these and eight other areas of study in the NSF Chautauqua-Type Short Courses Program at Hampshire College this year.

Hampshire is one of 13 national field centers offering the Chautauqua series, a cooperative venture in which the National Science Foundation, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, course directors, and participating schools and teachers share the costs.

The primary objective of the program is to make new knowledge in science and science-related fields available to faculty members who teach undergraduate students. Chautauqua courses are divided into 13 two-day sessions meeting first in the fall, later in the spring. Participants emerge in course-related projects in the interim.

With no scarcity of applicants, however, Hampshire's 275 places for this year's program are already filled.

Participants will come to the college from throughout the Northeast beginning with the first two-day session Monday and Tuesdays. It is entitled "Simple and Complex Societies: An Anthropological View of the Transformation of Traditional Peoples," and is led by Andrei Simic of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology, University of Southern California. The second session of this course is scheduled Feb. 28-March 1.

Other courses include:

— "Mathematical Modeling and Voting" with William F. Lucas, Department of Operations Research, Cornell University. First session — Wednesday and Thursday, second session — March 3-4.

— "Economics: Innovations in the Teaching of the Introductory Course" with Jeff R. Clark, College and University Division, Joint Council on Economic Education. First session — Oct. 25-26; second session — March 24-25.

Hampshire exhibits Boston artist's work

Drawings and wood inlays by John Fusco will be on display at Hampshire College in the Johnson Library Center gallery beginning with an opening reception Sunday from 7 to 9 p.m.

Fusco, who is currently teaching courses in graphics and design at the Boston Architectural Center, will exhibit over 20 works of art. His drawings are non-objective and primarily in black and white. His wood inlays consist of two or more thin sheets of wood combined to create a design.

The 34-year-old artist will discuss his work Wednesday at 1:30 p.m. in the gallery. The exhibit closes Friday, Oct. 29. Gallery hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Fusco studied art at the Museum School of Boston University, has participated in a number of group showings and had a one-man show at the Copley Society in Boston about two years ago.

Tickets are half price for UMass-Amherst students, and a $1 discount will be given to all other students and senior citizens.

One of the world's foremost guitar virtuosos and acknowledged to be the finest lutenist of his generation, Bream has played in early every country in the world. Each year, he makes a three-week concert tour of the United States and has toured throughout Europe, Australia and Japan.

Six times honored by the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences, Bream received the Edison Award for the best recording of the year in 1968 and 1974.

Five-College pubs. intersession catalog

The 1977 Five-College January Term Catalong will again be published and distributed Nov. 15, in time for the January Term and spring registration at all five Valley institutions. The copy deadline for anyone wishing to include an activity in the catalog is Friday, Oct. 22. Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Friday, October 15 — Born today, you are one of those exceptionally good friends -- or, when crossed completely, one of those formidable foes. Ingenious, highly original in your approach to life, whether events be of a routine nature or inherently bizarre, you are never put off by the appearances of things, much less by the actuality. Forceful and aggressive, you refuse to take no for an answer when you want something badly enough; when, however, you don't care particularly one way or the other, you are a model of adaptability, demonstrating yourself willing to go with the majority. That most people judge you on what they see rather than on your own personal motives is fortunate, for if they did not, you would probably not fare nearly so well in such areas as unselfishness.

A keen observer of the human scene, you are quick to put two and two together and, where other people are concerned, to come up with four. You are without rival in your ability to size up a situation into which you may enter quite unexpectedly. Highly efficient, insightful and accurate, you are especially suited to work that requires research and the collection of data. You know what is important to any given investigation and what is dead wood, or even more dangerous to accurate results, a red herring.

You are one of those who learns more from practical experience than from textbook learning; what you see and hear on your own stays with you longer and more accurately than what you read.

critical of another's work that he or she refuses to labor further in your behalf. Offer praise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Make this a Saturday for sharing activities with family members. Children may bring you special joy late in the day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Your own sympathetic nature may keep you from making the progress you should today. Try to be more objective, especially in the morning.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — An excess of emotion early in the day may leave you drained to the point of being unable to respond effectively at day's end.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Your desire to be of service is demonstrated in your actions and reactions at the time of another's plea for aid.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Practice makes perfect -- now more than ever. Be aware of, however, concerning the boredom inherent in repetition.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A susceptibility to flattery makes you fair game today. Don't take another's words of praise too literally. Recall past criticism.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Taurus who shirks his responsibility early in the day will find it multiplied by day's end. Don't follow another's lead in the afternoon.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — An inclination to be more charitable than you can afford to be causes argument, whether at home or on the employment scene. Defense comes with difficulty.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You can get by today with only a little personal effort. What you cannot do without trying, however, is maintain a friendship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Difficulties attendant upon a new phase of your work disturb your sense of harmony today. Consult a loved one for an unexpectedly good view.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A tendency to think more of your own work than its expertise would warrant may cause you to miss out on a chance to improve in the afternoon.

Bluebird forecast

Sudden Changes On the Way

There are no major planetary transactions until Monday when Mars, the energetic planet and sometimes god-of-war, will line up with Uranus, the planet of sudden change. Both planets are in the early part of Scorpio, the sign of death-and-rebirth. Since both planets promote spontanaeity, the nature of this coming energy wave is difficult to forsee. But it is certain that, as we move towards Monday, we will be wrapping up the effects of old changes and getting ready for new changes.

Rational insight concerning the coming potentialities was available last night around 10:41 and, if we can recall any "flashes" we had around then, we'll be in a better position to ride the waves toward Monday. Our emotional consciousness regarding Mars and Uranus may be challenged between 12:36 a.m. and 7:18 a.m. Sunday as the Moon forms four connections with those planets. Sunday around noon we may find insight regarding ways in which we can cool martial heat with compassion, if we keep our third eye open. Between 8:49 and 10:17 a.m. Monday we'll get a chance to figure out the new potentials, if we don't get lost in a dream and if we are able to face our fears.

Otherwise, between now and then it's a matter of minor emotional ups and downs as the Moon performs her daily duties pulling us, like the tides, around the Zodiac. She's in Cancer (the sign of Mother Ocean) until 5:49 p.m. Saturday, so we'll tend to seek warm cozy comforts and emotional security, as benefits the nature of this sign. Today, towards 1:43 p.m., we may have to work for smiles; such work may receive a small dividend around 1:57 p.m. After that, work on developing our personality and sense of purpose will feel erstwhile through 10:35 p.m.

Saturday morning will start harmoniously, on the emotional or lunar level, but minor disillusionments may pop up towards noon. The Moon moves into Leo (the sign of the Royal Lion) and forms a mildly harmonious connection with Jupiter at a quarter-to-six, so the evening should get off to a happy start since he is the most jovial planet in the sky.

Sunday morning could be mixed but Sunday afternoon looks fairly happy. Sunday evening may depend upon how well we feel about our personal development.

The background for the weekend's activity centers on the Full Moon of last Friday. The Moon was reflecting the light of the Libran Sun from the sign of Aries (self-development). As Libra is the sign of balance in relationships, the solar message has been focused on our need to center and share with a partner. The Aries Full Moon reminded us that we can't fully share unless we're developing our Self to its fullest potential. If we're lagging in Self-hood or if our partnerships with a close friend, lover, and-or institution are not working, Monday's weather may bring sudden changes. But Uranus also gives inspiration and insight, so if we are honestly working towards growth, we may receive a sudden boost towards our aspirations.

Scientist theorizes space—collision

MOSCOW (UPI) — An enormous Siberian explosion that shook the entire globe 68 years ago may have been caused by the crash of a nuclear-powered space ship from an alien planet, a Soviet scientist said Thursday.

Most scientists believe the explosion was a meteorite.

The Soviet news agency Tass said scientists estimated the strength of the explosion was between 20 and 40 million tons of TNT, or up to 2,000 times more powerful than the first atomic bomb.

The Soviet news agency Tass reported scientist Alexei Zolotov has just returned from a survey of the area that found "higher than normal radioactivity" in remnants of trees near the explosion site.

"He assumes that the body which ripped into the earth's atmosphere might have been of artificial origin, i.e., it might have been a craft made by intelligent beings from other worlds of the universe," Tass said.

The blast in a remote river valley in Tunguska, central Siberia, shook measuring devices all over Earth on June 30, 1908, and was heard 745 miles away. Trees were uprooted up to 30 miles from the site and the ground shuddered so violently that horses pulling plows 240 miles away were thrown to the ground.

Most scientists have believed the shock was recorded by a meteorite, or perhaps a comet.

Interviewed by Tass, Zolotov said his team collected samples of permafrost soil dating back to 1908 and bits of trees which survived the catastrophe.

"Our investigation in the course of 17 years seems to confirm our assumption that what took place in the Tungus taiga was a nuclear explosion."

"The possibility of our planet being visited by intelligent beings from other worlds is not entirely improbable," Zolotov told Tass in answer to a question.

The agency did not give figures for Zolotov's radiation studies and it did not identify him beyond saying hewas "the noted Soviet scientist... who has been studying the Tungus mystery for years."

DH in series 'big joke', but Sparky has man for it

CINCINNATI [UPI] — Manager Sparky Anderson of the Cincinnati Reds Thursday called the designated hitter rule "one of the biggest jokes in our game" but said he would probably use one in the World Series.

"I would like not to use it, I dislike it that much," said Anderson. "But there are people on your ballclub that you have to respect. It would be a terrible thing to put pride ahead of winning and then have it cost you a ballgame."

The designated hitter, which is used only in the American League, is being put into the World Series — by a decision of the commissioner's office — for the first time this year and will be in effect in alternate years. Most National League owners are totally against the rule and the Reds even filed suit a few weeks ago to try and get the rule stricken from the World Series.

"I would love to show everybody over there (in the American League) that it's a joke, one of the biggest jokes in this game that we've had in a long time," said Anderson. "I've been kicking around the idea of not using one but the chance is so slight that it's almost out of existence."

Anderson dislikes the designated hitter rule because he believes, like the rest of the rule's detractors, that it takes away too much from the strategy of the game.

"I like to think a manager is somebody," said Anderson. "The whole part of the game revolves around the mistakes you make, especially with regard to your pitchers. When you take away from the people and the press the right to second-guess the manager, what fun is it? You take away the strategy of when to pinch-hit for your pitcher and you might as well bring in Harvard professors to run your ballclub. You wouldn't need anyone else."

Anderson, though, is resigned to using the designated hitter in the World Series and he will use Dan Driessen, a left-handed hitter, against right-handed pitching and right-handed swinging Bob Bailey against lefties.

Driessen had an off-season at the plate, batting only .247, but he still managed to drive in 44 runs in 98 games while Bailey hit .298 in 69 games. Quite naturally, the two players don't share their manager's view about the designated hitter.

"It's gonna give me an opportunity to get in some more games, so I've got to like it," said Bailey. "I think our lineup is going to be awesome no matter if we use a designated hitter or not."

While some players, among them Hank Aaron, have found it difficult getting used to being a designated hitter, Bailey anticipates no problems.

"It's just like pinch-hitting, except it's probably easier because if you fail the first time you still have other chances," said Bailey. "There's not anything I can't do in the game, except field a ground ball.

"I'll also walk up and down in the dugout to keep my legs in shape. It's not that easy sitting around and not playing," he said.

B's amend Orr suit

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Bruins amended a federal suit against the Chicago Black Hawks Thursday to add as defendants Bobby Orr, Bobby Orr Enterprises, Ltd., The National Hockey League and NHL president Clarence Campbell.

The original suit, filedlast week in U.S. District Court in Boston, seeks to enjoin the Black Hawks from playing Orr until the Bruins receive compensation for the star defenseman. Orr signed with Chicago last June as a free agent.

"We have tried since last Saturday to arrange a meeting with Chicago and National Hockey League officials," said Bruins' president Paul Mooney in announcing the amendment to the suit. "Efforts for such a meeting failed as of noon today."

The Bruins say although they waived rights to league arbitration in the matter of compensation, they did not waive compensation itself.

In published remarks, Campbell, Orr's attorney Alan Eagleson and Black Hawks owner Arthur Wirtz have said the Bruins are not entitled to compensation.

Orr, 28, has won the Norris Trophy as the league's top defenseman in eight of his nine full seasons.

Crew

UMass anxious, ready for Head of Charles

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

On Sunday, October 17, there will be a nationwide crew meet, the Head of the Charles. Roughly 200 colleges and universities, nearly 2000 individual competitors and considerably more spectators will merge at the B.U. bridge. Just imagine the Charles river harboring a continous stream of boats, with all different colored uniforms, from 10:00 a.m. - 4:30. It is, simply put, a spectacle.

What the Rosebowl game is to the sport of football, the Head of the Charles is precisely that to the world of crew. Fortunately, Howard (The Mouth) Cosell won't be there. But ABC sports should be. Yours truly is a self-confessed football addict. But this crew business is hot stuff. Any event that attracts immense crowds and the vast number of participating the Head has acquired has got to beat those dull, lackluster Monday night "football" games. Sorry, Howard.

"The race is really the premier fall rowing event in the U.S. and will be the UMass crew's only outside competition for this fall season." UMass crew coach Bill Mahoney assures us.

Bill Mahoney should know. Here is a man who on his better days has competed with the best in the country and won (Names, you say? How about Jim Deitz, perennial U.S. champion or Sean Drea, Irish national champion, etc.)

You won't find any professionals in this sport. Mahoney is not out there for profit. He's there because he loves it. A crew person loves his sport. It is, as they say, a "purists sport".

"There are people, Mahoney said, "who are there just to be there, the George Plimptons of the rowing world, who row because they have always rowed in the Head (they would never miss it) and are just participating because they enjoy rowing, want to be more than just a spectator, and all their friends are there. These are the kind of rowers who make the Head as big and enjoyable as it is."

Mahoney then listed the men in competition: "For UMass, the men will be competing in the Intermediate 8," the "Intermediate 4," the "Lightweight 4," and the "Elite 4." The women will row in the women's eight-oared event."

Lineups for the men's crew are: Int. 8 — (all sophomores) Jeff Swanson (bow), Sepp Bereschneider (position 2) Dave Rubin (3), Mike Hyland (4), Jim Clair (5), Dave Caruso (6), John Politis (7), Rob Gardner (stroke) and coxswain Steve Banner. In the Intermediate 4, there are Dave Kumlin (sr. 5), Mark Brown (so. 6), Mike Partridge (sr. 7), Dick Dunn (jr. stroke) and coxswain Mark Lyle. Elite 4: Dave Burke (sr. 5), Steve Frackleton (jr. 6), Mike Melvin (sr. 7), Frank Miconi (ir. stroke) and coxswain Andy Benton. Last, but not least, here are the UMass. lightweight 4: (under 160) Mark Boulianis (so. 5), Rick Edwards (jr. 6), Jeff Swanson (so. 7), Hank Cullen (sr. stroke) and Mark Lyle (cox).

Coach Mahoney also added that the "womens lineup for the 8 is not settled as of now, as seat racing continues for the opportunity to compete."

The coach is competing in the Elite single, a prestigious event. Among those he will row against are Deitz and Drea. The UMass "Elite 4" will compete against the U.S. "Olympic 4" from the Montreal Games.

"Our approach is to allow our rowers to compete as hard as they wish, but to have the thrill of participating, and not worry about winning. Also, the Head used to be held on the last weekend in October but has been gradually moved ahead on the calendar,

IM—It attracts all kinds

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

From chemistry majors to business administration majors, the types of students who are involved in UMass' Intramural program come from all corners of the campus.

"The students that are taking advantage of our program now are extremely different with respect to their abilities and backgrounds," said Ted Schmidt, director of the Intramural program. He said that a lot of students realize that athletics play a large part in the university education as it helps in the development of the overall person and not just the mind.

"Basically, we have three categories of students involved," Schmidt said. "We have the person who is looking for the competition, the ones looking for the social aspects of team sports, and those that are in it just for the fun of it." This was simplified further by supervisor Denise Beaudoin who listed the two types of athletes that she thought were involved in the program. "There are those who are out to play the game and have fun and those who want to succeed and win," Beaudoin said.

The students involved in the program that I talked to, claimed they were looking for a way to keep themselves in shape without taking too much time from their studies and they saw IM competition as a good way to relax after or before the day's studies. Others thought that it was a good way to meet a lot of interesting people that they otherwise wouldn't have come in contact with. It seemed that students really did care about their physical well-being as I talked to more of them. A lot of students who were concerned with high academic performance were just as concerned about keeping themselves in shape and not neglecting their bodies during the school year.

Other students involved in the program are some athletes who compete on the intercollegiate level, but don't compete in these sports within the intramurals. They are looking for an organized program of competition to keep them in physical and mental shape during their sport's off-season. Also, there are individuals who don't compete in the team sports, but take advantage of the open-recreation program which includes such activities as weightlifting, swimming, bowling, and jogging. These people are just looking for athletic development without having to follow a schedule.

"Students are not the only ones who take advantage of our program" Schmidt said.

"There were 553 faculty and staff members and 555 graduate students listed in the program," he said, as he quoted some figures from last year's statistics which he promised to be higher this year. He also listed the ratio of men to women in the program which was 6-3, respectively.

Equestrian

Riding team to host show

By SUE SCANLON

The UMass equestrian team will host an intercollegiate horse show next weekend on Saturday, October 23 at Tillson Farm. The show will begin at 9:00 a.m., with food and refreshments on the grounds. Spectators are urged to come and enjoy the competition.

Fourteen colleges from the New England area will be competing in the UMass show. In intercollegiate showing, classes range from beginner to advanced levels. The advanced riders must also compete in jumping classes. Riders are judged on their control and guidance of the horse as well as their own position, seat and hands. The hosting college supplies the horses for the show. Just before each class, each rider draws a horse from an envelope. Thus, the classes are a true test of horsemanship since the horses are chosen only minutes before each class. Riders are not allowed to warm up on their selected horses.

Last weekend, the UMass equestrian team traveled to Sterling, Mass. for a show hosted by Worcester State College. It was the first intercollegiate show of the season. The team did exceptionally well with much of its strength coming from its younger members. Freshman Whitney Buttrick captured the high point rider award for the show. Other blue ribbon winners were Donna Quellette, Susan Scanlon, and Michelle Fedele.

Coach Sarah Carlson stated that "this year's team shows great promise for a good show season. Although many of the riders are freshmen and sophomores, they display the potential to be a top team. Along with this, we also have the advantage of a strong team spirit."

Road runners restful and ready for tri-meet

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Having recovered from torrential rainstorms and a tail end of a hurricane experienced during last Saturday's meet in New York City, the UMass roadrunners will take their 8-1 season record on the road to Vermont where they will run against Vermont and New Hampshire in a Yankee Conference tri meet at 3:00 p.m.

The Minutemen will be seeking their seventh and eighth consecutive victories in this final tri-meet before the conference championship in two weeks.

The Minutemen are not expecting any stiff competition from either the Wildcats or the Catamounts as both teams are in the middle of sub-500 records and in the midst of rebuilding years.

The Vermont squad is led by veterans Jim Eliot, Bob Milligan, and Rich Stholes but none are recognized as the top 15 runners in New England. Vermont does have two excellent Massachusetts-born freshmen. Tim Robinson, from Sudbury, and Andy Voohres, from Falmouth, are expected to be promising Catamount runners in the future. Both were highly sought after by New England schools.

New Hampshire should pose more of a threat to the harriers as it is led by sophomores Rich Crossin and Rich Rheinhold. Crossin was the Connecticut state two mile champ and has beaten UMass number four runner Louis Panaccione in the three mile event in outdoor track.

For UMass, both coaches Ken O'Brien and Arnie Morse are pleased to see the return of captain John McGrail and Frank Carroll. Carroll was forced to miss ten days due to a mild case of the flu and McGrail was unable to see action last meet due to his law boards.

Coming off important victories over Manhattan, Syracuse, and Connecticut in a driving rainstorm, the harriers are looking forward to an easy relaxed meet. Eleven members of the varsity and eight of the junior varsity will see action.

Number one UMass runner Mike Quinn and fourth man Louis Panaccione will be rested as both have run in ten consecutive meets. Quinn has won three of the four tri-meets UMass has had this year.

"We want to give both Mike and Louis some rest and a chance to really have some time to prepare for the Yankee Conference in two weeks," Morse said. "This meet should give both myself and coach O'Brien a chance to really pick a top seven for our championship meet."

Recently the UMass-Harvard meet held along with Providence College on September 28 was termed invalid by Ken O'Brien and Harvard coach Bill McCurdy. During the meet, several of the UMass runners took a wrong turn on the course due to a Harvard spotter's misdirection. The meet will be termed as a nonscoring contest.

Providence College, is officially declared the winner of the meet as four of Providence's runners were also caught in the course snafu but still managed to win the meet.

Women face Keene

By PATTY AMERO
Collegian Staff

The UMass Women's tennis team hopes to even out its record at 3-3 when it faces Keene State this afternoon. The match today will be played on the NOPE courts at 3:30.

Jennifer Ranz, who was unable to play in the last match against Springfield College, will be back in the number one singles position. The number two through four spots will be played by Dawn Minaai, Carolyn Mooney, and Kathy Sullivan. Martha Awiszus, who is currently undefeated this season will be the fifth singles position.

Captain Nancy O'Neil and Karen Holt team up to fill the number one doubles spot. The second doubles will consist of Jeanette Flynn and Leslie Howell.

UMass defeated the netwomen from Keene State last year. Coach Ken Rubin expressed confidence in the team. "We beat them last year and we're pretty sure we can beat them again this year," he said.

UMass' strongest win this season was when it defeated Central Connecticut 7-0. Coach Rubin said "Central Connecticut beat Keene State and we beat Central Connecticut so I think this is indicative of the kind of team we will be up against.

"Doubles should come through and now that Jennifer Ranz is in the number one singles spot again I feel we have a strong team," said Rubin. "We shouldn't have any problems."

Field Hockey

UM hosts Lancers

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

After an upset loss to Bridgewater Wednesday, the UMass field hockey team will meet Worcester State today at 3:00 at NOPE field.

Despite playing excellent hockey in the first half, the Minutewomen were defeated 1-0 in Wednesday's game, bringing their overall record to 3-4. It was the fourth straight game in which the Minutewomen fell apart in the second half.

"I don't know what's wrong," said Coach Judith Davidson. "We played an outstanding first half. Everyone played magnificently. But in the second half we have up."

It's not a case of playing over their heads, either. "I think that we've been a better team than all others we've played, except for Springfield," the coach commented. "Worcester is not one of the stronger teams on our schedule; I have a feeling that we'll break out of our slump tomorrow."

One of the standouts in Wednesday's game was goalie Kathy Gipps, whom the coach singled out for praise. Bridgewater took 15 shots on goal (to UMass-four); Kathy stopped all but one. Also cited were Gayle Hutchinson, Sue Kibling and Jody Wickman. "Gayle (sweeper position), had been playing back inside the 25 yard line. Now, she's moving out more and is doing a great job."

Coach Davidson plans no strategy changes for tomorrow's game. "The key for the game and for the rest of the season is putting together two good halves. Our problem is not to do with a lack of a particular skill of lack of conditioning. It's not something that we can practice for." The coach also does not plan any major lineup changes.

Spikers travel east, hope to stop slide

By MIKE WITOWSKI

The UMass varsity volleyball team will try to get its act together and come up with a win or two as the Minutewomen travel to Boston tomorrow for a tri-match with Northeastern and MIT. The match will be held at Dockser Hall on the Northeastern campus at 1:00.

UMass defeated the Huskies last year 15-10, 15-10, but has never played MIT, a team coach Dianne Thompson classifies as "not unbeatable."

The Minutewomen are recovering from a series of losses in the past couple of weeks. Their inexperience was showing during most of those losses and the element of time is the only solution to the current woes. The women have to work and work in order to jell as a team.

"It has been very frustrating to lose because I feel our team possesses better skills than some of the teams who beat us. The reason we lost most of our games was because we didn't play as a team. We have concentrated our practices on scrimmaging to rectify this," said Thompson.

The starting lineup is still undecided according to Thompson. "I'll use all nine women on the team but my starters will not be decided until I evaluate our practices of Thursday and Friday."

The UMass volleyball squad, shown here in recent action, will be active to the varsity tilt.

Revitalized kickers take on tough Rams

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

The UMass varsity soccer team tries for its second straight victory this afternoon as the Minutemen travel to Kingston, Rhode Island for a 2:00 p.m. game with URI.

Coach Russ Kidd feels his team is in its best shape both mentally and physically since the victory over Keene State some three weeks ago.

"We've finally achieved the system that I have been trying to establish," said Kidd. The Minutemen are playing a 4-3-3 structure and have bolstered their attack by moving Bob McChesney (the team's leading scorer) from forward to center halfback.

"Our forwards are receiving much better support with McChesney patrolling the midfield area. He's a very smart player and moves to the ball extremely well; therefore, he's still a very probable scoring threat, even though he's stationed farther away from the goal in his new position," related Kidd.

The Minutemen must control the midfield area agianst URI. The Rams have not scored many goals in their games but have applied constant pressure. Led by forwards Mario Pereira and 6'4" Dan McCrudden, Rhody has a swift, big, well-talented front line.

The Rams are 2-0 in Yankee Conference competition, recording victories over Maine and Vermont, the latter a 2-1 overtime decision last Saturday.

BOOTER BANTER: The UMass injury report is as follows: Niemiec, ankle, out idefinitely; Tagliavini, ankle, probable; Biladeau, knee, probable... Joel Mascolo has also switched to halfback and is a key to the 4-3-3 setup... Mark Hanks starts in goal, he's been outstanding of late.... Larry Aronson is playing sweeper on a full-time basis and has looked strong... Coach Kidd feels the next two weeks provide a great opportunity for UMass to gain attention from the soccer world in N.E. (games with URI and UConn)....

backs behind Lamboy. Though not outstanding backs, there has been only four fumbles lost in three games under first year Coach Bob Griffin's new system.

Senior tackle Jeff Williams (6-4, 255) was an All Yankee Conference last year and anchors a decent sized offensive line.

"They're sound in all areas," MacPherson said. "If we avoid mistakes, we can move the ball against them. We can't afford to give them anything cheap."

The Rams probably won't get anything cheap though as UMass will be the healthiest it has been all year. Reserve fullback Kieth Lang is back after missing last week's game with a shoulder separation. Co-captain John Toner is playing his second game at linebacker after missing the first three. The only notable injuries are Steve Telander (ankle) and Todd Holt, who is out for the season with torn ligaments in his knee.

Rich Jessamy at halfback is less than 100 yards away from breaking the UMass career rushing record of 1678, set by Paul Metallo.

Playoff coverage a total disaster

Good morning.... some thoughts, and comments while wondering whether to bet half or all of my life savings on the Cincinnati Reds.

Certainly anyone who watched the baseball playoffs must be wondering how major league baseball ever signed a contract with ABC. To state it simply ABC coverage of the regular season, and playoffs was a disaster. Poor camera coverage, producing, and espcecially the announcing caused problems for the network from the beginning.

The broadcast team at the start of the season consisted of Bob Prince, Bob Uecker, and Warner Wolf. By the end of the playoffs only Wolf remained.

Prince was fired at the end of the regular season. Thank you Roone Arledge! One more "kiss it goodbye" and it would have been the end of the television.

Uecker was expected to provide funny anecdotes concerning his less than illustrious career in the majors, injecting humor into the broadcast. Maybe Uecker's funny on Johnny Carson, but as far as Monday night baseball goes, he was a total bore. Thus after the first Yankee-Royals playoff game, Uecker was banished from the airwaves.

Bob Gibson, a color man for the backup game was also fired before the playoffs. He got his walking papers, when after John Candelleria of the Pittsburgh Pirates fired a no-hitter, Gibson's first question in his postgame was, "What interview do you think this will do for your contract." Just the question we're all interested in after viewing a no-hitter, right!

This left Wolf, and a makeshift crew to handle the playoffs. Thus prompting ABC to revert to world renowned HOO...WARD COO...SELL, and a suitable cast of clowns.

Cosell saw fit to troop celebrities such as the honorable Dr. Kissinger, (great moment since they argued over whether Kissinger had attended opening day at Yankee Stadium) and the always gracious Frank Sinatra into the booth. He also tried to impress us with his baseball knowledge. Unfortunately, Howard, no one cares who started Game One of the 1921 World Series.

Next was the always loquacious, and irrepressible superduper star Reggie Jackson. He talked of every pitch as if it was the melodramatic turning point in the game, and was always there with a player's insight: "He was looking to put that ball where the grass don't grow, out in cementville, or "it's going to take a six dollar cab drive to get that one." Jackson was insightful at points; however, the presence of Cosell is enough to ruin any aspiring TV personality.

So it is with great relief that the World Series starts, and an experienced network (NBC) begins its award winning coverage. I for one haven't forgotten the expression on Carlton Fisk's face, prancing around the bases after his game winning homer. Nor the great color work of the always intelligent Tony Kubek, or have you forgotten his insistence that Ed Armbrister did indeed interfere with Fisk as he threw to second in the fifth game? Yes, even Curt Gowdy, and Joe Garagiola, who provide the play by play commentary will be a welcome and refreshing sight.

So as the saying goes, good night Howard, and thankfully goodnight ABC.

Doesn't it seem strange that during the fourth game of the Yankee-Royal playoff series, a moment of silence was observed for the deceased Bob Moose, yet at the All Star game this summer no mention was made of the recently deceased Tom Yawkey, late owner of the Red Sox.

Oh yes, who was the person who coined the phrase Johnny Clench?

Yanks win AL pennant

NEW YORK [UPI] — Chris Chambliss homered off Mark Littell's first pitch of the ninth inning Thursday night to give New York a 7-6 victory over the Kansas City Royals, the Yankees' first American League pennant since 1964 and the 30th in their golden history.

Chambliss' drive, his record-setting 11th hit of the playoffs, sent the Yankees on to meet the World Champion Cincinnati Reds in the World Series beginning Saturday and prevented the Royals from becoming the first expansion team to win an American League pennant.

As Chambliss circled the bases, hundreds of fans poured onto the field, wrestling with players of both teams, waving banners and shouting "We're No. 1." Chambliss never touched home plate as the fans literally over-ran the Yankee Stadium playing field.

The spine-tingling end before a crowd of 56,821 came after the Royals tied the score at 6-6 on a three-run homer by George Brett off reliever Grant Jackson in the eighth inning. Until Brett's shot, the story of the game had been the brilliant play of Mickey Rivers, who had a triple and three singles, and triggered three New York two-run innings.

Dick Tidrow, the third Yankee pitcher, received credit for the victory while Littell suffered the loss.

This was a gallant Kansas City team which went down to defeat. The Royals came out swinging, taking a 2-0 lead in the first inning on Brett's double and a two-run homer by John Mayberry and then going ahead 3-2 in the second after the Yankees tied the score in their half of the first inning. They then fought back from a 6-3 deficit to tie the score again on Brett's eighth inning homer off Grant Jackson which followed singles by Al Cowens and Jim Wohlford.

The Yankees tied the score in the first inning on Rivers' leadoff triple, which curved over left-fielder Tom Poquette's head, singles by Roy White and Thurman Munson and Chambliss' infield out.

Cookie Rojas' single and stolen base and a single by Buck Martinez put the Royals back in front 3-2 in the second inning but Rivers was back at it in the third and the Yankees scored two runs for a 4-3 lead.

Rivers started things off with a single, moved to second on a walk to White and scored the tying run on Munson's single to center. White scooted home as Chambliss hit into a forceout and the Yankees had the lead for the first time.

With Ed Figueroa getting stronger as the game went along, the Yankees added two runs in the sixth. Rivers led off with a bunt single, moved to second on a sacrifice and scored on Munson's single. Munson was thrown out attempting to reach second on the play but Chambliss singled, stole second and scored the Yankees' sixth run on a throwing error by Brett.

Figueroa, a 19-game winner during the season, yielded a single to Cowens leading off the eighth. With the Yankees ahead, 6-3, manager Bill Martin sought to protect the lead against the left-handed Kansas City power hitters by bringing Lefty Jackson out of the bullpen. But Wohlford, a right-handed hitter, batted for Cowens and singled and the left-handed Brett followed with his three-run homer.

An ecstatic George Steinbrenner, chief owner of the Yankees, commented immediately after the game: "It is the greatest possible thing I ever could think of to happen to New York."

The triumph climaxed the rebuilding job done by the Steinbrenner-Gabe Paul-Martin team since the Steinbrenner group purchased the Yankees in January 1973.

Chris Chambliss connects on the first pitch in the ninth inning for a homerun to give the Yankees the American League championship. (UPI)

UM golfers place sixth

HORSHAM, Pa. — The UMass men's golf team placed sixth amongst a 12-team field in the ECAC championships at Hidden Springs C.C., in Horsham, Pa. yesterday. West Virginia won the tournament with a 622 total, outdistancing Central Conn. by six strokes, and third place Indiana of Pa. by seven.

Paul Littlejohn, of Salem St. won low medalist honors with a 36-hole 149 total. Bill Boughton, (Central Conn.) and John Zimmerman (U.R.I.) fell two shots off of Littlejohns winning total. Low medalist for UMass was sophomore Jim McDermott, as he carded an 83-71-154 total, five strokes back.

It'll be Minuteman vs. Ram

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow at 1:30 (1:25 WMUA) in Kingston, R.I., the University of Massachusetts' football team could take sole position of the Yankee Conference lead as both UMass and Rhode Island are the only undefeated teams in the conference.

The rams are 1-0 in the conference, 2-1 overall, while the Minutemen are 2-0 in the loop, 3-1 all together. Last year's champ, New Hampshire, is 2-1 in the conference, so a win tomorrow would leave the Minutemen the only undefeated team in the loop.

URI got its lone conference win over Maine, 14-9, the first time they beat the Black Bears in six years. UMass knocked off Maine earlier this year 24-3.

In non-conference games, the Rams edged Northeastern 15-14 and almost beat a solid Brown club, 3-0. "That Brown game is the one that impresses me," head coach Dick MacPherson said yesterday.

"They have a fine defensive team and do what they have to do on offense to win," MacPherson said.

URI runs a defense similar to UMass with five linemen, two inside linebackers, and a defensive backfield of two corners and two safeties. Junior Toney Ozello (6-1, 232) keys their defense at the middle guard position. Senior Bob Mitchell (6-0, 185) is a solid performer at cornerback. In three games, URI has given up just 26 points.

"That's the good thing about the veer; you can go right at a good football player," said MacPherson on how they would try to handle Ozello and the rest of the URI defense when UMass had the ball.

On offense, the Rams run from an I-formation most of the time, occasionally using the triple formation. From this formation, quarterback Kirk Lamboy (5-10, 163) operates an offense that has scored just 29 points in three games. This low output belies its effectiveness as Lamboy has only thrown two interceptions and leads the conference in pass completion percentage.

Lamboy's good percentage (56 per cent) reflects a conservative air game using short passes and outs. Lamboy's favorite receiver is junior Tom Spann (5-9, 163) who is a spot receiver and the conference's leading pass catcher with 12. The next favorite receiver is sophomore split end Ken Minor (6-3, 185).

While the passing game is good, URI runs the ball about 60 per cent of the time. Junior fullback Rich Moser (6-0, 211) and tailback Jim Hodges (6-1, 178) are the starting Football, huh? When I was in college such sexual perversion was frowned upon. Why, one could get in trouble simply by being caught in a women's dormitory! Actually, I guess there were no women's dormitories when I went to school. Come to think of it, they didn't even allow women there then. You know, I never really went to college.

Ah, I remember the debates. No, not the current presidential two-man ravings. A constipated penguin would be more moving than listening to an hour and a half of the Dreary Duo. I am referring, naturally, to the Webster-Calhoun debates. Hearing Dan and John vocally brow-beat each other was such grand fun! Of course, the Dan's one mistake, his claiming that London wasn't dominated by England, cost him some support, but John lost some followers, too, when he admitted that he secretly had lust in his heart for the podium.

I must admit, though, the best part of those heated discussions was their finish each day. You see, there was this wench at the Brothel Bay Inn that used to... well, heh-heh, they didn't call me the Great Compromisor for nothing.

You Can Change The World of Tomorrow by Molding The Boy of Today
The Salesians of St. John Bosco
...SERVICE TO YOUTH

To Love God is to Live

Salesian Priests and Brothers teach in academic schools, both day and resident, in the U.S. and Canada.

Salesian Technical Schools provide boys with the qualifications for leadership in a modern technological society.

In the summer months, Salesians run day and residence camps for boys.

Who are The Salesians?

The Salesians are a modern religious society of Priests and Brothers, founded in 1859 by St. John Bosco. His concern for youngsters who needed help and encouragement began early in his life, and he eventually established schools and youth centers which grew and multiplied. The Salesians — the Society of St. Francis of Sales, named after St. John's favorite saint — were organized and the new order quickly spread from continent to continent. St. John Bosco died in 1888 and was canonized in 1934 as the Apostle of Youth.

Today his Salesian sons — some 20,000 strong — continue his work in over 80 countries around the world.

What do we do?

Our principal apostolate is with youth. Our mission in life is working with and for young people . . . in boy's clubs, academic and technical high schools, summer camps, retreat houses, guidance centers, orphanages . . .wherever boys are to be found.

Unlike other orders whose apostolate has changed with varying conditions the Salesians have always been — and always will be — youth oriented. We're trying to prepare youngsters today for the world that awaits them tomorrow. Not an easy task in these times, but one which we welcome.

Salesian Priests and Brothers also staff parishes . . . work with the press, films, film strips . . and, on a voluntary basis, serve in many lands as missionaries.

OUR MISSION IN LIFE IS TO BRING AID AND GUIDANCE TO THE YOUNG . . . THE NEEDY . . . THE FORGOTTEN

The methods of St. John Bosco

In the beginning, St. John Bosco was concerned with the hundreds of homeless boys who were often hungry and utterly without hope. But giving them bread, he reasoned, would be only a temporary solution — there had to be some way to help them help themselves. The answer came to him: by learning a skill that would last them all their lives. Education was the keynote — for what good is one meal today when one must think of all the tomorrows?

He believed that a program of play, learn and pray would help make useful citizens of the world. He crowded out evil with reason, religion and kindness in an atmosphere of family feeling. That he succeeded is very evident today in the many Salesians who carry on his work and the number of boys who have benefited from the Salesian experience.

What you could do as a Salesian Priest or Brother

Help kids. Serve them with your mind . . .your heart . . . your hands . . . and your will. You can bring them closer to God, influence them for good and give them the chance to be better men someday.

Every Salesian enjoys working with and helping boys and, as a Salesian, you are guaranteed the chance to help them in a wide range of endeavor. According to your own abilities and tastes you could:

teach in an academic high school . . . become a technical instructor in such fields as electronics, drafting, graphic arts, electricity, architectural and industrial drafting, automotive mechanics, machine shop, metallurgy, building construction, woodworking . . . coach sports full or part time . . . direct a boys' club . . . help to run a summer camp . . . volunteer for foreign missions . . . act as guidance counsellor . . . serve in parishes . . . retreat houses . . . orphanages.

If you feel, as we do, that service to youth can be an important mission in your life, we welcome your interest. The rewards are not material but you will find your Salesian apostolate rich and rewarding in service to others, especially the young and the poor. Walking in Christ's footsteps brings peace of soul and an inner joy that comes from helping others in His name.

Salesian schools and boys' clubs enjoy all the seasonal sports

Salesians serve, if they choose, in missions in over 80 countries around the world.

Imagine a family of 20,000 members in 80 countries around the world — that's a pretty big family, but that's what the Salesians are all about. They are a community of family minded individuals united for a common goal.

The Salesians are made up of Priests, Brothers and Clerics — men studying for the priesthood but not yet ordained — who live and work together, equals in the Society, observing the same rules and enjoying the same privileges. St. John Bosco specifically wanted his Salesian communities to possess a warm, family like spirit where each member can grow and where both triumphs and setbacks are shared in the companionship of his fellow Salesians.

The Salesian is highly trained for his mission, and he has the opportunity to go as far as he wants to; for the better his education, the better service he can give both to the Society and to the people he helps. He achieves his rewards in the realization of the good he accomplishes and the youthful hearts and minds he inspires.

Suspects in FAC robbery plead not guilty to charges

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

Two suspects have pleaded 'not guilty' at Hampshire County District Court in Northampton to charges stemming from the theft of an estimated $45,000 worth of property from the Fine Arts Center.

William P. Smith, 34, of 11 Lyn Drive, Granby, a custodian at the Fine Arts Center has pleaded innocent to charges of larceny over $100 and receiving stolen property.

George H. McNamara Jr., 25, of 414 North Pleasant St., Amherst, has pleaded innocent to charges of receiving stolen property.

Their cases were continued to Nov. 9.

University police estimate that they have recovered $30,000 in stolen goods and say they expect to recover an additional $15,000 in merchandise.

The items recovered include stereo equipment, tools, camera equipment, cleaning fluid, refrigerators, calculators, typewriters, janitorial supplies and an oscilloscope valued by University police at $2,000.

The case broke when a Leominster resident reported a defect in a Scully unit to the Dictaphone Audio Electronic Division in San Francisco.

When the factory traced the serial number of the unit it learned that the unit was one issued to the Fine Arts Center.

The Leominster resident is not a suspect in the case, said UMass Police Captain Robert G. Joyce.

Joyce credited 'Operation Identification' with aiding in the investigation.

Identifying numbers are engraved on personal and University property in the 'Operation Identification' project.

The investigation centered around Smith's home and a storage area in the Mountain Farms Mall, said Joyce.

Smith, according to University police, runs a janitorial service, in addition to his job at the Fine Arts Center.

"The success of the investigation was largely due to the cooperative venture of the University detective department and the UMass Line Operation Unit", said Joyce. He also thanked police departments in Amherst, Hadley, Granby and Leominster for their assistance in the investigation.

Labor body decides who can vote..

...in faculty union selection

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission late Friday announced which faculty and staff here and at Boston will be included in the vote on whether to establish a collective bargaining unit for UMass faculty and staff.

According to the state commission ruling, department heads, librarians, part-time faculty teaching for three consecutive terms, and university professional staff with teaching duties in special programs at both campuses will be eligible to vote along with 1600 regular faculty members at both campuses to determine whether they wish to have a collective bargaining unit.

If so, the persons voting will decide which of two competing groups they wish to have represent them.

Officials from the two organizations competing to represent faculty in collective bargaining, the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) and the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) view this recent commission ruling as a "major victory".

Both professional organizations claimed that department heads and chairpersons, librarians, part-time teaching staff and staff whose jobs relate more to teaching should be included. On the other hand, the University administration maintained that department heads are part of the administration and that librarians should not be included in the bargaining unit.

The state commission also set a pre-election hearing for Oct. 22 in Boston where the election date and procedure will be determined. Officials here expect the election to take place between Nov. 15 and

Town Meeting to vote on NW Road plan

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

The University-proposed Northwest Road will be presented to the Town Meeting tonight at the first session of this fall's Amherst Special Town Meeting at 7:30 p.m. in the Amherst-Pelham Regional Junior High School.

The UMass request for town endorsement of the road is one of 35 articles the 240 Town Meeting members will vote on tonight and in additional sessions, as needed, during the next two weeks.

Other articles that may be considered tonight concern a number of fund transfer requests.

Among the transfers are monies for construction of a bikepath, and the purchase of land near Echo Hill in East Amherst for farming and recreational purposes.

The Northwest Road, article 4 on the warrant, does not appear to have much chance of passing tonight in the wake of a number of town committees votes to delay passage of road construction plans.

Nancy Eddy, chairperson of the Board of Selectmen, said last week the board voted to make a substitute motion under Article 4 to refer the question to a certain committee which would then report to the Spring Town Meeting its findings.

Gerald J. Grady, the University coordinator of community relations, has said he will cooperate with the board's wishes, Eddy said.

Grady, who will represent the University administration at tonight's meeting, said last week, "Truthfully, I don't know what is going to happen.

"I will take the floor," he said, but added he was not yet sure what would happen afterward.

There was talk that Grady would ask the meeting to dismiss the article, but it now appears he will present it.

The Planning Board voted two weeks ago to oppose immediate road construction plans and suggested further study of town traffic problems.

The Amherst School Committee voted last week to support the Planning Board's call for delaying the road proposals. The committee has in the past been concerned with the safety of the Mark's Meadow school children who would have to cross a major intersection on their way to school.

Road construction opponents Richard H. Minear and Richard J. Harper are sponsoring three articles between them, one recommending that the Town Meeting oppose these road proposals and two seeking further study on the proposals.

The next article scheduled for consideration is a Board of Selectmen sponsored proposal "to see if the Town will appropriate and transfer $64.892 received by the Town under a grant from the Massachusetts Department of Public Works for the construction of bikeways within Amherst."

"We got a state grant for the first portion of a Five-College bikeway," according to Eddy.

She said the article is essentially for the construction of a bike path from Amherst College to Hampshire College along West Street. It also provides for improvement on the shoulders of Lincoln Avenue and signs put up to indicate to motorists and pedestrians this would be a bike path.

She said these road improvements and construction would be part of plans for a longer bike path extending from UMass to Hampshire College.

Eddy said in addition to the state grant the town would have to accept some of the responsibility for planning and engineering of the paths.

Another article that may reach tonight's session is Article 18 asking Town Meeting to approve the purchase of 38 acres of land off Pelham Road in East Amherst, a short distance from Echo Hill.

According to a statement from the article's sponsor, the Amherst Conservation Commission, "If the Town purchases the property, the conservation Commission plans to emphasize the wildlife, agricultural, and outdoor recreation assets the property already has."

The release says the purchase would cost the town $50,000, but states the commission will seek a 50 per cent reimbursement from the Self-Help program of the Office of Environmental Affairs.

All articles on the warrant will be taken for consideration in order as they were listed by the Board of Selectmen. However, Town Meeting can vote to take an article "out of order".

Articles 18 asks Town Meeting to approve a "voluntary" town program for the purchase of development rights of active farms within Amherst".

The article is being sponsored by the Board of selectmen. It includes a nine section Agricultural Development Rights Program.

Articles that may not reach tonight's meeting include the lengthy article asking for town adoption of rent control sponsored by the Amherst Tenants Association.

There are three articles sponsored by the Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee, and an article seeking town prohibition of large amounts of commercial radioactive waste through Amherst.

All sessions of the Town Meeting will be carried live on cable TV, Channel 8.

'Aliens watching,' says UFO abductee

By PETER DICKOW
Collegian Staff

"New England may be almost under siege by UFOs. They are coming in closer and closer," said Betty Hill, a UFO abductee who spoke to a crowd of 250 at Mahar Auditorium, Saturday night.

On the night of September 19, 1961, Hill and her late husband Barney were returning from a vacation when they spotted a UFO near the Indian Head area in New Hampshire. They stopped to get a better view of the object with binoculars and to walk their dog, she said.

Hill described the object as a "cigar-shaped object with flashing lights." She said her husband could see figures in the rapidly-approaching craft and that they said to him: "Don't be afraid. Just stay right there. No harm's gonna come to you." He panicked and fled towards the car, saying to her, "It's seen us and it's coming this way!" She said that they sped away quickly in their car, with the 60 to 65 foot craft hovering over them.

They then heard a "beeping" noise Hill added, and the events which occured after that could only be recalled after Mrs. Hill was put under a deep hypnotic trance.

Hill said she was hypnotized by Dr. Benjamin Simon, a Boston psychiatrist who worked with her for seven months. She said their hypnotic sessions revealed the following:

After hearing the "beeping" noises, the Hills turned off route 3 and onto route 175, and then onto a dirt road where their car stalled. They were approached by five aliens from the UFO at which time the Hills' began to feel a trance-like "power" come over them, according to Hill. She said the aliens were "somewhat humanoid in shape, but different proportions." They were four to five feet tall, and had a large rounded head with small mouths and large, slit shaped eyes. She added that the grey-skinned aliens had no hair, and that they wore one-piece dark suits.

The Hills walked with the aliens toward their craft, where they were both subject to routine physical examinations. Hill said her ears, nose and throat were examined, and fingernail and hair clippings were also extracted from her. The aliens concluded her examination with what they said was a pregnancy examination, sticking a needle into her naval. She said they stopped when she expressed pain.

Hill said that the aliens were interested in her husband's bone structure, particularly his feet and spine. They placed a cup-like instrument on his abdomen, and he later developed infections in that area.

After discovering her husband's dentures, she said the aliens tugged at her own teeth, puzzled that they were not removable also. She explained to them how human bodies degenerate, a concept which they could not comprehend apparently.

Throughout their examinations Hill said that she and her husband were treated kindly and fairly. Although the aliens did not actually speak English, Mrs. Hill said "I heard sounds and understood them in English...It was a mental telepathy kind of thing."

Upon leaving, Mrs. Hill asked the aliens for some kind of physical proof of their encounter, and she received a book. However, the aliens decided at the last minute not to let her keep it. The aliens induced amnesia on the Hills as they were leaving she said.

The Hills left and started driving towards their Portsmouth, N.H. home. It was at that point when they heard a second "beeping" noise Hill continued. She said that from then on her memory was normal, and did not require a hypnotist to recall.

Hill said that "There are many, many people in New England who have been taken on board (UFOs). There may be one living next door to you."

Mrs. Hill's appearance was sponsored by the Psychical Awareness and Research Association (PARA).

Speaker urges more university observatories

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

The director and founder of the Five-College Radio Astronomy Observatory (FCRAO) said he hopes the people who guided the FCRAO into existence will "now try to push the role of university observatories to the national level."

G. Richard Huguenin made his remarks to 300 people at the formal dedication of the FCRAO Friday on the land surrounding the Quabbin Reservoir.

The FCRAO will "experiment with less orthodox approaches than national observatories," he said. "We must have the ability to experiment and gamble," and place "special emphasis on new ... techniques."

The formal opening of the FCRAO on Prescott Peninsular saw the fruition of more than half a decade of cooperation between the five area colleges, state and federal agencies, and private industry.

Related story on page 15

Among the speakers at the luncheon ceremony were Congressmen Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield) and Edward P. Boland (D-Springfield), UMass President Robert C. Wood and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Also addressing the audience of astronomers, government officials and electronic engineers assembled under a large tent facing the new $8 million listening station, were Robert E. Hughes, assistant director of the National Science Foundation (NSF), Commissioner John F. Snedeker of the Metropolitan District Commission (MDC), and William M. Irvine, chairman of the Five College Astronomy Dept.

"Cooperation" was the keyword of the day. The speakers in turn all noted the "dedication" and "vision" of the many groups that worked in conjunction to make the FCRAO possible.

Conte mentioned that with the campuses of the five area colleges just thirty minutes away from the radio telescope site, it will be a unique "center ... for teaching and study of astronomy." Boland said the new facility will "keep our nation a leader" in the advancement of astronomy.

But of the honored guests, Huguenin received the most applause when he was introduced as "the man who, more than any other single individual, had the foresight and drive to create the radio telescope facility here.

Huguenin spoke of the "outstanding scientific capability" of the new facility, and said it would make "major contributions in years to come."

The FCRAO's role in the academic community, he said, is to "provide a facility and environment to attract the best people" to the five-college area.

The observatory plays a "direct role," he said, in educating people in astronomy. It provides an "opportunity in pure and applied science."

Huguenin spoke of the "internationally important" role of the radio telescope, pointing out that many distinguished scientists will be attracted to the FCRAO.

There are two NSF designations for astronomy observatories in the U.S. — "national" observation, and "university" observatories. The FCRAO is a university level facility. Huguenin said the national observatories are "well recognized, but the university observatories are not so well recognized."

Huguenin praised the "truly exceptional ... team effort" of the observatory's creators and the "ingenuity" of his staff.

"In addition to the facility you see here," he told the assembly, above all, "the FCRAO is 'people'. ... The staff should not be considered a part of the observatory ... in a very real way the observatory has become a part of the staff. For many of us, this is a very special place."

Manual interpreter uses many means to reach the deaf

By JUNE GREIG
Collegian Staff

Maureen Leombruno, 21, is a manual interpreter for deaf students at UMass and uses her lips, hands and facial expressions to interpret class lectures.

"I really enjoy interpreting a class," said Leombruno. "I find it challenging and try to make myself interesting and understandable."

Leombruno is one of three manual interpreters at the University. There are a number of oral interpreters, who use lip movement and facial expression, but no hand signs. Services for the deaf were included in the Office of Student Handicapped Affairs program in 1974.

"There is a growing need and demand for interpreters," she said. "There are six deaf students at UMass now, as compared to two last year, and some of the interpreters have left."

Leombruno is a junior at UMass majoring in Social Thought and Political Economy, but she plans to enter the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) program as a liberal arts major. There is no specialized major for her field and she said a varied background would expand her general knowledge in different fields and be the most helpful to her in the future.

She began to learn sign language during her senior year at Weston High School, Weston, Mass. She took courses and did volunteer work at The Learning Center for Deaf Children in Framingham.

In her first year at UMass, Leombruno took additional courses and volunteered her services. Last year, she began working for the Office of Student Handicapped Affairs and interpreted about five classes a week and taught a beginner sign reading course.

She interpreted classes for two deaf students during summer session and interpreted for two deaf students at freshman orientation. She currently interprets 12 classes a week and teaches an intermediate sign reading course.

"When I first became interested in interpreting I thought it was too hard and I could never be a good interpreter," said Leombruno. "Then I became fascinated by the language and began to meet such wonderful people. I felt needed."

Since last year she has worked at

Referendum No. 1: Equal Rights Amendment

This is the first of a nine-part series giving the pros and cons of each of the nine referendum items which will be on the ballot Nov. 2.

Referendum No. 1 is the Equal Rights Amendment. The actual question on the ballot will read "Do you approve of the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution summarized below, which was approved by the General Court in joint session of the House of Representatives and Senate on August 15, 1973 by a vote of 262-0, and on May 24, 1975, by a vote of 217-52.

The summary of the referendum is, "The proposed amendment would provide that equality under the law may not be denied or abridged on the basis of sex, race, color, creed or national origin. This amendment adds one sentence to Article I of part the first of the Constitution which now contains a general statement of individual rights, including the right to enjoy and defend life and liberty and the right to acquire and protect property."

A YES vote is a vote to add a specific guarantee of equality under the law to the state constitution.

A NO vote is a vote to leave the state constitution as it is.

By DEBBIE ALLIEGRO
Collegian Staff

The main argument for the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) is that it will not deny to any person equal protection under the law and that the Mass. legal system will be operated on the ability of the individual rather than on the basis of sex, race, color or creed.

Any law that is presently on the books that is discriminatory will have to be extended to include both sexes or else be stricken.

The Committee to rafity the State ERA is a Boston-based statewide organization which has been distributing information about the ERA and has been actively working to get the amendment passed.

Other groups in favor of the amendment are the American Civil Liberties Union, AFL-CIO, the Mass. Teachers Association, the Mass. Public Interest Research Group, and the Coalition Labor Union.

Groups opposed to the amendment are the John Birch Society, the Communist Party, and the Ku Klux Klan.

The amendment is actually as simple as it sounds. It will change a word, from "men are

A day off from political sparring

[Associated Press]

Resting from several days of sharpened political sparring, President Ford and Democrat Jimmy Carter turned the campaign arena over to their running mates yesterday as they shaped plans for the crucial final two weeks before the Nov. 2 election.

Both candidates went to church in wet, gloomy weather and were spending the rest of the day in private conferences with aides — Ford at the White House and Carter at his home in Plains, Ga.

Sen. Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, appeared on the CBS television program, "Face The Nation," where he talked about economic issues and said he had "one of the best" records in the Senate on tax revision, which is a key part of Carter's over-all program if elected.

Saying a Democratic administration would attack both inflation and unemployment, he asserted that Ford has erred in trying to cope with inflation through high unemployment.

"This remedy had nothing to do with the source of the problem," Mondale said, adding that the Republicans have shown "they have no remedies."

Later, in Rockford, Ill., Mondale said the Republicans were using "election eve gimmicks" to conceal a "miserable record" on farm issues. He called it "incredible" that the Ford administration which imposed a foreign grain sales embargo last year is now telling farmers that it opposes embargoes.

Carter originally said he opposed embargoes, but later conceded such action might be necessary in event of a domestic food emergency.

By "gimmicks," Mondale said he was referring to plans announced by the administration last week to impose beef import quotas at 1975 levels and help wheat producers through an increase in loan rates, a move it had previously refused to make.

The Minnesotan's Republican counterpart, Sen. Bob Dole, was in his home state of Kansas, beginning a four-day tour of the Midwest farm belt. Dole has concentrated on farm areas where party strategists believe traditional Republican strength has some dangerous soft spots.

Some Midwest states are critical by both sides as the campaign approaches the final stages. Both Ford and Carter campaigned in the Midwest last week and are expected to return there in the final days of the campaign.

Dole told a church audience in Prairier Village, Kan., yesterday that his sometimes slashing campaign style is an effort to counter what he called innuendoes and attempted smears by Carter and Mondale against Ford for supposed misuse of campaign funds and connections with Watergate.

Dole said he would try to keep the rest of the campaign "on the right plane, but if Gov. Carter and Sen. Mondale impugn the integrity of President Ford, I'm going to stand up and reply...it's an obligation I have as a concerned citizen."

The Watergate special prosecutor last week cleared Ford of any wrongdoing in a probe of his finances from past congressional campaigns, and said there was insufficient basis to investigate reports that Ford, as House minority leader, had tried to help the White House stop an early investigation of Watergate.

The President, after attending church yesterday, met in the Oval Office with several cabinet members and other officials to discuss urban redevelopment and neighborhood revitalization programs.

Those attending included Carla Hills, Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, Transportation Secretary William Coleman, Budget Director James T. Lynn and several economic advisers.

Outside the White House, streets were blocked off as camera crews filmed scenes for a television production, "Eleanor and Franklin," about former President Roosevelt.

WASHINGTON: President Ford took a breather yesterday at the White House after increasingly harsh attacks on Jimmy Carter in the midwest. Meeting in the Oval Office is Secretary of Transportation William Coleman, Secretary of HUD Carla Hills and Jim Cannon, assistant to the president for domestic affairs and President Ford. (UPI)

Governor to veto prison furlough bill

BOSTON [UPI] — A spokesman for Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, said yesterday the governor will pocket veto at a bill restricting the state's prison furlough program.

Press Secretary Michael Widmer said Dukakis also is considering vetoing several other controversial bills passed in the closing days of the 1976 session hich wound up early Saturday.

They would include proposals increasing Massachusetts' legal drinking age from 18 to 19 and giving the legislature veto power over state agency rules and regulations.

"We are looking very closely at these bills and several others which we may pocket veto," Widmer said.

He stressed, however, that except for the furlough bill, no definite decisions have been reached.

The governor has 10 working days to act on bills after they are enacted.

If he does not sign a bill it dies through what is called a pocket veto.

Dukakis is expected to sign most of the other 75 or so bills enacted by the legislature in the closing hours of the session which officially ended at 12:55 a.m. Saturday.

The major bills include:

—Reorganization of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination;

—New penalties on unemployment compensation beneficiaries who refuse to accept suitable work;

—Increased workmen's compensation benefits;

—Pay hikes for assistant district attorneys provided they devote full time to their jobs.

The full time provision becomes mandatory in 1979;

—Legislation encouraging creation of health maintanence organizations which provide full health care for a set annual fee;

—New tax incentives for building utilizing solar energy;

—Provisions to set fees for persons who appeal surcharges under th new merit rating auto insurance system;

—A $7 million supplementary budget which gives pay raises to all of the state's constitutional officer holders except the governor;

—A strengthening of laws facilitating the establishment of health maintainence organizations; —And a clarification of the state law on fetal research.

Detroit News reports 'affair'

DETROIT [UPI] — The Detroit News reported yesterday that Rep. Donald Riegle Jr., (D-Mich.) had an affair with a staff worker in 1969 during which their intimate conversations, including his dreams of the presidency, were taped with mutual consent.

The copyrighted story from the News' Washington bureau said Riegle, a Flint, Mich., congressman now running for the Senate, approved of the recordings by a woman identified only as "Dorothy". He later tried and failed to gain possession of the tapes, the News said.

The story attributed nothing illegal to Riegle or his friend.

The News said the tapes have been played in select Washington social circles and might be included in an upcoming book on Washington scandals.

The newspaper did not indicate where it got the tapes and several letters.

Riegle divorced his first wife, Nancy, in 1971 and married another staff member Meredith Ann White, three months later. By that time, the News said, the affair with "Dorothy" was over.

Riegle, a former Republican, is now running against Republican Rep. Marvin Esch in a tight race for the seat of retiring Democratic Sen. Philip A. Hart.

The News said that when it contacted Riegle he did not deny having the affair and knowing of the recordings.

Esch and other Republicans have made an issue of Riegle's personal life, calling him unstable and overly ambitious.

Without quoting the woman directly, the News said "Dorothy" and Riegle met in 1968 at a Republican gathering while Riegle was still a member of the GOP. At the time he was 30 and she was 21. Later, the News said, he added her to his Washington staff as an unpaid worker.

The News said the woman started making the tapes while bedridden with a blood clot in her leg so she could replay them as if re-reading a letter. The newspaper said Riegle never objected to the recordings.

Riegle accused the newspaper of "the most vicious and distorted campaign directed at anybody in politics that I've witnessed."

After publication of the article Riegle told UPI he stood by what he told the News and would not comment further.

"My personal life in the distant past is my personal life," he told the News.

"The Detroit News ought to be ashamed of itself for its tactics and its behavior."

Rep. Donald Riegle, Jr. (AP)

Officials watching reactions

ATLANTA [UPI] — Federal and state health officials are taking precautions to guard against any severe reactions by persons receiving swine influenza shots.

Most immunization clinics giving inoculations in the nationwide program are asking persons getting the vaccine to wait at least 15 minutes in the clinic area, where medical personnel can keep an eye on them.

Windell Bradford, associate director of the Bureau of State Services at the national Center for Disease Control, said yesterday the waiting period "is standard policy in most clinics anytime shots are given."

Persons allergic to eggs, the medium in which the swine flu vaccine is cultured, are screened out at the clinics and not allowed to routinely take the shots, Bradford said.

The CDC's Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices said severe reactions are uncommon and disabling effects exceedingly rare.

Man dead after fight on CB radio

HALTOM CITY, Tex. [AP] — One Citizens Band operator lay in a hospital bed in poor condition yesterday, another was dead and police were searching for a third man in a fight that began with two CB operators arguing over the airwaves.

Howard Collins, whose CB nickname is "Dirty Bird", was reported in poor condition yesterday with gun shot wounds in the chest and abdomen in a Fort Worth hospital.

Don Hilcher, 36, of Fort Worth whose nickname was "Blue Goose," died late Friday night when his bullet-riddled pickup slammed into a utility pole as he drove away from the spot where he and Collins had met to settle an argument.

And police are looking for the man who fired the shots into Hilcher's truck.

Hilcher had asked Collins to stop monopolizing air time on a CB channel, police said. They said Collins apparently had been using a high powered radio and his broadcast that overlapped transmissions on other channels of the band.

Such radios are forbidden by the Federal Communications Commission. The band currently has 23 channels.

Collins, who was operating at the time from a radio unit in his home, challenged Hilcher to a fight, and, according to a tape of the conversation given to police by another CB operator, Hilcher accepted.

News in Brief

Guard to be arraigned

BOSTON [UPI] — A 27-year-old off duty security guard will be arraigned Thursday on a charge he murdered a Dorchester teenager after an argument — not involving the victim — over the guard's apartment parking space.

Police said John T. Donovan, 18, was shot in the throat at close range early Saturday.

Charles T. Ramos, also of Dorchester, was arrested at his home minutes after the shooting.

Police said Ramos, a part-time guard for a Roxbury security firm, had arrived home about 3:30 a.m. as a teenagers' party was breaking up in the next apartment.

Ramos reportedly asked a party-goer to move a car parked in Ramos' parking space. Following an argument, police said, Ramos went into his home and returned waving a pistol.

Donovan, apparently walking down the street and unaware of the argument, was confronted by Ramos. Witnesses said Ramos said, "You guys aren't going to fool around with me," then put the gun to Donovan's throat and pulled the trigger.

Ramos ran into his apartment where police arrested him minutes later in the basement.

Ramos was arraigned in Dorchester District Court Saturday and also charged with illegal possession of a firearm. Police said he had a permit to carry a firearm, but it had expired in 1973.

Ramos was being held without bail at the Charles Street Jail with his case continued to Oct. 21.

Blacks can't use laundromat

KAUFMAN, Tex. [UPI] — There are two laundromats in town, but the 1,100 black residents can use only one and the owner of the other said he will close if forced to allow blacks to use it.

Frank Radeke, owner of the City Coin Laundry, was filmed earlier this month by a Dallas television news crew refusing six black women the use of his laundry.

Last week he told a reporter he would not allow blacks to use his laundromat and then refused to answer any more questions, closing the door of the back room of his laundry on the arm of the newsman.

The FBI has since viewed the newsfilm and sources said an investigation was begun into possible violation of civil rights laws.

"The white folk in this town are real nice about things as long as our boys keep running touchdowns for their football team," said Crissie Hughey, 21. "But I don't see why somebody doesn't make him let us use that laundromat."

Grace Taylor, a customer of Radeke's laundromat, said he once refused to accept laundry from a community home for the elderly.

Snow falls

[UPI] — Up to four inches of snow whitened parts of Michigan and Montana, light snow brushed the Chicago area and frost reached as far south as the Texas Panhandle yesterday in the coldest snap this autumn.

Heavy rains drenched much of the southeast and brisk weather took hold across most of the eastern half of the nation. The mercury was expected to be in the 40s for last night's New York Yankees—Cincinnati Reds World Series game in Cincinnati.

The first frost normally does not hit Fayetteville, Ark., until Oct. 28, but the early morning temperature dipped to 28 degrees yesterday. It was 20 degrees at Gilbert, Ark.

Frost also stretched across Oklahoma and into the Texas Panhandle, setting record low temperatures for the date over parts of the Plains and the Mississippi Valley.

Artist goes on trial

OAKLAND, Calif. [UPI] — Wendy Yoshimura, a tiny Japanese-American artists who linked her destiny with Patricia Hearst in a year-long underground flight from the law, goes on trial today on charges linking her to a Berkeley terrorist group's attempt to bomb a college campus building.

The 33-year-old feminist and long-time political activist — captured 13 months ago with Miss Hearst in the barren San Francisco apartment they shared as fugitive roommates — is currently free on $25,000 bail collected from Japanese-American sympathizers.

The prosecution plans to call Miss Hearst to the witness stand — setting up a possible face-to-face meeting of the former roommates. Miss Yoshimura has asked to be allowed to act as co-counsel, enabling her to cross-examine witnesses.

Bottle bill successful

PORTLAND, Maine [UPI] — Former Oregon governor Thomas McCall told gatherings here and in Waterville over the weekend that Oregon's returnable bottle bill has been very successful.

McCall said the bottle bill, which is five years old in Oregon, has cut litter by 41 per cent and reduced bottle and can litter by 83 per cent.

"It's been a felicitating experience," McCall said. "It makes me proud of government innovation."

Piggybacking 'balances'

MANCHESTER, N.H. [UPI] — A Maine state legislator is drafting legislation to advance the date of Maine's presidential primary election to coincide with New Hampshire's first-in-the-nation primary, it was reported yesterday.

The New Hampshire Sunday News quoted Rep. Judy Kany, (D-Waterville), as saying New Hampshire's primary has too much influence on the presidential races, and piggybacking the elections would balance things.

She favors a New England regional primary, and said her proposed legislation is a step toward a regional primary.

Last year, Massachusetts moved its primary to March 2 when New Hampshire's was scheduled, prompting the New Hampshire legislature to move the Granite State's election date still one week earlier to retain the premiere status.

Fye watches ocean's mystery

WOODS HOLE, Mass. [AP] — For almost two decades Paul Fye has watched the oceans of the world shrink in their terror and mystery but take giant leaps in importance to nations of the world.

"You used to plan a cruise to just go out and see what you could find," said Fye, 64, who retires next year as the director of the famous and respected Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute.

"There was always something new; you could always find some new seamount to name after your vessel."

But today, said Fye, "We are able to begin looking at how an entire ocean basin works, and of course this takes bigger ships, teams of people and more cooperation."

Fye's observations came in a story in the Boston Sunday Globe.

Fye, who steps down as director of the Cape Cod institute after 18 years, said it is most important that the United States "invest in the ocean."

"We've always used the oceans as a highway, as a place to fish and for its beaches. But now the desire to make use of the ocean is more important in economic ways.

The great motivation behind the Law of the Sea efforts is economics, plus of course, national prestige."

There have been efforts to cooperate among the nations as they probe the values held by the oceans, he said, but nations taking part "are hung up now on the problems of international water."

He said non-seacoast nations want some of the wealth held by the seas.

Fye said he does not know how the problem will be resolved but, "It seems the seas are going to be dominated by the states that own the shorelines.

War games

NEWPORT, R.I. [AP] — The Board of Advisers to the president of the Naval War College here has recommended that war games be given a larger role in the school's curriculum.

The board met Saturday for three hours to discuss progress in changing the college's lecture-oriented curriculum to a seminar-research program with increased student participation.

Adm. Julien J. LeBourgeios, college president, said he hopes to have a new facility for war games by 1980 that would allow 10 games to be played at once.

At present, there is room for one game.

War games were first developed in the United States by the college.

Hillory collects

WASHINGTON, [UPI] — Clyde Tolson's only brother, excluded from the late FBI associate director's will, has reached an out-of-court agreement to receive $100,000 from the estate.

A legal battle over the will ended Friday when a Superior Court judge approved the settlement allowing 78-year-old Hillory Tolson to share in the inheritance.

Clyde Tolson was a longtime associate and companion of the late FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, and Hoover left him more than $500,000 when he died in 1972.

Tolson died last year at age 75. Tolson's beneficiaries included former assistant FBI director John P. Mohr, who drafted the will and subsequent codicils, but excluded his brother, whom he had not seen for 15 years.

A spokesman for the Cal Tech seismology laboratory said the quake would probably register about 4 on the Richter scale. (UPI)

Foreign diplomats view widow's hanging in effigy

HONG KONG [AP] – Foreign officials coming out of China said yesterday they saw wall posters in Shanghai depicting the hanging in effigy of Mao Tse-tung's widow and others showing one of the demonstrations that have been reported in several Chinese cities since Mao's death.

Prime Minister Michael Somare of Papua New Guinea, the first foreign government chief to visit China since Mao died Sept. 9, also said at a news conference that Premier Hua Kuo-feng told him he had been chosen to succeed Mao as chairman of the Chinese Communist party.

Members of Somare's delegation said that along with the posters of Chiang Ching, Mao's 62-year-old widow, were pictures of three other top Chinese radical leaders with cross-marks painted over them.

The posters were understood to be signs of disapproval rather than an indication of the fate of the four in the power struggle sweeping China.

Somare and his party arrived in Hong Kong on their way home in the wake of unofficial reports that the four radicals had been arrested. Crowds reportedly demonstrated against the arrested radical leaders in Shanghai, regarded as the center of the radical support, and other Chinese cities.

Hua's election to the top post of party chairman was first reported in wall posters in Peking on Oct. 9 and later confirmed to foreign reporters by a Chinese government spokesman.

However, the government has never made an offical announcement of the choice of Hua to head the party.

Peking has given no explanation for delaying announcement on the appointment. But there has been speculation it was being held up to permit Hua to consolidate his position following a reported coup attempt and assassination plot by party radicals led by Chiang Ching.

Somare said that on his arrival in China on Oct. 11 Hua "informed me of his election and I congratulated him as chairman of China."

Smith says whites must return control

LONDON [UPI] – Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith said yesterday there can be no question of whites surrendering control of security forces during the proposed two-year term of the Rhodesian interim government.

In an article under his signature in the Sunday Express, Smith set out his negotiating stand for the Geneva conference due to assemble later this week.

"Law and order must, and will be maintained in Rhodesia, and our security forces will continue to destroy the terrorists wherever they are found," he said.

"There can be no question of white Rhodesians giving up control of the security forces during the term of an interim government."

Smith said the West must accept the continued presence of whites in Rhodesia is "an essential stabilizing ingredient" in the country in the light of the global struggle with communism.

He said the West must ensure "it does not respond to the escalating demands and back-tracking which have become apparent" since he accepted the transition to black majority rule.

"If the African extremists are not prepared to make a useful contribution to the coming conference on the basis of what has been agreed with Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, then the conferences should continue without them.

"If the West gives in to the African extremists and it becomes impossible for the White Rhodesians to stay in their own country, the West will merely obtain a piece of real estate already mortgaged to Russians, and the 'squatter rights' will not last very long either.

Economy gives off confusing 'recovery' signals

NEW YORK [AP] – The economy is giving off confusing signals as it takes a pause in the midst of recovery.

Growth hasn't stopped, but the pace of growth has slowed in recent months, businessmen and economists say.

A high level economist involved in government forecasting privately conceded, "We're all surprised it has gone on this long, but I don't expect the recovery to pick up again for at least another quarter. Some say two."

Many economists agree that the stubborn pause in economic growth which developed late this summer could last for months. They say the duration will depend largely on the 1977 capital spending plans that corporations will announce in November and December, and the shape of the construction industry next spring.

The federal government could step in and try to stimulate spending early next year to force the economy out of the pause.

Administration economists maintain the recovery is strong and say no new stimuli are needed this year. But President Ford has already promised to seek a tax cut in January if he is re-elected and Democratic challenger Jimmy Carter has indicated he is considering a similar step if we wins in November.

A tax cut would have the effect of encouraging more spending, thus boosting economic activity.

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon said on Saturday that the government must "resist the temptation" to stimulate the economy to create more jobs because this action would also bring on a new round of crippling inflation.

Simon also indicated to reporters that, except for unemployment, he is not concerned by recent statistics showing the economy is slowing down.

The current pause came as a surprise to many business leaders.

A few months ago, for example, Edgar B. Speer, chairman of the United States Steel Corp., predicted there would "certainly be a quarter by quarter improvement in business and business activity for the balance of the year."

But last week, the nation's largest steelmaker temporarily closed some operations at its Gary, Ind., steel works to reduce inventories in the fact of slow demand.

On Madison Avenue, meanwhile, an advertising executive says business is melting away.

"This summer, our clients were gladly paying 40 to 60 per cent premiums for any television time they could get, but the networks were booked solid through June 1977.

"Now, I've got three clients who want to trim budgets and back out of TV commitments for this fall," he moaned.

Advertising budgets of companies are considered an indication of how a company forsees future demand.

The stock market is also viewed as a reliable measure of future economic activity – it is one of the 10 components of the government's index of leading economic indicators.

This past week the market dropped to a nine-month low with the Dow Jones average of industrial stocks closing at 937.00, a decline of more than 70 points in three weeks.

But a group of economists reported late last week that the pause was being overstated.

In a report to the Business Council meeting in Hot Springs, Va., economists from 22 corporations, as well as four government economists, said the "so-called pause" had been "overestimated."

They predicted that the recovery would continue through 1977 and into 1978, a view expressed by Ford in his news conference last week.

The government's latest figures show that the economy is still growing.

Industrial output declined in September for the first time in 18 months, but this was due primarily to the strike against the Ford Motor Co. and the ripple effect this strike had on other industries.

Another report indicated that the buying power of the American people advanced at a faster rate in February.

The Federal Reserve index of industrial production has been rising steadily since March 1975, and the Commerce Department's statistics for real gross national product have increased each quarter since the second quarter of 1975.

Production will increase if spending continues to rise, yet consumers, business, and the government appear to be holding back.

After a robust spring, retail sales have lost their momentum. Figures released by the Commerce Department showed September sales were about equal to those in August. And the September figures would have posted a decline without a downward revision of August sales.

Even the government has been spending less than expected. Final figures for the July to September budget deficit are due hortly, but officials say it will probably fall $5 billion to $7 billion short of the $20 billion deficit predicted in July.

Bargainers resume talks

DETROIT [AP] – Bargainers for the United Auto Workers and Chrysler Corp. resume contract negotiations today with the hope they can steer clear of the auto industry's second strike.

No meetings were held yesterday following day-long meetings at the subcommittee level Saturday. Both sides said after the meetings they were satisfied with the pace of negotiations.

"There was minor progress," said UAW Vice President Douglas Fraser. "I wouldn't call it terribly significant, but it was progress."

Chrysler's top bargainer, William O'Brien, vice president for employe and industrial relations, said the company also was satisfied with the progress of talks aimed at a new three-year agreement covering the No. 3 car maker's 109,000 hourly workers and 9,100 salaried employes in the United States and Canada.

Fraser said the subcommittees were sifting through the language in the pattern-setting agreement reached between the union and Ford Motor Co. after a 26-day strike.

Key provisions of the Ford pact included seven more paid days off by 1979, a 12 per cent wage increase over three years, cash bonuses for retirees and improved health care and layoff benefits.

"I'm satisfied with the pace," Fraser said. "Of course, it will have to intensify" before a settlement is reached.

Meanwhile, General Motors Corp. Chairman Thomas A. Murphy told reporters at Hot Springs, Va., on Saturday he thought his firm could "live with" the same agreement the union had reached with Ford.

"Certainly if it's acceptable to Ford, then we should be able to live with it," Murphy said.

Murphy, whose company also has resumed formal talks with the giant union, said he hoped negotiations could be completed without a strike.

Auditors say University juggled federal figures

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] – Federal auditors have accused the University of California of juggling the figures on federal grants and charging some expenses to federal grants in order to cover deficits in other operations or simply to use up all the monty in the grant.

The University of California receives $275 million a year from the federal government for research and other activities. The auditors' findings suggest that, at least on thoses campuses, the university ignored federal accounting rules that go along with the grants.

America's Hungarian refugees: 20 years later

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — The young doctor making his rounds at Barnes Hospital would easily pass for a native-born American.

His speech bears no trace of an accent. Most of his friends and associates never have set foot in the "old country".

Only the name is a giveaway: Dr. Bela Denes. He's Hungarian.

"People are often naturally inquisitive about the unusual name," Denes said.

"I tell them I'm from Hungary, and they'll say either 'Where is that?' or 'Is that one of those Communist countries?' Then I have a little explaining to do."

Denes was nine years old when he and his twin brother and parents fled Budapest after the collapse of the anti-Soviet uprising in 1956. He represents one of the more than 30,000 Hungarian refugees admitted into the United States in the wake of the bloody suppression of the revolt.

In addition to the chunky build that is said to characterize the Hungarians. Denes typifies many of the former refugees in that they have assimilated into American society.

Unlike the immigrants of the early 1900s or the displaced persons of World War II, many of the Hungarian refugees of 1956 feel no need to live and work in closely knit ethnic neighborhoods. They believe they can blend comfortably with the American mainstream.

The refugees 20 years ago arrived at a time American urban areas kept expanding into the suburbs. Many refugees moved straight into suburbia and bypassed the older city neighborhood where immigrants traditionally settled.

While exceptions exist in some cities, notably Cleveland and Chicago, the former Hungarian refugees in most metropolitan areas are widely scattered even though there are many of them. Denes lives in rural Jefferson County, south of St. Louis, and drives 50 miles roundtrip daily to his hospital.

Denes notes a frequent complaint of organizers of Hungarian cultural, social and religious activities — held in city neighborhoods — is, "Where are the '56ers?" Quite possibly they are at American cultural, social and religious activities.

The former refugees' most frequent contact with fellow Hungarians is likely to be with relatives. Denes, whose parents died a few years ago and whose brother, Alex, is a doctor in Phoenix, Ariz., visits his mother's relatives in nearby Belleville, Ill., every Sunday.

"We speak Hungarian only, and it enables me to stay fluent in the language," Denes said.

"Otherwise virtually all my friends are Americans. They're the ones you happen to work with or went to school with or whatever."

He emphasized he sees no reason to and does not hide the fact he is Hungarian.

"I'm proud of my native land," he said. "In fact, at every opportunity I get I like to explain to Americans my background and how I came to be here."

The revolt began Oct. 23, 1956, with student protests in Budapest against the Communist regime and the Soviet occupational forces in the country.

The uprising spread nationwide, and the Russian troops were withdrawn from the country.

Ruff's secretive chamber:

A view from inside the vault

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Watergate Special Prosecutor Charles Ruff's statement last week clearing President Ford of campaign law allegations was one of the few to come from Ruff's secretive chamber since he took office a year ago.

Reporters who thronged to hear the politically sensitive announcement got no further than the lobby of the small building, located across from the massive FBI headquarters, where Ruff works. They got no glimpse of Ruff himself.

Aides issued Ruff's prepared statement. His press secretary read it before cameras jammed into the small lobby.

Ruff might have been a mile away at his part time teaching job at the Georgetown University Law Center. Or he might have been upstairs in his tiny, tightly guarded headquarters which contains, among other things, copies of some White House tapes, a tape player and a document shredder.

The special prosecutor's office, with a reduced staff, has actively pursued illegal campaign contributions, most of them from the 1972 presidential and congressional races. It must also oppose appeals filed by convicted Watergate defendants.

A visitor can reach Ruff only by appointment. He must show credentials to a lobby guard and sign a register. Upstairs, a closed-circuit television camera guards the entrance. The visitor is queried by intercom before the door opens.

Seated before a window wired to trigger an alarm if tampered with, Press Secretary Dan Rosenblatt explained to a UPI reporter why the secretiveness and security are considered necessary.

"Copies of the White House tapes are still here, things like that," Rosenblatt said. "Documents collected throughout the course of the investigations. We have people coming to this office all the time that we don't know."

Asked about the wired windows, far above the street, Rosenblatt replied: "We certainly don't want to put in the public's mind that we are geared up only for daytime stuff."

As for secrecy, Rosenblatt said, Ruff is devoted to strictly fairness in releasing information to the public. He said that includes fairness to the accused, who must be considered innocent until proven guilty.

"It has always been the philosophy of this office to keep the public informed as much as possible for our activities," he said. "Mr. Ruff, I believe, is very concerned about the right of the public to know what is going on in his office.

"He and I work closely. He expresses his feelings of what lengths we can go. I have absolute confidence in his decisions."

Rosenblatt said, however, there was no chance a reporter could interview Ruff himself.

For some, the news in recent weeks about Ruff's investigation of allegations involving Ford while he was a member of Congress may have been surprising for reasons that had nothing to do with Ford or politics.

Newsmen discovered there was a wide belief the Watergate Special Prosecutor's Office was closed, now that an array of Nixon Administration figures have been jailed or are appealing, and the scandal is receding into the past.

On the contrary, Rosenblatt said, the office has continued without interruption or change except for a sharp reduction in a staff that once included 48 attorneys and some 50 support personnel.

He said the staff today fluctuates with two or three attorneys and eight or 10 supporting people, including himself.

The budget also has fluctuated — from $2.5 million for fiscal 1974 and $2.6 million for 1975 to slightly above $2 million requested for fiscal 1976.

Ruff, or whoever the final special prosecutor is, and the attorney general must decide when the time has come to close the office and shift any outstanding investigations to the Justice Department.

Jazz shows mark musical weekend

By JACK CAHILL
Below the Salt Staff

RAHSAAN ROLAND KIRK

This weekend will offer perhaps the most astonishing area concerts of the year. On Friday night, the UMass Program Council Music Committee will present Rahsaan Roland Kirk and the Vibration Society. Gil Scott Heron returns Monday night, while Saturday night features the highly regarded new jazz trio, Air, at Hampshire College.

Kirk, one of the elemental forces of Black music, is a horn player of miraculous abilities, known internationally for his technique of blowing three saxophones simultaneously. However, it is not how he plays that has entranced and flabergasted audiences for 20 years; it is what he plays.

Rahsaan is a walking jazz reference book who can adapt the tone and style of late greats like Chu Berry and Don Byas to a seemingly useless tune and change it into a barn-burner. Vocalist Michael Hill will join him for the concert.

Popular poet — musician Gil Scott Heron along with Brian Jackson and the Midnight Band return to UMass after a resounding June 27 appearance at the Fine Arts Center.

An author, songwriter, pianist and singer, Gil-Scott is one of the most literate contemporary performers. All of his songs, from "The Bottle" to "Winter in America", involve more than just the trivial concerns of most pop tunes. He and the Midnight Band have recorded for the Strata-East and Arista record labels.

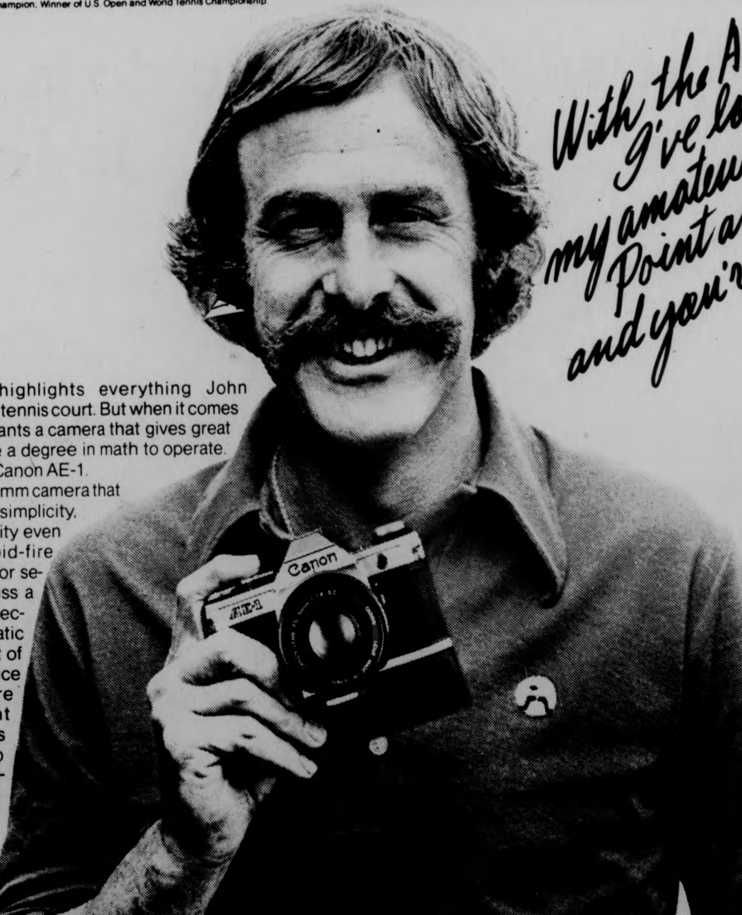
The Kirk concert begins at 8 p.m., this Friday and the Scott Heron concert at 8 p.m. Oct. 25. Both events will be held in the Student Union Ballroom with admission at $2.50. Tickets are available at the door and on the Campus Center concourse.

As the first event in a tentative series of concerts presenting contemporary improvising musicians, the Hampshire College Activities Council offers the Valley debut of "Air" on this Saturday, Oct. 23 at 7:30 and 10 p.m. in the Hampshire Dining Commons.

The trio, made up of woodwindist Henry Threadgill, drummer Steve McCall, and bassist Fred Hopkins, has a rapidly growing underground reputation as a unit with a very individual concept and a stunningly cohesive sense of interplay.

The musicians' separate credentials range from Duke Ellington through folk dance, classical music. A startingly different night of universal music is a guaranteed.

Tickets are $3.00 ($1.75 with Hampshire ID) and all proceeds will go to the establishment of the concert series.



John Newcombe—Nine-time Winbledon champion. Winner of U.S. Open and World Tennis Championship

With the AE-1, I've lost my amateur standing. Point and shoot, and you're a pro.

Professionalism highlights everything John Newcombe does on the tennis court. But when it comes to taking pictures, he wants a camera that gives great results, but doesn't take a degree in math to operate. That's why he likes the Canon AE-1.

The AE-1 is a fine 35mm camera that has point-and-shoot simplicity, and still has the versatility even a pro can love. Its rapid-fire power winder is great for sequences—you won't miss a shot. And the AE-1's electronic flash is so automatic it's truly foolproof. Best of all, it does all this at a price that's just a little more than what you might spend on a camera that's a lot less. If you want to lose your amateur standing in photography, the Canon AE-1 is the way to go.

Conte speaks on education

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Rep. Silvio O. Conte, (R-Mass.), said he supported federal funding of higher education at a program sponsored by the Massachusetts Society of Professors, here Friday.

Conte, who recently was endorsed by the Massachusetts Teachers' Association, the state affiliate of MSP, said that federal support of higher education would be a great asset to state institutions such as UMass.

"Public institutions now rely on state funds and are suffering through the bad times," Conte said. He said that state funding is largely derived from regressive taxes while the federal government relies on progressive tax bases.

Conte said all institutions, public or private, should reach their fullest potential in providing higher education.

Conte pointed to federal programs to support work-study programs which he said are now "falling through the cracks". He also cited a Federal Student Loan Program which would offer aid to families in paying for higher education.

"Many refrain from obtaining a higher education for themselves or their children largely because of the rising costs," said Conte.

Conte also mentioned federal funding for teaching equipment, research materials, and library materials.

Conte said funds could be saved at institutions by renovating old buildings instead of building new ones. Conte said this would also maintain the heritage of the university or college.

On formation of a collective bargaining unit for faculty here, Conte said if that is what the faculty want, then "it is a great idea." He said that the morale of the faculty is important to the student since it directly affects faculty attitude in the classroom.

Conte said that from what he can see, educational lobbying on Capitol Hill is very good.

"The National Education Association does a good job," Conte said, "The most important factor is communication, and they have that."

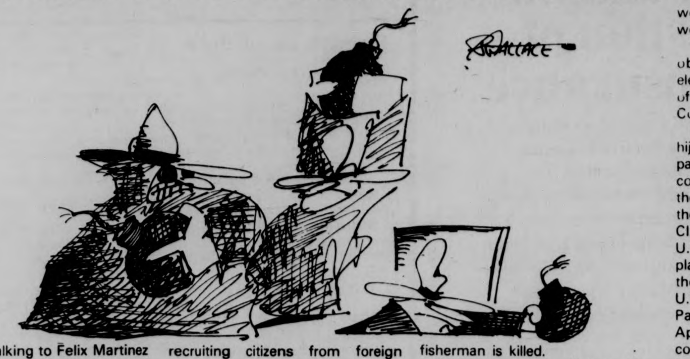
CIA involved in Cuban aircraft crash

By NUCLEO F. VARONA



On October 6, a Cuban plane crashed after an explosion while flying from Venezuela to Cuba via Barbados. Seventy-three people died. Fifty-three were Cubans, including the juvenile fencing team. Five North Koreans and seven Guyanans also died.

In the New York Times (Oct. 16), Dr. Henry Kissinger commented "that contrary to Castro's allegations, the United States had nothing to do with sabotaging the Cuban airliner ... " The State Department is lying.

Mr. Kissinger knows that the U.S. Ambassador to Barbados left the country immediately to come to Washington. Kissinger is aware of the following facts: two individuals had boarded that plane in Venezuela and left it in Barbados. The circumstances led investigators in Barbados to the belief that there was enough evidence to arrest them. Their names are Freddie Lugo, from Venezuela, and Jose Velazquez, also known as Jose Garcia.

Immediately the governments of Barbados and Venezuela referred to the crash as an "abominable crime". These countries had immediate access to the two persons arrested as well as to documents concerning the investigation. The government of Cuba did not make any statement because they were waiting for more confidential information to be analyzed.

There was doubt from the beginning about the true identity of the arrested. Jose Velazquez or Jose Garcia was carrying more than one passport. Sources from Venezuela said on October 10 that Herman Ricardo, a photographer from the newspaper El Mundo had been seen talking to Felix Martinez Suarez, a noted ex-Cuban CIA agent and two other individuals. It was also claimed that Mr. Ricardo was a close friend of Freddie Lugo, the first person arrested.

Two days after a bomb explosion in the offices of Cubana de Aviacion in Panama, Mr. Ricardo arrived at Maiquetia Airport from Panama. He was carrying three passports, one of them in the name of Jose Velazquez.

Mr. Hernan Ricardo is known as a CIA agent in Venezuela. Some sources said that they had heard Hernan Ricardo talking to Mr. Freddie Lugo about courses they were taking on explosives. These same sources said that Jose Velazquez, Jose Garcia and Hernan Ricardo are the same. On October 12, the Venezuelan Government officially announced that Velazquez, Garcia and Hernan Ricardo were the same person.

Sources in Venezuela claim that a large amount of money has been granted to the originators of the bombing attack. The CIA has been recruiting citizens from foreign countries and using their territories to commit international crimes. CIA also works behind sthe name of organizations of ex-Cubans, like the Revolutionary Organizations Commando (COR). This time the CIA was directly involved in the crime.

Here are some of the terrorist actions against the Cuban people in the past few months.

April 6, 1976 ... Two fishing boats were attacked by boats from Florida. One Cuban fisherman was killed.

April 22, 1976 ... A bomb exploded in the Cuban Embassy in Portugal. Two Cuban functionaries were killed.

July 5, 1976 ... There was an attempt against the Cuban Mission at the U.N.

July 9, 1976 ... A bomb exploded in a luggage of Cubana de Aviacion in Jamaica.

July 10, 1976 ... Another bomb in Barbados exploded in Cubana de Aviacion.

July 23, 1976 ... Another fisherman is killed.

August 9, 1976 ... Cuban functionaries at the Cuban Embassy in Argentina were kidnapped. They have not been released.

August 18, 1976 ... Another bomb exploded in the Cuban de Aviacion in Panama.

October 6, 1976 ... A Cubana de Aviacion airliner was destroyed in the air near Barbados. Fifty-seven Cubans were killed.

Behind these attacks is the CIA through ex-Cubans in the U.S. and other Latin countries. The Cuban government has intercepted a message sent to an agent asking for the following information: if Cuba was going to go to Angola for the inauguration of the government, the itinerary, Cuba's reactions to bombing attacks, if they would do anything to stop them, if they would blame anybody, if they would take revenge, etc.

This information was to be obtained through a microelectronic device placed in the office of the Secretary of Executive Committee of Ministers in Cuba.

In February 1973, the Anti-hijacking Pact was signed. In the pact it is clear that one of the countries can renounce it. Since the U.S. has not even investigated the long list of attacks in which the CIA has been involved nor has the U.S. given any apology or explanation to the Cuban people for those attacks proceeding from the U.S. territory, the Anti-hijacking Pact will be discontinued after April, 1977. However, Cuba will continue its agreement with other countries. There will not be any other pact with the U.S. until CIA terrorism against Cuba ends. Cuba is willing to communicate only if U.S. aggression is finished.

The hypocrisy of Watergate continues. The CIA may have diminished a little national harrassment; but, its international crimes continue, violating the sovereingty and laws of other countries. CIA agents move freely from country to country in the Western Hemisphere using U.S. passports or false documents after committing their crimes. Will the Congress investigate this last criminal act before November 2nd?

The age of the vending machine

To the Editor:

Man fears that the computer is taking over society. This is not entirely true. There is a close relative to the computer that could easily wipe out an entire generation. This relative, of course, is the vending machine. It's death weapon — fits of apoplexy suffered while the innocent consumer suffers the consequences of dealing with the machine itself. It is my belief that the machines consider frustration a game and they therefore figure out new varieties of angering the masses. An example:

Near the barbershop in our own Campus Center, there is a row of machines that has caused me personal grief many times. To date, the hot beverage vendor is the worst offender. He dispenses hot chocolate, chicken soup, beef stew, and the like. Being a fancier of hot chocolate, I placed twenty cents into the coin slot, pressed for my choice, and waited. He ground something up, let out a burp, and quit. Nothing came out. Now, I am not one to quibble about the smaller things in life, so I tried the procedure again. This time he ground something up, burped, and this time out came my hot chocolate. Sadly, there was no cup to catch the liquid. Another twenty cents down the proverbial drain. I quit while I was behind.

The next day, however, I had a Las Vegas gambling fever and I had to try my luck on the hot chocolate again. I followed proper order once again and lo and behold, out came a cup which was, in turn, filled with hot liquid. My feelings of triumph were short lived as the liquid was not the hot chocolate I had my digestive system set for. Instead, I got a cup full of a mixture of everything in the machine: hot chocolate, soups, teas, coffee and assorted other broths — the net result being a murky hot substance that was dark enough to have hidden the Loch Ness monster. I then told myself that further relations with this machine would be fruitless and off I went, a broken man and not to mention sixty cents poorer.

I went back to that place just yesterday to get a Dr. Pepper from a different machine, the hot chocolate fetish lost forever due to frustration. I dropped my thirty cents into the slot, pressed Dr. Pepper [which sounds suggestive in itself] and waited. This machine hummed Swannee River and stopped. Nothing happened. I couldn't believe it. My thoughts of a conspirarcy were confirmed when the hot chocolate bandit started to giggle and all the others joined in. Soon, they were all laughing at my folly hysterically and I was reduced to nothing.

I can no longer face a Coke machine without total emotional breakdown. The same for candy and cigarette machines. I am humiliated. I have, as the Chinese say, lost face.

I pray that no one becomes victim as I did. The solution to stop the activities of these bandits lies in the ability of our government to get to the head of the conspiracy. For if we do not, we may live to see a Coke machine in the White House in 1996.

Learn to support, criticize properly

To the Editor:

I'm tired of all the people who are wasting space and energy attacking Charlotte Allen, personally and politically, because she writes what no one else has the guts to! It's not surprising that it is mostly men who are reacting so violently to Charlotte's observations of blatant and subtle sexist society. She has pointed out how defensive some men can be when they are threatened by someone calling them on their inhumane attitudes and behavior. By the fact that the editorial pages have become alive for the first time in a long time with the publication of her ideas, she has proven that anger is resistance.

As for the 'sensitive' men who are upset that they have been categorized in the same ugly sexist syndrome of their brothers, instead of wasting time attacking her, why don't you spend that time talking with your brothers to show them that your sensitive way is better?

When characterizing Charlotte as hateful, realize that this is an easy way to ignore the realities of what she is saying. And if she seems to be generalizing, read between the lines and see that she is not, and never has condemned all men to have the problems that some unfortunately do. Of all the people I've seen on campus, Charlotte is smiling and rapping with people 99 per cent of the time. Hardly hateful. Perhaps the other one per cent of her time, is a period of confusion for her, when so many are quick to bitch yet the last to act.

Criticism is useful only if given properly, and when the UMass community learns that, as well as how to give support, to one feminist who sacrifices popularity and takes too much abuse, for the sake of making people think for the first time, we will have taken a big step forward.

All the power to you, Charlotte. Don't let 'em get ya down, it's only egos burning.

Tom Hayler

Misguided support

To the Editor:

I'm writing in response to the letter from the Brian Turner Support group from the thirteenth floor in Washington.

In reference to your statements concerning the efforts of the police and "administration" in dealing with alleged violators of the endangering behavior policy, I find your statement of appreciation to be somewhat confusing.

How is it you are able to "appreciate" something done for what you consider selfish reasons and done unsuccessfully at that. I consider your letter an insult to the UMass police and members of the Southwest community who are earnestly trying to keep people like you from getting killed while walking in and out of a S.W. tower.

Instead of considering Brian Turner the victim of an inept system, imagine him to be the victim of a bottle thrown from the thirteenth floor of any one of the towers.

If the latter were the case, Brian Turner would be dead. Is the thought of that enough to wake you up, or is it necessary that someone be killed before people like yourselves will accept some of the responsibility for what happens in S.W.?

Why don't you try placing the blame where it belongs? After all, the staff members and police are not throwing objects out of the tower windows — the students are.

Unity for women

The feminist movement has left a large number of women standing in the middle of the narrow road it has cut in its rise to prominence. Though the so-called "bra-burning" days are over, the image of the militant fanatical feminist is the only one that still comes into the minds of many men and women when they hear the words "women's liberation".

This is unfortunate, because women need to step forward, and to let their wants and needs be known. However, because the most outspoken feminists conjure up this image and seem to demand a choice between a traditional relationship with a man and declaring one's independence, they have alienated a great many women on this campus.

"I like men," a woman friend said recently, "I like having doors opened for me, anddbeing helped on with my coat. But that doesn't mean I don't believe in equal right for women." Hers is a widely held, if no loudly expression opinion on this campus. Just as most women cannot identify with the ultrafeminine extreme, so they cannot identify with the other extreme.

What has to be remembered is that the basic goals for which women are fighting are not really "women's" rights, but rather, human rights. The right to equal pay for equal work, child-care for parents who have young children and who must work, the right to equal job opportunities, and equal credit, are all things which people should have.

Whether or not a woman should shave her legs and underarms, while a man does not; whether or not a woman should wear high heels, which she believes have been designed by a man to ruin her arches; whether or not women should be allowed in all-male clubs and bars are the splashier and less substantial issues which veil the more important ones. The former are largely matters of choice, whereas the latter are matters of discrimination which we must work to rectify.

That "we" include both the more militant, and those who like having doors opened and coats held, because only if we all band together, and forget about personal appearances and preferences will we come together and achieve the goals which are in everyone's best interest.

Beware, heavy milk drinkers

To the Editor:

I have been measuring levels of I-131 radioactivity in milk for the past several days. Here are some observations and suggestions.

[1] Raw milk from local cows has activities in the range of 500-1000 picocuries-liter. If you are in the habit of using this milk, please reduce its consumption. These levels are still OK for adults. It is the heavy milk drinkers [i.e. babies and children] that have some risk. Use of this milk at 1 liter-day for a week would give doses to children's thyroids up to about 30 millirads. The International Commission on Radiological Protection recommends a maximum permissible dose of 1.5 rads to thyroids of children under 16 years of age.

[2] Supermarket milk of last weekend was clean. Use as old milk as possible. [Decay with time and longer supply lines are helpful.] Milk from supermarkets tested on October 13-15 did not reveal significant iodine-131 levels.

[3] In case you are in doubt and if your taste permits it, please consider using powdered milk for children. Curtailing their daily intake of of milk will help.

[4] There is no cause for alarm.

[5] If your cows are grazing on contaminated pastures, please stop them from doing so. This greatly helps in reducing levels of iodine-131 in milk.

[6] The present measurements indicate iodine-131 levels at about 2-5 nanocuries per square meter. This activity decays with a half life of 8 days.

commentary

Big Brother

By MICHAEL ROBERTS

I was in the library's main floor men's room. Written on the wall was "Michael Roberts Sucks — People of SW." It referred to a past commentary of mine.

I argued with myself.

Now there is a response that would not normally creep into the media. People would never be able to question or agree with that statement because no one would express it in a formal process.

Free expression is an anachronism. People want to censor that kind of criticism. We don't live in the days of President James Madison, author of the First Amendment, who sought no reprisal against newspapers which saw fit to call him a whoremaster.

Yeah, it's a modern form of prior restraint. Now, on campus there are people who want to censor movies. If a movie is racist or sexist, or just plain dirty, dirty, dirty,.... shouldn't I be allowed to see that movie and make that judgement for myself? Why do I need a censorship board to make decisions of personal belief for me? Why do some people want to withhold criteria from me, that I need to make a valued judgement?

That is an interesting thought. Suppose the movie Snuff were shown, hypothetically, to demonstrate the repressive and cruel role women have been subjected to by society. That movie would never be shown in that context if censorial sponsors succeed in deciding for us what the social context will be.

Ultimately, what is this social context but a common denominator of the minds of the audience? How can there be a social context if there is no audience? How can any group pre-suppose the state of mind of the audience or of the individual filmviewer?

Following this line of argument, they could censor the Triumph Of The Will because it promotes National Socialism. It would not possess a social context, nor could it hold any meaning for one individual. We would not be able to make value judgements about it, about its fascist nature, or about its type of "documentary propaganda" because we would not be allowed to see it first hand. Where would our knowledge come from?

People develop knowledge from their environment. They perceive and make associations. They can be analytical. Through analysis they rely on intuition to retain knowledge, until they know enough to develop a criteria of judgements. They develop a canon of criticism, a dialectic, in order to use analytical reason. If the environment is manipulated, it affects the criterion of judgement, and the thought processes are manipulated.

Education is a form of manipulation, but only in that it gives significance to certain analytical criteria, and sublimates others, which students are somewhat free to consider, often at the expense of their grades. Censorship is manipulation by constraint in order to engineer a social outlook, a contemporary standard, or a public morality.

The process of social engineering needs legitimate authority. It seeks public sponsors. It wants government legitimization. On the basis of creating a public morality there seems to be development of a State dogma or religion. The process will often seek the legitimization of either God or destiny, and would not be inimical to a fusion of Church and State.

The University of Massachusetts is a government agency, obligated to adhere to the First and Fourteenth Amendments, and not to respect establishments of religion. There is considerable difference between funding a Recognized Student Organization whose background is religious and legitimizing a religious agency for the purpose of controlling public policy. It is the difference of students pursuing a common interest, whether religious or secular, and of students who seek a dictatorial power to publicly proscribe individual beliefs as social crimes, or thought crimes.

On this campus pervades a concern, not for the injustices of social action and consequences, but a concern for what the individual should believe. What I sense is this semi-conscious white student, who thinks UMass is a working class school, who applies his definition of racism to everyone else, and who could conceivably walk into a classroom void of any black faces and never question that, because perhaps he feels without knowing it, "before the niggers get theirs I want my fucking degree....." There is concern for adhering to a standard of conformity, without questioning status as it affects other people. Punishment is for the crimes of thought.

And through it all, I often wonder why some people are so afraid of films? Are they also afraid of books? Perhaps when they succeed in stripping away what little free exercise of belief and expression society has left, then, they can consider why George Orwell wrote 1984. And when they burn that too, we can all join hands and smile back at Big Benevolent Brother, as our Bill of Rights burns, forever lost in a footnote of ashes on a smoldering page of history.

Thinking about thinking

Here in America we can worship murderers and kidnappers, we can defend men who massacre innocent people; our heroes are brawny football players and toothless hockey players; we love toughness, drunkenness, macho-ness, porn flicks and stupid politicians; we can glorify the brutish and inane. But we despise the intellectual.

Now this problem of anti-intellectualism is a "pet peeve" of mine because I always wanted to be an intellectual of one sort or another — but it just isn't encouraging when one discovers that the one floor of the Blue Wall is often more crowded than all twenty-odd floors of the library.

I don't really want to suggest that there are no intellectuals in the U.S. There are a few, mostly hiding in colleges and universities or being pursued by the CIA as threats to the national security. Nor do I wish to imply that we hate all intellectuals — it's just that the emphasis in this country has been taken away from thinking and put on things that require little or no thinking at all; like sports, partying, rowdy rock music, television, and voting for presidential candidates.

Anti-intellectualism shows up in two major areas — in people's lifestyles and in how we allocate our mental resources.

It's no longer in vogue to spend one's idle time reading the Classics. Not to say that it ever really was, but today we find there are more and more ways to waste time that are less and less intellectual. Television is a prime culprit. Everyone knows and readily admits that the vast bulk of TV appeals to the baser instincts and has no redeeming value. Everyone scoffs at the absurd and distasteful commercials that are getting worse all the time. Everyone watches TV.

Our lives have become more hedonistic — pleasure seeking is on the rise, and as it is so is pleasure supplying. Americans devour vast quantities of records and stereo components, alcohol and contraceptives, gas-guzzling vehicles and all-terrain vehicles, televisions, CB's, cheap mystery novels, disco, escapist movies, junk food, and numerous tickets to unenriching events of assorted types.

Seeking pleasure is not wrong in itself. But the way in which we go about it is, for most of our forms of pleasure are short-lived and give us little enjoyment after the fact. Why do we not look for higher forms of pleasure that not only entertain us but also educate us and lead to even better enjoyment?

Some would say we don't because we have been fed our desires through the media by greedy capitalists who manipulate us in a highly profitable fashion. Anyone who watches television would have to agree with this to one extent or another. But our desires are not that malleable, and if the need were not there initially the media efforts would not be successful.

The deeper and more difficult problem is the general alienation and loss of morality that has been occurring in this country for years. Our pace of life has quickened and left us standing in a daze, and our values system is based on the dollar. It seems that as long as we live our lives in pursuit of mindless profit and under the guiding morality of 'Bigger is Better' those lives will become even more meaningless.

The other difficulty is closely connected. No more do we place value on producing intellectuals. The ideal of the "Renaissance Man" has passed away much as the Renaissance has. People insist that our institutes of learning place more weight on the practical-applied sciences and engineering, business and trade. Of course, this pragmatism is a trademark of American thinking, but it has recently been elevated far out of proportion. Thinking for the sake of thinking, perhaps humanity's most noble and distinguishing trait, is ridiculed and subsequently is dying.

What makes all of this frightening and urgent is the recognition that anti-intellectualism has historically forecasted the downfall of a society and often the institution of some form of totalitarianism. Many remember the way Hitler used anti-intellectualism to his full advantage, molding an alienated people into a mindless, bloodthirsty mob. Is this really so far away from us?

While our system is, of course, much more sophisticated and our symptoms more subtle, the potential for this sort of social control remains, and grows daily. We are so obsessed with a highly organized, specialized society that we are swiftly losing sight of our humanity, especially our capacity to think and create.

It is time to reevalute the goals of modern society before it is too late. Thinking involves infinitely more than building a better mouse trap or making a faster buck. Intellectualism is really the search for truth, which is something modern America has made tragically obscure.

The UHS investigation

To the Editor:

I decided to write this letter because I am a friend of some employees at the University Health Services. I have seen these people during the recent months and know that after a great degree of soul-searching, they have come forward with information about wrongdoing in the health services.

To say that a risk was taken is not to ask for praise, but simply to request an understanding of the pressures and constraints that were evident during the process of making the information known to the District Attorney.

Since the news about the allegations has come out in the press, an action that was designed to protect these people from repercussions, the reaction among employees has been mixed. Some UHS employees are delighted to know that someone came forward with information about practices which they knew of, or speculated about. Some employees have come forward with new information and assistance. Others have felt upset by the allegations because they appeared in the press as vague and nonspecific.

It is unfortunate that this happened, but the District Attorney's investigation required that constraint be used, and the people are inexperienced with such matters.

The point to be made is addressed to all of those health service employees who do their job well, and who work long, hard hours to make the UHS a quality health care facility. It is for you people, that these actions have been taken. The people who came forward feel that, as employees, they have the right and obligation to speak out when a few individuals abuse the power. It is also a right to take part in the decisions which affect the UHS. These intentions are the same as yours; to make the UHS a high quality facility for consumers, as well as a pleasant, responsive and a more democratic place to work.

Language and struggle

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to all of the responses that Charlotte Allen's letter[s] have evoked....

The majority of responses seem to be from men. Why is that? Is it because these men are so threatened? Why have not more women written in expounding upon their outrage? Could it be that women are NOT outraged at all by Charlotte Allen's comments?

The responses to Charlotte's letters have smacked of defensiveness. Men obviously believe that someone has to be on top, so when they see women looking up to the sky through the window, they pull the shade down. Men have been trying to hide the truth [of women, from women] for so long that they fear to see women realizing who they [we] are and where they have come from. Would men be so afraid of women's herstory if indeed it were not true?

I think that exposing and arguing women's positions of such matters is both educational and futile. Educational because more women learn about their herstory, and futile because men will find more lies to cover the truth over to protect themselves.

WE HAVE RE-DISCOVERED OUR HERSTORY AND THERE IS FEAR. WHEN WE HAVE RE-DISCOVERED OUR LANGUAGE, THERE WILL BE REVOLUTION.

Senatorial candidate speaks here tonight

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

Michael S. Robertson, the Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate, will appear on campus tonight for an address and a question and answer session.

Robertson, 41, of Berkley, will speak in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. He will be questioned by representatives of the campus media on the WMUA program "Focus" following his Ballroom appearance.

Robertson is opposed by Senator Edward M. Kennedy and two minor party candidates in the Nov. 2 election.

Robertson is the president and chief executive officer of Robertson Manufacturing Corporation of Taunton, one of the largest manufacturers of drapery in the country.

He is considered to be a heavy underdog to Kennedy in the election. Kennedy is seeking election to his third full term as U.S. Senator.

Robertson, who ran unopposed in the September primary, has attacked Kennedy's record throughout his campaign. His effort has been hurt by the lack of funds, and he has been outspent by Kennedy by a wide margin.

Robertson is a political unknown whose only previous governmental experience is as a selectman for the town of Berkley. He also has served in a number of business and civic oriented organizations.

Robertson has voiced positions that are traditionally Republican; he is against forced busing, and he believes that new jobs for the unemployed should come from the private sector.

He has expressed opposition to the national health care program sponsored by Kennedy, and is against gun control on the basis that it does not directly deal with the crime program. He has stated that abortion is a "personal" matter and he is against the use of government funds to pay for abortions.

Columbia University

A representative of the School of Library Service, Columbia University, will be on campus Monday, October 25th. Interview information is available in the Office of Career Planning.

Five-College radio telescope most sensitive of its type

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

"RUSTIC BUT POTENT" reads the sign on the central computer at the Five College Radio Astronomy Observatory (FCRAO) in the Quabbin Reservoir watershed area. Accessible only by dirt road, in the remote wilderness of Prescott Peninsula lives the most sensitive radio telescope in the United States.

A combination of government surplus equipment and ultra-modern electronic technology, the FCRAO contains the world's only fully automated receiving and tracking system in use on a radio telescope. The observatory can monitor the universe round-the-clock, listening for signs of intelligent life in some far galaxy.

While the first messages received from beings in outer-space might be heard at the Quabbin station, the main purpose and contribution of the new millimeter wavelength or high frequency radio telescope lies in data it will give astronomers about the fundamental laws of physics and the origins of the universe.

The recently dedicated millimeter wave telescope can detect faint radio signals of the "shortest" wavelength, it will operate simultaneously with an array of four meter-wave telescope antennas (sensitive to longer waves in the radio spectrum) already in operation.

The "ears" of the FCRAO are trained on many natural sources of radio wave pulses being emitted from outer-space. Among these sources are such things as highly dense pockets of collapsed matter called "neutron stars," "quasars" millions of light years away, and other such "pulsars".

Many of these sources are very faint, but can now be picked up and recorded with the sophisticated new receiving equipment.

Astronomers using the Quabbin facility also expect to discover new data about comets, stars in the process of formation, star interaction, and vital information about the earth's atmosphere, particularly the depletion of the ozone-layer.

The new millimeter wavelength telescope consists of a 45 foot parabolic aluminum reflector dish, mounted on a tracking scanner inside a 60 foot "ray dome" made of randomly patterned triangles. The triangular patterned skin of the dome is reinforced fabric stretched over aluminum supports.

There are some 500 points on the surface of the reflector dish where adjustments in the precise shape of the parabola can be made, these

Dog-eat-dog affair at canine party

PROVO, Utah [AP] — The host called it the social event of the year, but for most of the guests it became a "dog-eat-dog" affair as Sherbie, a year-old black pomeanian, celebrated his birthday Saturday with 46 canine friends.

The highlight for Sherbie, owned by John Lewis, 19, a Brigham Young University freshman, was the presentation of a cake complete with a kitten coming out of the top.

The guests, who included Casper the Canine Ghost and a dachshund wrapped in a bun, came to the costume-birthday party to leave a paw print on the register, bob for hotdogs and take an occasional nip at each other.

Lewis said the family started holding parties for Sherbie six years ago because "we're getting so old we don't care about birthdays except for our dog."

created equal..." to "all people..." and it will add a sentence — "Equality under the law shall not be denied or abridged because of sex, race, color, creed, or national origin."

Proponents of the referendum say the amendment will make it easier for an individual to bring suit against sex discrimination and will act as an umbrella over all laws to protect citizens against possible discrimination.

But opponents point to a clause in the state constitution which now states that the state will not deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

This clause, they say, already states equality, therefore, the ERA is not necessary.

Pepper Peterson, Hampshire County coordinator of the aforementioned committee, argues that the current clause works for some people and doesn't work for others. It is too vague and subject to individual interpretation, she says. The clause is simply too arbitrary.

Proponents refuted just about every one of the opposition's arguments with legal facts. Opponents say the amendment will affect the draft status of women; advocates point out that this is a state amendment, and only the U.S. Congress, a federal governing body, has the right to draft women.

Opponents say the amendment will lead to the establishment of such things as unisex bathrooms and the like: proponents show that in the state constitution, there is guaranteed the right to personal and private protection.

Opponents say that under the ERA, women will not be able to work solely in the home, but will be forced to contribute support to the family unit; proponents say that under state law, there can be no interference by the state into the on-going life of legal marriage, unless there is official and legal divorce proceedings being conducted.

Proponents have other arguments, too. Now, widows get Social Security benefits while widowers get none; under ERA, either both sexes will get support or neither will.

The ERA will not affect churches, private single-sex schools, nor the Supreme Court ruling on abortion and homosexual marriage. It will not affect alimony or child support which are already based on income, as well as the decision as to which parent will raise the children.

One big concern of advocates of the amendment are laws currently on the books which ignore the capacity of women and discriminate rather than protect, as they were intended to do.

Such laws include the restriction of how many hours a week a woman can work, or the amount of weight a woman can lift while working.

It is not only these laws which this amendment would attempt to alter; it is a whole attitude of judging people by individual ability rather than by what gender they are.

the Second Congregational Church in Holyoke interpreting Sunday mass. She is starting an interpreting class there, organizing and participating in a sign variety show, and arranges for films with captions, such as "The Sting" and "Funny Girl" to be shown.

Leombruno also covers meetings and other events through the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission which serves as a liaison between state offices and student clients to provide services for the handicapped. She has interpreted club and organizational meetings and interpreted her first court case on Oct. 6, in which a deaf man was involved in a divorce hearing.

In the past one and a half years she has done an estimated 600-700 hours of interpreting. Leombruno said the media portrays deaf persons badly and the public is uneducated about the deaf.

"Most people have no contact with the deaf and don't realize that they have the same interests and problems as hearing people do," she said. "The only difference is the problem of communication."

"It is so pleasing to a deaf person when a hearing person tries to communicate with him," she said.

Leombruno has done experiments pretending to be deaf and trying to communicate with storeowners and other persons, but has often been avoided or given little assistance.

"It seems the fear of being unable to communicate keeps people away," she said.

Many signs must be decided on the moment and signs can differ depending on where they are used and the individual preference of the deaf person, she said.

Science classes require different signs and abbreviations for technical terms. These signs must be spelled out, decided on the spot, and possibly shortened or reviewed after class. One of her students has occasionally brought a list of names and short signs that may be used in the lecture.

Nov. 19.

Faculty here and at the Boston campus, if they choose to have a collective bargaining unit, will choose between two national organizations: AAUP or the National Education Association (NEA).

On the AAUP level, Boston faculty are represented by the Boston chapter; Amherst faculty are represented by the Amherst chapter. On the NEA level, Boston faculty are represented by the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

According to state Labor Relations statute, all state employes have the right to bargain collectively with their employes. However, according to state Labor Relations General Law 150, the state commission must decide through hearings which employes will be included in the unit and set an election date where employes decide officially whether or not to have the unit.

If the faculty choose to have a unit, negotiations for a contract between faculty and administration must go through the state commission.

The state commission made their decision after a four-month hearing period which ended this March.

bluebird forecast

Spontaneous 'rebirth'

By JACOB LOVE

General planetary patterns may effect everybody on one level or another but the exact nature and timing of the effect depends upon the individual's personal nature and development (as reflected in the birthchart) as well as free will. The energies building up today may have peaked for any given individual over the last week or, more particularly, over the week-end. If not yet, they'll probably peak today towards 1:35 p.m. as Mars, the energetic planet and sometimes god-of-war, lines up with Uranus, the planet of inspiration and sudden change. Both planets are in the early part of Scorpio, the sign of death-and-rebirth.

Mars has a two-year cycle around the circle of the Zodiac. His last line-up or conjunction with Uranus occurred on October 25th, 1974. Both planets were in Libra (balance-in-partnerships) that time but, if we recall what we experienced then, the process this time around may be similar albeit more scorpionic. These last few weeks before the conjunction have been wrapping up loose-ends from the old cycle in preparation for the new. As both planets are energetic and spontaneous, we can only expect the unexpected. Their ultimate purpose if Scorpio, however, is clear — to inspire rebirth. Such words may sound trite but, afterall, life is a process of growth and there are turning points which require the shedding of the old and the facing of the new.

Mercury, the planet of rational thought, forms two major planetary connections this morning which may offer us solid reasons for the changes we'll have to face. At 8:49 a.m. Mercury forms an harmonious 60 degree angle with Neptune (the planet of dreams and compassion). We may find it easy to flow with our vague dreams but if we take a sharp look we may see the cosmic reasoning beneath the path we are treading. We may have to face a few fears to earn a sharp look since Mercury will conjunct Pluto at 10:17 a.m.

Scorpio is "ruled by" Pluto, which is a medieval way of saying that anything which goes on in that sign will be subtly influenced by his nature. He's the guardian of the gate twixt heaven-and-hell so we won't be allowed to see heaven until we have the courage to face hell. Both planets are in Libra, the sign of balance between self-and-other, so if we haven't been using our mercurial brain to figure out how to balance more effectively, we may fall off the see-saw. Their conjunction will mark the completion of a one year cycle during which Mercury has moved around the circle of the Zodiac, giving us a chance to see our relationships from every side. So if we fall off we will at least have learned something and can begin the new cycle reborn, perhaps on a new see-saw. On the other hand, if we've done our balancing homework, we may get plutonic rewards for work well done.

Lunar connections fill out the afternoon, with potential smiles at 3:42, possible headaches between 6:30 and 7:30, and increasing chances for disharmony and miscommunication after that thru 1:01 a.m. Tomorrow morning will feel better. Otherwise, let's remember that the Sun represents our spiritual focus. Sunshine is beaming down from Libra, so growth will come thru centering, no matter what may come to imbalance us.

adjustments become necessary when temperature changes "distort" the shape of the bowl. Parts of the electronic receivers must be kept at a temperature close to absolute zero in order to reduce static noise, so they are constantly immersed in a liquid-hydrogen bath.

The Quabbin Reservoir site was chosen for the FCRAO because of the need for a total lack of sound interference, the remote area provides a buffer zone from noise in populated areas.

Patriots are pick over Jets tonight

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — The New England Patriots and New York Jets never have adjusted to Monday night football, as the record proves.

The Patriots are 0-3 in the nationally-televised night games while the Jets are 0-7. The Patriots are a 13-point favorite to end their weeknight blahs at Schaefer Stadium Monday at the expense of the Jets.

But the visitors always have done well against New England. Jets quarterback Joe Namath is 15-2-1 against the Patriots and never has lost on New England soil or poly-turf.

Additionally, the Jets are coming off their first win of the season and their initial victory under coach Lou Holtz, while the Patriots are trying to regroup from an unexpected 30-10 loss to Detroit.

Holtz credits his young defense for the Jets' upsurge.

"Our defense is growing each week," he said. "We're getting more and more consistent and now we're starting to cause turnovers.

The New York defense, dotted with five rookies, yielded 84 points in losing its first two games, but, in the past three games, the newly installed three-four defense has given up just 47 points and no more than one touchdown in any of those contests.

"Our guys are a good bunch of kids who decided they were tired of losing," said Holtz. "As a former linebacker myself, my feeling has been that linebackers are the key to any defense. They have to be in on both passing and rushing plays and must be able to react to the offense extremely well."

Three of the linebackers are rookies — third-round pick Greg Buttle, sixth-round choice Bob Martin and Larry Keller, acquired on waivers from San Diego a week before the season began. The only starting veteran is John Ebersole.

New England is 3-2 and in second place in the American Football Conference's East Division. The Jets are 1-4 and in last place in the AFC East.

The Patriots also will use three down linemen and four linebackers, as they have the past two seasons. New England also shifts into the four-man front.

"Our defense's job will be to put more pressure on the quarterback than we have the past few weeks," said Patriots' coach Chuck Fairbanks. "We can't give Namath a lot of time to throw."

Namath and backup Richard Todd have been sacked 15 times this season, while New England's Steve Grogan, dumped only four times in the first four games, was sacked four times against the Lions.

Three arrested for theft

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Five youths — three reportedly wearing oversized Dodger jerseys — were arrested Saturday night in connection with the theft of more than $1,200 worth of baseball paraphernalia from the Dodger clubhouse.

Police said Sunday the youths, ranging in age from 13 to 16, were released into the custody of their parents pending a juvenile hearing.

The Dodger clubhouse was broken into last Monday, police said, and thieves carried away Steve Yeager's catcher's mask, nine baseball gloves belonging to Bill Buckner, Don Sutton, Reggie Smith and Doug Rau, three uniform jackets, four baseball caps, three batting helmets and one helmet bag.

Also stolen were six gray travelling uniform shirts and 17 white uniform shirts.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Monday, October 18 — Born today, you possess a serious nature of the sort that will not be moved from its contemplative aspects to more light-hearted, humorous ones. This does not mean, however, that you are unable to appreciate the value of life's lighter side; it is simply that you are not yourself able to contribute to the care and nurturing of that particular side. Profoundly practical, you find it extremely difficult to enter upon any course of action that does not seem to you entirely reasonable, logical and ultimately profitable, whether materially or otherwise. You enjoy achievement tremendously -- but your enjoyment is diminished when achievement is the result of accident or chance or what others might term "luck."

Strongly independent, you are not one to encourage others to join forces with you, even when by so doing, you might well enhance your possibilities for gain. You take your greatest pleasure from working alone on projects that appeal to you more for their individuality than for any success they might enable you to have. You enjoy your associations with other people, but you in no way allow such associations to interfere with your own work or your own leisure-time activities. There are many who consider you aloof -- and, for the most part, such an assessment of your character is quite correct.

Although you are quite capable of dealing with the public, you prefer doing so in a way that does not bring you into direct contact with many people at once.

Tuesday, October 19

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Unfortunate circumstances early in the day make it impossible for you to accomplish your aims at this time. Be patient.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Employ your scientific mind in ways that will increase the possibility of your success. Don't delay new projects.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Any who ask assistance at this time should be helped without delay. Expect the best from a friend and you will receive it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Allow your sympathetic nature full sway today. Children are in special need of patience and guidance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Your tendency to believe everything you hear could land you in considerable trouble just now. Listen, but takes things with a grain of salt.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Don't shirk your responsibility, regardless of the incentive to do so. Action taken quickly may be taken wrongly.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Practice really does make perfect today. Realize an important, though perhaps small ambition in your relations with other people.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — An influential friendship makes it possible for you to succeed without much effort on your part. Don't be impatient.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Make a good appearance. It is how you enter upon the scene that will count most in the eyes of today's judges.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — There is little room for a display of artistic temperament today. Make this a time of peaceful contemplation of the future.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Your susceptibility to flattery may be an unwelcome aspect of your associations with others today. Try to remain objective -- even about yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Expenditures that are beyond your means must be avoided today. Don't expect others to "bail you out" should you overspend.

Minnesota, 24-7

BLOOMINGTON, Miss. [UPI] — Fran Tarkenton threw for two touchdowns, including a 41-yarder to Chuck Foreman, and became the National Football League's first quarterback with 3,000 career completions Sunday to lead the Minnesota Vikings to a 24-7 victory over the winless New York Giants.

Foreman had 201 total yards with 118 yards on eight receptions and 83 yards on 23 rushes.

Tarkenton, a former Giant, connected on the 3,000th pass of his 16-year NFL career with a seven-yarder to Foreman with 3:50 gone in the game. On the next play, the 36-year-old quarterback recorded his 3,001st completed pass with a 13-yard toss to Sammy White.

St. Louis, 21-17

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — Jim Hart passed for 346 yards and three touchdowns, including scoring tosses of 54 and 17 yards to Mel Gray, to give the St. Louis Cardinals a 21-17 win over Dallas Sunday for the Cowboys' first loss of the season.

Both teams are 5-1 and tied for the first in the NFC East.

The final St. Louis drive began after the fired-up Cardinal defense stopped the Cowboys on a goal-line stand late in the third quarter. Dallas had blocked a punt and took over on the eight but St. Louis rookie defensive tackle Mike Dawson led the charge which stopped Charles Young short of the goal line on a fourth and one.

Green Bay, 28-13

GREEN BAY, Wis. [UPI] — Lynn Dickey threw two long scoring passes and Bartie Smith scored twice on short runs Sunday to lead the Green Bay Packers to a 28-13 victory over the Philadelphia Eagles.

The victory, their third straight, gave the Packers a 3-3 record and marked the first time they have been at .500 since midway through the 1974 season. Philadelphia fell to 2-4.

Oakland, 17-10

DENVER [UPI] — Ken Stabler connected on 16-of-20 passes Sunday, including a 46-yard touchdown bomb to Cliff Branch, to lead the Oakland Raiders to a 17-10 victory over the penalty-plagued Denver Broncos.

The Broncos threatened a comeback with 26 seconds left when Steve Ramsey completed passes to Otis Armstrong and Haven Moses. But time ran out after a 17-yard Armstrong run to the Raiders' 25.

The win boosted the Raiders' lead in the AFC West as they beat the Broncos for the 14th straight year at Mile High Stadium. The Broncos fell to 3-3.

Pittsburgh, 23-6

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Franco Harris rushed for 141 yards and two touchdowns behind rookie quarterback Mike Kurczek Sunday to lead Pittsburgh to a 23-6 upset of the Cincinnati Bengals that snapped the Steelers' three-game losing streak.

Roy Gerela added field goals of 42, 40, and 30 yards for the Steelers, now 2-4. Both of Harris' touchdowns came on one-yard bursts.

An inspired Pittsburgh defense paved the way for the win as Kruczek made his first pro start in place of injured Terry Bradshaw.

Baltimore, 31-13

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. [UPI] — Lydell Mitchell dashed in from the six yard line late in the second quarter Sunday and Bert Jones threw scoring passes of nine and three yards in the final quarter as the Baltimore Colts whipped the Buffalo Bills 31-13.

Mitchell ran for 91 yards as the Colts won their fifth game against only one defeat. The Bills, playing their first game under new coach Jim Ringo, lost their fourth game in six starts. Jones completed 13-of-22 passes for 202 yards.

The clubs traded leads in the first half, with Baltimore going ahead on Don McCauley's two-yard run, then falling behind 13-10 when Bills quarterback Joe Ferguson hit O.J. Simpson for a 33-yard scoring pass. However, Mitchell's score put the Colts ahead to stay.

Los Angeles, 20-12

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Lawrence McCutcheon, whose third-period fumble set up Chicago's only touchdown, burst 18 yards for a score with 5:31 gone in the last quarter Sunday as the Los Angeles Rams squandered a 10-point lead and then rallied to beat the Bears 20-12.

Tom Dempsey kicked a 37-yard field goal with 1:56 left to put the game out of reach for the Rams, who improved their record to 4-1-1 and remained right behind San Francisco in the NFC West.

San Francisco, 33-3

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Jim Plunkett ran his season touchdown total to 10 with scoring passes to Gene Washington and Wilbur Jackson Sunday and the San Francisco defense had seven more quarterback sacks in a 33-3 victory over the New Orlean Saints.

Sammy Johnson ran one yard for a third San Francisco touchdown while rookie Anthony Leonard returned a punt 60 yards for a fourth score as the 49ers opened up a 30-0 lead in the first half and coasted to their fifth victory in six games.

Cleveland, 20-17

ATLANTA [UPI] — Speedy Greg Pruitt rushed for 191 yards and two touchdowns Sunday to lead the Cleveland Browns to a 20-17 victory over the Atlanta Falcons, who were playing for the first time under new head coach Pat Peppler.

Pruitt's touchdown runs were for only one and two yards but he also had runs of 64 and 45 yards during the course of the game.

No Olympic sanctions held against boycotting countries

BARCELONA, Spain [AP] — Lord Killanin, president of the International Olympic Committee, indicated Sunday that no sanctions are likely against the African countries which boycotted the Montreal Games last July.

A week-long series of meetings ended with no firm decisions taken on the Africans. Killanin's executive board will report back to the full session of the IOC in Prague next June.

But Killanin said at a news conference: "It is felt that retroactive sanctions would be counter-productive, which would be most especially harmful to the athletes."

The IOC leaders have been in consultation here with the 26 international federations which control Olympic sports.

Killanin said no one pressed for actions against the Africans except Charles Palmer, president of the International Judo Federation, who wanted the countries involved in the Montreal boycott banned from all international events for five years.

The IOC is likely to review its rules to stop walkouts in the future, the 62-year-old president said.

A statement from the IOC said: "The executive board insists that anyone who requests the honor of participating of his own free will in the Olympic Games must accept, without reservation, the IOC rules and undertake not only to respect them but to have them respected.

"It recommends that IOC rules be reviewed, amended, strengthened and implemented in the future."

IOC leaders are anxious to prevent a wider rift between the African continent and the Olympic morement. If Africa pulled out of the Games permanently, one of the five rings, representing each continent, would have dropped from the Olympic symbol.

The African countries boycotted Montreal in protest of a tour of South Africa by a New Zealand rugby team. Only Senegal and the Ivory Coast stayed to compete. Twenty-nine African countries were listed as absent, but one of those, Zaire, has since told the IOC its athletes stayed away from Montreal for financial reasons, not political.

Polo teams take dip; injuries plague men

By ROBERT CORB

It was a tough weekend for the UMass men's and women's water polo clubs as an undermanned men's water polo team lost to New England's number one ranked team Brown, 20-8. The women's team lost, spliting a tri-meet with B.C. and M.I.T., winning the first game 18-2 over M.I.T. and falling prey to Boston College 14-5.

In the men's game, injuries to starting defensive specialist Ben Crooker, Barry Eisenberg, and Bob Corb hindered any hopes for a UMass upset. Duncan Lomas led the UMass attack with five goals and was aided with three goals from Russ Yarworth.

The men's record is now 0-1 in the New England league and have a 2-2 overall season tally.

The men will play again Wednesday night against arch rival Harvard at Boyden pool at 6:00.

The women had a little better luck as they romped over first year team M.I.T. A trio of Adrienne Fredey, Debbie Hoxie, and Penny Noyes combined for 12 goals to pace the UMass attack. Fredey was leading scorer with six goals while Hoxie and Noyes chipped in with three apiece.

Other scorers for the Minutewomen were Alix Denhatog, Louise Fasser, Kathy Zaffino, and Nancy Campbell.

In the second game, a tired UMass squad took on B.C. and lost.

Leading scorers in this game for UMass were Adrienne Fredey with four goals and Debbie Hoxie with one.

In the final game of the day, B.C. beat M.I.T. 9-3.

The women will hope to improve their season's record of 1-1 Wednesday as they will take on Radcliffe. The game is tentatively set for 7:30.

Scuba club enjoys some great scenery

By STEVE O'CONNOR
Collegian Staff

The UMass SCUBA Club was engaged in a pre-scheduled diving event Sunday which took seven participants to Rockport, Mass. The UMass divers submerged off Cathedral Rocks and at Folly's Cove, taking in some great submarine scenery and also securing a fine catch of fish and lobsters.

In a previously held event, the UMass SCUBA Club travelled to Jamestown, R.I. on the weekend of Oct. 2 to take part in a New England Collegian Dive hosted by the University of Rhode Island. Other schools invited to the dive were MIT, UNH, and Roger Williams. On that occasion the UMass club made continuous dives Saturday and Sunday, including a night dive. Some of New England's best marine sights were enjoyed such as stunning rock formations and coral shelfs. More up-coming dives are now being arranged, including a Florida intercession excursion to the keys which will be the topic of this Wednesday's SCUBA Club meeting. All newcomers and interested persons are invited to attend club meetings, dates and locations will be posted in the Notices.

Netwomen blank Keene St., dominate despite weather

By PATTY AMERO
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's tennis team convincingly defeated the netwomen from Keene St., N.H. Friday at a score of 7-0. Despite a strong wind, the women had little problem winning the match and upping their record to 3-3.

Coach Ken Rubin had remarked before the game that the women would be playing cautiously due to the wind. "With such a strong wind, you either have to hit it (the ball) hard to get it in, or on the other side, you barely top it and it goies way out," he said.

Jennifer Ranz, the number one singles players, beat Keene's Terry Robson, 6-0, 7-5.

Number two player Dawn Minaai was the only singles player who had tough opposition in Keene State's Jones Murphy. Their first set went to a tie-breaker when the score became 6-6. In a tie-breaker, the first player to score 5 points wins the tie-breaker and the set by a score of 7-6. With the tie-breaker tied at 4-4, Murphy double-faulted, giving the set to Minaai. Minaai then went on to win the second set 6-3, thus winning her match.

In the third and fourth spots respectively, Carolyn Mooney defeated her opposition, Julie Delano, 6-2, 6-2, and Kathy Sullivan took her match 6-1, 6-1 from Dogmar Klein.

Fifth singles spot player Martha Awiszus remained undefeated on the season, as she finished off Pam Taylor from Keene in less than half an hour, 6-0, 6-0.

In the doubles matches, the number one team of Captain Nancy O'Neil and Karen Holt won their match against Gloria Lamson and Dianna Graves of Keene 6-2, 6-3.

Leslie Howell and Jeanette Flynn, UMass' second doubles team, played the only match that went to three sets. The first went to a tie-breaker which UMass won 7-6, but Keene took the second set 6-0. However, Flynn and Howell came back to record a 7-5 win in the third set.

Rubin said he was, of course, very pleased with the results of the match, despite the strong wind that drew comment from the players.

"You have to play with the wind — that's the game at this time of the year. I was more careful because of it, but I enjoyed playing today," Holt said after her doubles match.

Minaai said she thought the wind "really tested your skill out there today."

Rubin said he was particularly pleased with the results of the doubles matches, because the women have now won the last seven straight doubles matches.

The next match for the UMass squad is today at Southern Connecticut at 3 p.m.

STRAIGHT-SETS — A well-kept secret on the team until now has been the existence of a set of twins. The Eskimo twins are "Klondike" Awiscuz and Jennifer Ranz, according to a reliable source.

Linksters shoot for third straight NE title

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

A slumping men's golf team hopes to regain some lost consistency today, as it plays its final match of the fall season. The linksters travel to new Seabury CC in quest of their third straight New England championship.

The Minutemen are coming off two less-than-spectacular performances however. At the ECAC qualifier in Vernon, Conn., they barely play well enough to qualify. They tied Central Conn for second place, five shots back of URI.

At the ECAC championships, held last Friday at Hidden Springs CC in Horsham Pa. the linksters finished a disappointing sixth, sixteen strokes behind the winner West Virginia.

In both matches, the linksters played well, and were in a position to win, until they reached the final nine holes. There, the Minutemen collapsed. They couldn't seem to put it all together when the needed it, as they had done in several earlier matches.

"If we played the way we know we can play, we could have won" said coach Fan Gaudette of the ECAC championships. "We've lost some of our consistency, and we're getting a more double bogies than we have been" Gaudette said.

Gaudette also felt that the long grueling golf season may be starting to take its toll on the players' concentration. "This is our last event of the season though, and I'm hoping for a good performance" Gaudette said.

The defending New England champs will go with the same five players used in the ECACs: Jim McDermott, Flynt Lincoln, Bill Locke, Bob Snderson, and Tim Diskin.

At the ECACs, McDermott was the low man for the linksters, shooting 81-73-154, only five strokes off the low medalist pace.

Freshman Lincoln went 78-81-159, while senior Bill Locke had a pair of 81's for a 162 total. Senior co-captains Bob Sanderson and Tim Diskin, consistent throughout the year, each had their day of the season. Sanderson went 82-81-163, while Diskin had an 84-87-171 total that did not figure in the best four-of-five scoring.

Coach Gaudette will continue to use senior Bill Locke in the fifth position. "He's played better than anyone else has in that position" Gaudette said.

Hoping to stop UMass in its bid for a third straight title will be the familiar cast of schools that the linksters have seen several times this season. Central Conn, Salem State, URI, UConn, Providence, Dartmouth, Boston College, and Yale will be the teams to watch for.

'Rats' gnaw ruggers

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass rugby club suffered its third successive setback Saturday in a fierce encounter with the aptly named Mystic River "Rats". The ruggers rebounded to defeat its B and C side counterparts 9-7 and 23-6 respectively.

The brutal A contest nearly erupted into a free-for-all late in the games as tempers flared. Larry Tebo and Terry Kineen were ejected for their participation in this melee, while a sole visitor was asked to leave. The "Rats" capitalized on this man advantage to break a close match wide open, expanding a narrow 3-0 margin (on a 40 yd. penalty kick) to 13-0 after this incident. The scoreless first stanza was very sloppily played. Loquacious leader robert "Doc" Lawrence lengthily lamented, "It was not a good game, neither side played well. They lost their heads out there — let the officiating get to them. It was an unruly game, I wouldn't say it was a dirty one however. They simply lost their cool." Henry Brown played well for the losers, whose season record dropped to 4-3-1.

A 30 yard penalty kick attempt in the waning moments of the closely-contested B game hit the crossbar and was subsequently cleared by the Minutemen to preserve a 9-7 triumph. Paul Shekoian tallied the winning points as he teamed with Bob Wronski and Dave Berard on a 50-yard scamper, highlighted by some well executed exchanges, "Textbook rugby", exclaimed Lawrence. Doug Bayford, an exchange student from East Anglia University in Norwich, England, proved instrumental in this victory as his strong foot accounted for a penalty kick and two conversions. "Excellent kicking", beamed a pleased mentor. The B side now sports a 4-3-0 ledger.

Hard-running Forrest McCluer scored three tries and wing forward Mike Hardy added another as the C fifteen routed its rodential rivals 23-6. McClurer picked up loose balls on three separate occasions and carried the precious pigskin to paydirt. Lawrence added, "He only had the fullback to beat and at about 6'2" and 190 pounds — very leggy — he's tough to tackle in the open field — a hard runner." Hardy's try was a total team effort as the pack played cohesively, alertly scooping up loose balls. "Textbook Rugby", exhorted Lawrence. The highly cerebral mentor also cited the efforts of Charles ("call me Chuck") Trippi who tackled very well, as the C's (now 4-1) played, "probably their best game of the year."

Harriers rule over UNH, Vt; McGrail, Carroll return to form

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Running without a care in the world, the UMass men's cross country team dominated Vermont and New Hampshire in a tri-meet held in Vermont 15-57-72 respectively.

The harriers closed out their regular season record with a 10-1 mark and recorded their seventh and eighth consecutive victories of the year with a sweep over the Catamounts and Wildcats.

Junior Cliff Staples, senior captain John McGrail and junior Frank Carroll all crossed the finish line with the same time of 25:33. First place was awarded to Staples who finished a half step ahead over McGrail and Carroll. Running on a clear, cool, slightly windy, day, their times were one minute behind the course record of 24:37 held by UNH runner George Reed in 1974.

Reed, the number one Catamount runner, has decided to take a semester off this season and the senior physical education major will rejoin the UNH outdoor track team in the spring.

Besides the top three positions, UMass controlled the 4-6 and 9-12 places. Only Tim Robinson from Vermont and Dave Gilanes from UNH were able to crack the top ten positions in the race. Robinson finished seventh and Gilanes eighth.

For UMass, Chris Farmer, Kevin McCusker and freshman Bob Martin placed fourth, fifth, and sixth to clinch the meet for the roadrunners.

Farmer, who was termed by UMass coach Ken O'Brien as the "Hero" of last week's tri-meet victory over Syracuse, Manhattan, and Connecticut, ran his second consecutive outstanding race of the year with a fourth place time of 25.39.

McCusker and Martin ran with Farmer for most of the race and finished three and seven seconds behind him, respectively.

Number one UMass runner Mike Quinn and fourth man Louis Panaccione, both sophomores, were being rested for the Yankee Conference championships and did not run.

But their efforts were not needed as coaches O'Brien and Morse were very pleased to see the return of McGrail and Carroll. McGrail, out for a meet because of his law boards and Carroll out since Sept. 28 with the flu, said they felt good after the race.

"John and Frank said they both felt pretty funny during the race because they hadn't run in a long while. But they ran a hard three miles and then relaxed the final two. The main thing is they felt good," said coach O'Brien.

According to O'Brien, Cliff Staples' first place performance was the most significant aspect of the meet. He said that Staples looked very comfortable and relaxed on the five mile course and seemed to enjoy running on the grassy level course.

"Cliff's consistency is very pleasing this year and it seems that outstanding races are becoming this trademark," O'Brien said.

Rick Walls and Neal McGrail both tied for ninth place with a time of 25:54 with Bob Neil and freshman Jay Ledger finishing 11th and 12th respectively.

McGrail, running JV all last year, and probably the most improved harrier since last season recorded his second varsity placing. Through most of the race the younger McGrail ran with Farmer before dropping back.

As the roadrunners prepare to recapture their seventh straight Yankee Conference title on October 30, coaches O'Brien and Morse will try to work the team hard during the practice for the next two weeks.

"We want to maintain consistency during this time and not to hit peaks or valleys," O'Brien said.

"We will aim for a slight progression in intensity level, but we don't want to over-emphasize any particular practice," O'Brien said.

Rhody wins, 2-1

Overtime goal sinks booters

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

Dan McCrudden scored his second goal of the game at 3:02 of overtime Friday afternoon to give Rhode Island a hard fought 2-1 victory over UMass, whose only goal was scored by Dave Tagliavini.

The game can be described as three mini-games all rolled into one. Rhody dominated the entire first half, UMass took over the second, and overtime saw even play.

The Rams came out storming the Massachusetts net with an aggressive style of offense that featured the strong inside play of McCrudden. The 6'4" lad popped in a goal at 12:07 after being assisted by Agekunle Agoro.

The half ended with Rhody up 1-0; the Minutemen seemed to acquire a lift from the fact that they were down by only one goal although for the most part they had been totally outplayed.

The Minutemen started to build some momentum early in the second half behind their strong midfield play and an improvement in their passing game.

At 14:37 Dave Tagliavini, who had been out with an ankle injury for the last three weeks, took a pass from Bob McChesney and beat Rhody goaltender Bob Auletti. "Tag" had just entered the game about a minute before he scored and his presence on the field seemed to inspire the Minutemen.

UMass carried the play to the Rams for the remainder of the game following Tagliavini's goal. The best scoring chance for the Minutemen occurred when they were awarded a penalty shot. Ludlow's Bob McChesney took the shot, but he missed the net.

In overtime both teams played cautious soccer with McCrudden's second goal standing up for the victory.

BOOTER BANTER: Statistics show the equality of the teams: Shots, UMass 24, URI 29; Saves, UMass (Hanks 16), URI (Auletti 11); Corner Kicks, UMass 1, URI 5.... Coach Russ Kidd used a great number of substitutes, among them: Mike DeCosta, Bob Jacobson, Tagliavini, Mark Vassalotti, Mark Abbott, Bill DeLuca, Tim O'Brien and Mark Vasington... An estimate crowd of 500 persons watched the game which was played on URI's new field....

Minuteman crews impressive at Head of Charles Regatta

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

While apologies were leaping from my typewriter, the UMass crew team was in the process of doing very, very well in the Head of the Charles Regatta yesterday. The apologies? They are for having the idiocity of hitchhiking on a Sunday morning.

Nevertheless, from an informed source (Mike Hyland-Int. 8) comes the somewhat incomplete results and happenings of the regatta.

The informed source told me that at least 2,800 rowers left the B.U. bridge yesterday, closely resembling a re-enactment of the Normandy Invasion.

At 10 second intervals the boats in competition left at the rate of 100 an hour. In what is the worlds largest and longest rowing event, the Head of the Charles was quite an experience for the UMass crew team.

"Our lightweight four was excellent, informant Hyland said. "They passed five boats in its event, which is good considering there are 40 boats each event."

So they made up a good 50 seconds on a majority of the boats. In a race against time, passing five boats and making up roughly 50 seconds on much of the field is outstanding.

The Intermediate four placed 13th, intthe field of the best 40 in the country. The Elite four placed a respectable 14th. There was no word on the elite eight, or for that matter the women's boat.

The place to be yesterday for the "fender-benders" was reportedly just upstream of the host Cambridge Boat club, where the finishing sprits involve a negotiation of a sharp bend in the Charles, followed by a glide under the bridge. There is not enough real-estate to allow the passing of the slower boats.

Last year about 50,000 persons attended the Head of the Charles Regatta, with everything from Elite lights to Veteran fours. The UMass crew said that the fans cheered wildly, not really sure who they were cheering for. The Head is a beautiful scene, that of the river filled with boats, the bridges and banks inundated with people. Based on the performances of the lightweight four (finishing high up on the list), the intermediate eight ("a good job" — Mike), the 13th and 14th place finishes of the Intermediate four and the Elite four the UMass crew team had their day in the sun, as they say.

Unfortunately, this reporter was somewhere between Worcester and Cape Cod, in the process of acquiring a bluish-white thumb.

Confident stickers post 4-0 shutout over Worcester St.

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

"We're not going to lose another game."

Those were coach Judith Davidson's first words after the UMass field hockey team posted a shutout victory and broke its "second-half jinx" as it defeated Worcester State, 4-0 here on Friday afternoon.

It was a game which not only saw the Minutewomen break out of their slump (3 losses in the last 4 games), but also saw a standout performance by left-inner Cheryl Meliones, who scored a hat trick in the decisive second half.

In the first half, the Minutewomen took a one-goal lead on Sue Kibling's tally from close in. The goal came after an offensive assault in front of the Worcester goal. The Lancer goalie made one save, but then Kibling put it past her to take the lead for UMass. That sparked the team to dominate the rest of the half; there was no real penetration by the Lancers to speak of.

It's not unusual for the Minutewomen to take a first half lead; lately it has been difficult for them to keep it. This time they came out charging in the second half, as Meliones scored the first of her three goals early in the half on a short shot in front of another crowded Lancer goal crease. With the score 2-0, UMass didn't let up. Time and again Meliones was in front of the Lancer goal, missing twice on close shots before scoring again to make it 3-0.

The fourth and final goal came on a shot by Meliones after another UMass offensive barrage. The Lancer goalie made one kick save into the crowd in front of the net, then Meliones shot it in, giving her the hat trick. (Only one hat was thrown onto the field, however, and that by an exuberant Coach Davidson).

What made the difference in Friday's game? "We just never gave up," said Coach Davidson. "We didn't do what Worcester did today, as they fell apart in the second half."

In addition to a great offensive game, the Minutewomen were sharp enough on defense to survive a Lancer attack near the end of the game. Two good saves by goalie Kathy Gipps thwarted the Lancers, and the UMass shutout was preserved.

"I think we got it all together up here," Davidson commented, tapping her forehead. "Karen Zimmerman, Lynsie Wickman, Sue Kibling, and Cheryl Meliones all had strong games and Kathy Gipps had a good game in goal."

An indication of the way it went was the shots on goal — UMass took 22 shots to Worcester's 8. The victory brought the team's record to 4 wins and 4 losses. With only one more away game remaining, the Minutewomen will take on Southern Connecticut State Tuesday afternoon in a home contest.

Spikers break losing streak

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

It was a good weekend for the UMass volleyball teams as both the varsity and junior varsity put together strong efforts to defeat teams from Northeastern, MIT and Northwestern.

The varsity spiked its way past Northeastern 15-9, 15-9, but was beaten by MIT 11-15, 4-15; while the JVs trounced MIT 15-11, 15-0, and overwhelmed Northwestern 10-5, 15-12, 15-6 in games played at Northeastern.

The varsity team was very aggressive against Northeastern, a team that had not yet won this year. The Minutewomen combined fine fundamental play with an inspired brand of cheerfulness that led them to victory.

In the first game, Diane Bunker Hannula scored the last five serves to break open a tight contest. The Minutewomen showed fine spiking skills, their offense revolving around the spikes of Heidi Dickson and Sue Sabia.

Against MIT, the spikers timing seemed to be off and they couldn't keep the momentum established in the Northeastern match. Shelley Soules, one of the top setters sprained her ankle in practice Friday, and had to come out when it bothered her so Pat Bradley had to function as the setter for much of this match.

"I was hoping Soules could play longer with her injury, but she was hobbling and I had to take her out, but I thought Bradley did an OK job. To be honest I think we were just tired out by the second match, we fell apart a little bit," said coach Dianne Thompson.

The junior varsity placed first in its tri-match by virtue of the two victories it recorded. Against MIT, Kathy Shinnick served ten points in the first game and Diane Mandragouras served seven in game two.

Mandragouras also excelled in spiking which prompted coach Thompson to comment, "Hopefully in the not too distant future Diane can step up to the varsity and lend us a helping hand."

Minutemen win a defensive delight - ask URI

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — It was a pair of clutch and dramatic passes from Minuteman quarterback Brian McNally which ultimately gave UMass its come-from-behind 14-7 victory over Rhode Island Saturday. But let there be no mistake about it — this game belonged to the Minuteman defense.

McNally's final two passes of the game go down on paper as the key plays of the win: the first a 36-yard completion to tight end Kevin Cummings on a fourth and 21 with 32 seconds remaining in the game to give UMass a first and goal from the URI four yard line; and the latter a quick toss to John Gladchuk on a down-and-out for a touchdown and UMass' third straight Yankee Conference win.

But again, it was that word — DEFENSE — and the 11 players which comprise it that gave the UMass offense, sputtering throughout the game, that final chance. It was a UMass defense which held the Rams to a mere three first downs in the second half, after the URI offense recorded 10 first downs and a 7-0 lead in the opening 30 minutes. It was a defense which held Rich Moser to 34 yards in the second half, after the bruising fullback offered his imitation of Yankee Chris Chambliss running around the bases, as Moser ran over and through UMass defenders on his way to 64 yards in the opening half. It was a defense which picked off two of URI QB Kirk Lamboy's aerials, one to stop a drive, and the other to set up the winning score. And it was a defense, spurred by some big tackles by middle linebacker Peter McCarty, which constantly thwarted the home team on third or fourth and short situations.

On Rhose Island's initial possession of the second half, the Rams' head coach Bob Griffin decided to gamble. Rather than punt on a fourth and one from its own 45, Rhode Island tried a quarterback draw, a play which worked effectively in the first half. Griffin's strategy backfired though, as Minuteman defensive tackle Dave Demis dropped Lamboy short of the marker. UMass took over and raced to its first score.

The final quarter was even more a story of the UMass defense. With a fourth and inches from the UMass 17-yard line, the unorthodox Griffin shunned the field goal attempt, and swept running back Jim Hodgens left, only to be greeted by McCarty for a three-yard loss.

After an exchange, the Rams again had a third down and less than a yard. This time they never even had the opportunity for a fourth and short, as McCarty flattened Bob Messier, a reserve quarterback, for a loss of five back to the Rhody 38.

Again, after a final exchange, with a third and five from its own 40, Lamboy's pass intended for Lorenzo Henderson was deflected by UMass cornerback Greg Sprout into the awaiting hands of teammate Ron Harris. UMass took over at its own 45 and McNally, Cummings, and Gladchuk put on their exhibition.

"A lot of people will forget what got us the touchdowns," McCarty said in the joyous UMass locker room following the win. "Not taking anything away from the offense, our defense did it in the second half."

A weary UMass coach Dick MacPherson commented on McCarty and the defense's play: "He's supposed to make those plays. That's his job being the middle linebacker in a 6-3 defense. Everybody else takes care of people so he can look good and he knows it. That's why he's there."

It was a team defense, indeed. The final stats had Steve Ciccolini with eight solo tackles and three assists, while McCarty had four of each. But with Jeffries, Harris, Greg Sprout, John Toner, Dennis Fenton and the rest of the defensive company shutting off an adequate URI attack, the offense came through when needed. And that's the sign of a real team.

UMass wins in final seconds

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — Quarterback Brian McNally hit flanker John Gladchuk with a four yard touchdown pass with 20 seconds left in the game to give the University of Massachusetts a 14-7 victory over a tough, gambling University of Rhode Island football team Saturday afternoon at Kingston, Rhode Island.

The win leaves the Minutemen 4-1 overall and 3-0 in the Yankee Conference, for sole possession of first place. Rhode Island dropped to 2-2, and 1-1 in the loop.

The touchdown pass to Gladchuk capped a second half revival where the Minutemen fought off poor field position, costly penalties (8 for 92 yards), blitzing Ram defense, and a 7-0 halftime deficit.

With the score tied at 7-7 late in the fourth period, UMass started the winning drive on its own 45 yard line after Ron Harris intercepted a Kirk Lamboy pass. The interception came after safety Greg Sprout tipped the ball with 3:52 left in the tilt.

UMass drove the ball up the field to the URI 29 yard line where the Rams stiffened up and started gambling again. With a second and 10 situation, McNally was sacked for an 11 yard loss back to the URI 40 by right linebacker Tom Marhefka. Marhefka got both Rhody sacks which both came on blitzes.

"We're not surprised; they've done it before," coach Dick MacPherson said after the game. "We did a good job on the blitz. It was a great job by the backs."

> "We came down to win, and I'll never feel bad when we win. It was a happy day for the University of Massachusetts and a say day for the University of Rhode Island." — UMass coach Dick MacPherson

The sacks, according to coach MacPherson, "were caused by a breakdown in the sprint-out pass."

With third and 21, McNally's pass attempt to converted tight end Kevin Cummings fell incomplete with 32 seconds left.

This is where the biggest play of the game took place and where the Ram's gamble proved to be a mistake.

"I sent in the play from the bench," said MacPherson. "It was designed to get us a first down, into field goal range and out of bounds to stop the clock."

Cummings ran a down and out buttonhook, caught McNally's pass at about the URI twenty yardline and carried it down to the four where he was pushed out of bounds.

"On that particular play, in the huddle Brian said he was going with me the whole way," Cummings said afterwards.

"There was a blitz on the play and the backs picked it up real well. Bill Coleman and Rich Jessamy gave me time to throw," said McNally.

The play showed the spiritedness of the offense in the second half as it was 6 for 12 on third down conversions and gained the bulk of its total yardage then.

"We came down to win, and I'll never feel bad when we win," said MacPherson. It was a happy day for the University of Massachusetts and a sad day for the University of Rhode Island."

The Rams scored their only touchdown of the game five seconds into the second frame when halfback Jim Hodgens scored on a five yard sweep to the left.

Hodgen's set up the score two plays before when he threw a pass off the halfback option to split end Tom Spann for 32 yards down to the UMass 13 yard line. This play reflected the way Rhody tested the Minutemen all day. In the first half, URI only punted once and faked it three times. Besides the halfback option, Rhode Island also tried a flea flicker which almost gave the Rams another TD.

The exuberance of victory is the subject above as UMass coach Dick MacPherson and Charles Balboni celebrate along with Pat Grant (R). (Staff photos by Jay Saret)

While the defense had trouble with the wide open Rams in the first half, the offense was penned in most of time with poor field position. In the half, the URI offense had the ball for about 17 minutes.

Coming out at half time, UMass seemed to wake up and exert itself more. The defense only allowed three first downs in the second half and reduced the Ram third down efficiency to one for six.

While the defense started to grow stingy, the offense started to get things going. Billy Coleman scored the first UMass touchdown with 7:02 remaining on a six yard run over leftside between Jeff Lauder and Gerry Greene. Dave Croasdale's conversion was good.

Coleman was the work horse on the ground for the Minutemen as he gained 85 yards in 18 attempts. He was also given the game ball.

While Coleman's running was consistent throughout, the clicking of Brian McNally keyed the comeback. McNally was 3 for 10 for 24 yards in the first half and at one point, threw six incomplete passes in a row.

McNally came back and had a solid second half as he went seven for 16 for 102 yards and hit his receivers when he had to.

QUICK HITS ... fullback Rich Moser was the game's leading rusher with 98 yards in 18 carries. Moser kept the URI offense going in the second half as he bulled through the line many times. "He's the best fullback we've faced all year," said MacPherson ... Cummings was switched from tight end to split end and was the game's leading receiver with four catches for 74 yards ... It was a fairly error-free game as there was only two interceptions, both off Lamboy, and neither team fumbled.

Perez single in ninth gives Reds 4-3 triumph over Yanks

CINCINNATI [UPI] — Hot-hitting Tony Perez lined a single through the bone-chilling air to score Ken Griffey with two out in the ninth inning Sunday night and the Cincinnati Reds put the New York Yankees into cold storage with a 4-3 victory to take a commanding two-game lead in the World Series.

The Series now switches to Yankee Stadium for the third game Tuesday night with the Reds needing just two more victories in the best-of-seven series to become the first National League team since the 1921-22 New York Giants to win back-to-back world championships.

The winning run for the Reds was unearned as a result of a two-base throwing error on Griffey's grounder by shortstop Fred Stanley with two outs. Perez' game-winning single, his fifth hit of the series, came after the Yankees had elected to play the percentages and walk Joe Morgan intentionally.

The right-handed hitting Perez, who went 0-for-15 last year against Boston in the series before winding up with three homers, promptly lined a single to left off loser Jim "Catfish" Hunter, who had weathered the chilling 41-degree temperatures until that point.

Hunter had been brilliant from the third inning on, retiring 12 batters in a row from the third until the eighth innings and might have been a winner had the Yankees been able to deliver in the clutch.

It appeared the Reds would give Hunter a quick exit. They whacked him hard in the first two innings and scored three quick runs in the second to take a 3-0 lead.

Designated hitter Dan Driessen, who warms his bat in the clubhouse sauna between plate appearances, led off with a double off the left-center field wall and scored when George Foster, the major league RBI leader, singled to center.

The Yankees appeared to be out of trouble when catcher Thurman Munson threw out Foster trying to steal second, but Johnny Bench doubled to left-center and, after Cesar Geronimo walked, Dave Concepcion singled Bench home.

Female faculty underpaid—MSP

Discrimination complaints filed

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) today filed a series of legal complaints against University administrators for unlawfully denying UMass female faculty members the opportunity to earn equal pay for equal work. Of 1200 faculty members here, 275 are women.

The complaints, documented by a graduate student's 1975 Ph.D. dissertation on faculty salary differentials, say that "females earned 10 per cent less than males with equal characteristics, when all relevant determinants of faculty salaries (education, experience, and productivity in teaching, scholarship and service) were taken into account." Data was collected in 1974.

The complaints and documents supportive were filed today with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Division of Federal Contract Compliance Programs, and the Massachusetts Committee Against Discrimination.

According to MSP president Larry S. Roberts, MSP hopes these agencies will soon make a formal response to their complaints, conduct investigations, and recommend ways to correct the pay inequities.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said he cannot make any official statement for the University on the matter until University lawyers study the case.

Bromery said if any of the agencies who received the MSP complaint should find there are large discrepancies between male and female faculty salaries, the University "would do all it could to narrow the gap."

Bromery also pointed to the fact that MSP is one of the organizations competing to represent faculty in collective bargaining.

"With elections for forming that unit coming soon, I find the timing of these complaints very interesting," said Bromery.

According to the MSP complaint, the University has violated Executive Order 11246, the 1963 Equal Pay Act as amended and Title IX of the 1972 Education Amendments.

The MSP document indicates that the average male faculty member earned $20,942 in the spring of 1974, and the average female faculty member earned $15,732, when part-time salaries were adjusted appropriately to yield averages on a full-time basis.

"Our legal and research consultants on this case tell us this is one of the grossest patterns of discrimination they have ever come across in a university," Roberts said.

NW Road voted back to committee

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

The University proposed Northwest Road was referred back to committee for further study at the first session of the Amherst Special Town Meeting last night.

The Board of Selectmen proposed the motion to refer the road to an ad hoc committee of nine Amherst residents, including three Planning Board members, that will report back to Spring Town Meeting 1977.

In other business, Town Meeting also voted in favor of state monies toward bike paths and routes, authorized the Belchertown Road site as a town sanitary landfill area and agreed to appropriate money for its purchase, and approved Hampshire County monies for the operation of the town Direct Information System.

Nancy Eddy, chairperson of the Board of Selectmen, said, "I shudder at the thought of this going through another planning committee," but added that there was really no other alternative.

Gerald J. Grady, University coordinator of community relations, presented the University's request for town endorsement of the Northwest Road but anticipated the Board of Selectmen's motion hoping the meeting would "allow the Board of Selectmen to make its motion."

He asked, however, that the town "not dilly dally forever."

The University administration has proposed the road as an alternative for University commuter traffic that now uses North Pleasant Street creating what UMass officials see as a safety hazard to students.

The Northwest Road would run from Rte. 116 to North Pleasant Street on the north side of campus and also includes extending Commonwealth Avenue to North Village.

The Board presented its substitute motion to refer the road to committee under Grady's article, Art. 4. The motion passed 143 to 45.

Richard H. Minear and Richard D. Harper, both of whom had articles requesting further study of the road, subsequently dismissed their articles and threw their support behind the Board's substitute motion.

Robert Klein, member of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce, also withdrew the article he sponsored that asked the town to

Ziff resigns as journalism head

By CHAS O'CONNOR
Collegian Staff

Howard M. Ziff, director of the Journalistic Studies Program — English Department, yesterday submitted his letter of resignation as director to David R. Clark, English Department chairperson, the Collegian has learned.

Clark has referred the letter to the English Department's journalistic studies committee, which, among its other duties, provides advice and consent on appointments and dismissals of the director of the journalistic studies.

According to Dario Politella, committee member, the committee has not accepted Ziff's resignation, citing a need for further investigation into the matter.

Ziff said last night that he was "weary of the administrative part of it (the job). Six years of paper pushing is enough," he said.

Ziff cited the tremendous growth of the program, saying that it had "grown from a corner drug store into a supermarket."

Ziff also said there was a specific area of disagreement involving the English department but declined to say what that was.

Clark said last night that "There will always be areas of disagreement when you have two areas working together, one a part of the other." He also said that he regretted Ziff's resignation.

None of the principals involved would say that Ziff's resignation was prompted by his efforts to make the Journalistic Studies program a separate department. Presently, the Journalistic Studies program is part of the English Department.

Ziff has been Chairman of the program since 1970. He plans to retain teaching responsibilities in the program.

Nuclear fallout damages milk

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

The results of a nuclear explosion in the earth's atmosphere do not quickly fade.

Ever since Oct. 5, the day the United States first made public that a cloud of radioactive fallout was raining down on sections of North America, Assoc. Prof. of Physics Kandula S.R. Sastry has been testing locally-produced milk to determine how much radioactive material has accumulated in it.

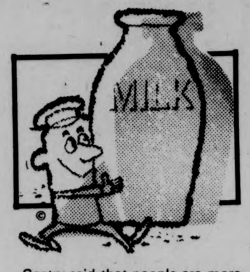
In a test Sunday night, Sastry found that milk from individual cows, which he has been testing since the Chinese surface blast, still contained "considerable levels" of a radioactive isotope of iodine, called iodine 131.

Sastry, in a letter to the editor printed in Monday's Collegian, says, however, that there is no cause for alarm, since the major milk producers have apparently taken precautions against contamination of their cows by removing them from pastures that have been subject to the fallout.

In his tests of milk sold at local supermarkets and smaller grocery stores in Amherst, Sastry said that the milk was relatively free from contamination.

Sastry has urged those using raw milk from cows in the Amherst area, to reduce its consumption. He said there is no danger to adults who are drinking the contaminated milk, but that heavy milk drinkers, such as very young children or those under 16, may take in what could be considered dangerously high levels of iodine 131. The material accumulates in the thyroid gland.

Although there are no direct effects from consuming high levels of iodine 131, high levels of any radiation may cause damage to cells, and this may possibly lead to cancer.



Sastry said that people are more exposed to radiation today and it is better to shelter young children from radioactivity wherever possible, since they will be exposed to it many other times throughout their lifetimes.

In his letter to the editor, Sastry said that the use of this locally-produced raw milk, at one litre per day for one week, "would give doses to children's thyroids up to about 50 millirads (a term used to describe a standard amount of radiation taken in by the body). The International Commission on Radiological Protection recommends a maximum permissible dose of 1.5 rads to thyroids of children under 16 years of age" per year.

He urged anyone who may be "in doubt" about the milk they are drinking to use powdered milk.

Sastry said because radioactive material has a "half-life", it slowly loses its radioactive properties. Iodine 131 has a "half-life" of eight days, which means it loses one-half of its radioactive properties during that time. After eight more days, it will again decay and lose one-half of its radioactive properties, until the amount falls within normal radiation levels.

Within 18 to 20 days, he said, the levels of radiation are reduced substantially.

Sastry, in an interview yesterday in his office in the Graduate Research Center said it takes him about three hours to complete a test of the milk once he has detected the radiation.

He said that on the morning of Oct. 5, he received a phone call from Dr. Jay Stryker, the UMass radiation officer, who urged him to test milk in the local supermarkets and grocery stores to determine radiation levels.

Although Sastry said he had never done tests on milk before, he agreed to try it, and on the first day of testing he had found significant levels of radiation in the locally-produced raw milk.

Sastry said that some of the milk has been given to him by the Dept. of Public Health, who is compiling information from similar tests on a regional basis, but a lot of it was purchased by him personally.

'This will be' Natalie Cole's homecoming

Natalie Cole, Capitol recording artist, winner of two Grammy awards and a graduate of UMass will perform in concert at the Fine Arts Center on October 26.

The long awaited return performance of Cole is part of the University and Black Homecoming week. Also appearing with Cole will be Reconstruction, a rhythm and blues group with the same roots as Cole, training and performing to the Amherst area audiences.

Cole is a graduate of UMass, '72. She first performed as a vocalist at The Pub in Amherst in 1971. After leaving Amherst, she pursued her musical career following the footsteps of her legendary father, the late great Nat 'King' Cole.

Her first album 'Inseperable' and the hit tune 'This Will Be' won her two Grammy Awards for Best New Female Vocalist-Rhythm and Blues and Best New Artist of The Year.

Last month she was presented with another award for her new album. 'Natalie.' Her second release rose to the top twenty in Billboard and has been on the charts 23 weeks.

Since her local debut Natalie has performed at the top nightclubs, Copa, Diplomat, Shepards and the famous Mr. Kelly's in Chicago. She has tourned nationally and internationally and recently won awards for her performances in Japan.

Her numerous television appearances include specials on the Mike Douglas and Jack Paar Shows.

Appearing with Cole for Homecoming is Reconstruction, an Amherst area group that is making its own musical waves. Formed three years ago Reconstruction has progressed from practicing in dormitory lounges into a headlining act of their own. Their appearances in western Massachusetts are usually standing room only. This summer the four man contemporary funk rock rhythm and blues group performed in Boston and Hartford with return engagements scheduled after their strong performances. After hearing the group perform at UMass last year Ella Fitzgerald noted that the group "performing as it does insures a true preservation of Black music in America."

Reconstruction will be backed by Sunlight and Shade, also from UMass.

Tickets are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets. For more information call 545-2511.

$300 voted for printmaking

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

Three hundred dollars was appropriated to a printmaking colloquium and further discussion on the position of Activities Coordinator was held at a short meeting of the Central Area Government last night.

Carolyn Ray, the instructor of the 1-credit printmaking colloquium, received the money to help pay for materials required for the course and her salary. There are 25 people enrolled in the colloq, Ray told the government, 10 more people than originally planned.

Ray said her colloq facilities might also serve area dorms or organizations in fund-raising through the printing of tee-shirts. Interested groups would have to provide their own materials.

The location of the colloquium workshop is in Butterfield dormitory.

There was discussion on whether the position of Activities Coordinator should be appointed or elected. A person holding an elected position must be an undergraduate living in Central Area, President Janice Perry informed the government. An appointed position makes it possible for non-undergraduates and more interested people to apply for Activities Coordinator, she said.

The question arose because of the two nominees, Wayne Burns and Scott Manchester. Burns is not an undergraduate.

As determined last night by a government vote, the Activities Coordinator position will be appointed. The position will be advertised for one week before a final decision next week.

Centers which were allocated funds by the government will be requested to submit reports on how that money has been used since the time of allocation on next Monday night, Perry said.

Also announced was an opening on the Student Judiciary Committee for one woman from the Central area. Applicants should have some knowledge of legal matters and be able to speak and write well.

Applications for the position can be submitted to any officer of the Central Government and must include name,. address, year of graduation, telephone number, identification number, list of background courses, and a summary of why they want the position.

This post is elected by the government and approved by the Undergraduate Student Senate.

Appointments were made for representatives to the Orchard Hill-Central Art Council and to the Undergraduate Student Senate. Jeffrey Kern is now on the Art Council, and Rosemary Conway and Perry were appointed co-senators by acclamation.

Normally Perry as president would occupy the position of senator-at-large, but as she is unable to attend most senate meetings, she will serve as an alternate to Conway.

Nkrumah informed the body that the New World Center is sponsoring a free movie entitled "Freedom Railway" on October 27th at 7:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium. He said the film would be especially useful to people engaged in African Studies.

Perry informed the government of a trip to the Seabrook Nuclear plant site being sponsored by the Council for Environmental Quality. Interested people should call 545-0618 for information, she said.

Absentee ballots may be notarized

Students who wish to vote by absentee ballot in the Presidential election can have their absentee ballots notarized starting this week in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Every weekday from this Wednesday until October 29, notary publics will be available at no charge from 12:30 to 5 p.m. In addition, two evening sessions will be held on Oct. 27, and Oct. 28, from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., also in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Students should bring identification, their unmarked ballot, and money for postage to mail the ballot to the appropriate town. Any staff or students interested in helping in this project should contact Marcia Wiechert in the Financial Aid Office, 5-0801.

Grads question recent fee hike, women's program

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

The rationale behind the $10 yearly increase in the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) fee and the exclusion of men in programs offered by the Graduate Women's Program was questioned by GSS members last night.

At last week's senate meeting members voted on the fee increase after Treasurer Daniel Fisher told the senate the limited time available to complete the budget dictated a high estimate.

The GSS members challenged the GSS officers in the two areas of concern because they said, their constituencies felt it needed clarification.

President Michael A. Federow last night told the group that in addition to the need for a quick tabulation, the budget is still subject to confirmation by the UMass Board of Trustees, who can raise or lower the fee.

Vice-President Timothy R. Austin, said about the estimation in the budget, "to aim low would have been suicide."

Federow said he had notified the University Budget Director, Warren W. Gulko, of the "impossibility" of the senate meeting the February 1977 deadline for the 1979 senate budget.

Secretary Barbara W. Stack, defending the exclusion of men in the women's groups, said, "the women who attend the groups do so, in many instances, because there will be only women attending."

Senator George Sommers questioned the officers regarding the affirmative action policies of the senate, and said, "if we want an integrated system it (male exclusion in women's programs) is falling into the same trap."

In other matters, the senate heard a presentation by senator Robert C. Biagi on the area Day Care Systems and was thanked by the Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU) for financial support.

Biagi said the financial problems of the child care programs were "drastic", and without the support of the graduate senate and student-parents who rely on the service, the future of child care is threatened.

Federow read a letter from the chairperson of the GSEU Michael Forester, who thanked the senate for the financial support given last week.

The senate allocated $1,000 to the GSEU to help finance debts reportedly totaling $10,000 in their bid to represent graduate student employees.

Kennedy foe addresses 25

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

Michael S. Robertson, the Massachusetts Republican candidate for the United States Senate, told a group of 25 supporters last night that "This is the most important election in Massachusetts for over 20 years."

Speaking in the Student Union Ballroom before the sparse gathering, Robertson took time to make a brief statement mildly attacking his opponent, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, and espousing his views on the issues in an informal session.

Robertson, a 40 year old businessman from Berkley, is largely a political unknown whose only legislative experience is two years as a selectman in that town. He is the owner of Robertson Manufacturing, Inc., which is the largest privately owned drapery manufacturer in the world.

His political philosophy is doctrinal republican and closely aligned with his background in the business field. He echoes sentiments of standard bearers like Ronald Reagan that the federal bureaucracy has grown too big and is unresponsive to the people.

"Two years ago I saw this kind of threat happening," he said, "and I was not sure what I was seeing was correct. I began to speak at colleges around Taunton, and to the National Association of Businessmen. I spoke of the advantages of our system."

"They agreed that something was wrong. Everybody had solutions, but nobody wanted to get involved," he added, explaining why he got into the uphill battle against Kennedy. "It came down to a personal decision. If all of these things were happening, we can't sit by and let it happen."

Robertson, dressed in a pin striped suit and wing tip shoes — strangely reminiscent of Kennedy — is a heavy underdog in the Nov. 2 election. Ironically, he attended Milton Academy and Harvard University, as did Kennedy.

He expressed great faith in the American system saying, "we stand at the brink of losing all that. We will celebrate our 200th anniversary with apathy at the polls, leaders who do not lead, and people who do not care."

Robertson shied away from attacking Kennedy in strong terms, calling him "my opponent" rather than by name. He did criticize Kennedy for his stand on national health care and a federalized welfare system. He said that the national health care system that is proposed by Kennedy "will not provide uniform health care quality, because we are dealing with people."

He said that he favors returning welfare responsibility to local communities if any kind of shift is to be made.

Robertson said that the small turnout did not bother him, and he said that the fact that he has been largely neglected by the Massachusetts Republican Party organization did not bother him either.

"I don't think that my message is a difficult one," he said. "And I think it is getting across. Unfortunately, my opponent has chosen not to debate the issues in this campaign. He feels he does not have to speak about the issues. He feels that he is entitled to be a United States Senator for as long as he wants.

I am doing something that I believe in with all my heart and soul. For those who support me, terrific. Those who don't, God bless 'em."

Referendum No. 2: Graduated income tax

This is the second of a nine-part series giving the pros and cons of each of the nine referendum items which will be on the ballot Nov. 2.

Referendum No. 2 is the Graduate Income Tax Rates amendment. The actual question on the ballot will read, "Do you approve of the amendment to the Constitution summarized below, which was approved by the General Court in joint sessions of the House of Representatives and Senate on August 15, 1973, by a vote of 199-66, and on May 7, 1975, by a vote of 228-41?".

The summary of the referendum is, "The proposed amendment would authorize the Legislature to substitute for the present system of flat or uniform personal income tax rates a system of rates graduated according to the total amount of income received. The legislature would also be authorized to provide for reasonable exemptions deductions, credits, and abatements and could base Massachusetts income tax provisions on provisions of Federal income tax law.

A YES vote is a vote to change the state Constitution to permit establishment of graduate tax rates on individual income as an alternative to the present flat or uniform rates.

A NO vote is to maintain the present requirement of flat or uniform income tax rates.

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

The battle for a Massachusetts graduated income tax, to replace the present flat-rate system, has turned into an information struggle with each side of the contest insisting that the average taxpayer would benefit under the system each supports.

Voters have been given the choice of voting for an amendment which supporters say would lower taxes for 85 per cent of the taxpaying public. Or they have the choice to vote against the amendment, the implementation of which opponents say would raise taxes $1,000 per taxpayer over the next decade, besides driving business out of the state.

Compounding the problem of choice is the status of the bill which would specify the tax components. The bill has been before the House Ways and Means COMMITTEE SINCE May 27, and is not expected to be voted on and released until after the vote on the referendum.

Thus, when voters go to the polls, the vote they cast will solely sanction the right of the legislature to amend the state constitution and allow for a graduated income tax system. Their vote will not be for any specific bill.

Supporters of the graduated income tax system foresee no difficulties with the legislature slipping voters a fast one. Instead, they base their arguments on the version of the bill in the House Committee, and claim a majority of Massachusetts taxpayers would pay less income tax under the graduate system.

Opponents, however, predict a "punative" income tax structure whether the current version goes into effect or the legislature uses its freedom to increase the rates under the graduated system.

A drawback of the proposal is the intangency of the bill. Without the completed bill, both pro- and anti-GradTax forces argue without specifics to satisfactorily resolve the question of the success or failure of the graduated income tax system in lowering taxes for most state residents. Both sides, however, have developed lengthy positions in which they refute their opponents' projections.

Supporters of the graduated system say it would mean a tax break for those who make between $16,000 to $22,000 a year and under, based on the bill as it stands in the House Committee.

The exact figure became the cause of controversy in which Deputy Secretary for Administration and Finance Robert McClain quoted, $22,000 as the cutoff point below which taxes would fall. McClain misquoted his own report to the state cabinet which used the $16-22,000 range for an approximate cutoff figure.

His apparent overzealousness fueled opponents claims that the cutoff point is closer to $13,000 which would mean a tax increase for most taxpayers.

Don Feder, the executive secretary of the Citizens for Limited Taxation, said the Dukakis administration has "juggled the statistics used the wrong statistics; done everything possible to mislead the public" in its drive for a graduated system.

Feder termed the referendum a blank check that voters are handing the legislature to cash, in apparent reference to the referendum's asking voters to sanction a bill that is not yet completed.
sanction a bill that is not yet completed.

The graduated income tax system as it is now written differs from the flat-rate system in two major areas. The proposed graduated tax does away with differentiating between "earned" and "unearned" income, or that income from salary as opposed to income from dividends and capital gains. The present system taxes salaries and bank interest at 5.375 per cent and income from dividends at 10 per cent. In addition, the graduated system proposal would tax income at percentages ranging from three per cent for the bottom income level to around 12 per cent for the top level.

Supporters of the graduate system point to the inequity of taxing an executive's $50,000 salary at five per cent and a widow's investment income at 10 per cent, contradicting the past reasoning that the state should investment income at a higher percentage because only the wealthy could afford such investments.

Opponents of the graduated system say the taxing of different incomes at separate rates is graduation enough in the present flat-rate system.

Supporters disagree. They feel once the state tax is deducted from federal income tax, that the flat-rate system becomes regressive above incomes of $40,000 or more. Those taxpayers then pay a proportionaely smaller share of their total income compared with below-$40,000-a-year taxpayers.

Feder claims the proposed graduated schedule for Massachusetts, if established, would be the "most sharply graded" system in the country. The New York schedule is presently recognized as the system with the sharpest graduations, ranging from two per cent at $1,000 to 15 per cent for incomes of $25,000 a year and over.

Feder quoted New York State Commerce Commissioner John Dixon as saying the New York graduated system has hurt New York by driving business and executives out (of NY) in droves."

BSO packs them in at FAC

By JOHN VAN TOL
Collegian Staff

In the first of this year's Concert Series, the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) performed an all-Beethoven program before a full house at the Fine Arts Center last night. Included in the program were the Overture to the ballad "Prometheus", the Fifth "Emperor" Piano Concerto, and the Seventh Symphony.

While Fine Arts productions are not known for their punctual starting times, a lengthy opening delay could not be totally attributed to the audience. After a fifteen minute delay, it was announced that Seiji Ozawa, the BSO's principal conductor would not be able to appear due to a sudden illness. Joseph Silverstein, the BSO's concertmaster, was hurriedly recalled from Syracuse to fill in.

The program finally started 25 minutes late, with Silverstein fixing his tie while arriving at the podium.

The unexpected appearance of a skunk just before the start of the piano work served as a slight tension reliever, though all things considered, the orchestra succeeded in maintaining its professional air.

The soloist in the "Emperor" was Andre — Michael Schub. Mr. Schub's virtuosity must be admired. The piano part of the work is generally conceded to be among the most difficult in the repertoire; yet Mr. Schub seemed to handle the difficult runs effortlessly. It seemed, however, that pianist and orchestra were not always perfectly synchronized, this probably in great part due to the late substitution for Mr. Ozawa.

A more unfortunate flaw, however, was that the orchestra seemed to forget the meaning of "andante"; there seemed to be a decided hurry to get through the lovely slow 2nd movement. But the orchestra handsomely made up for any shortcomings with a spirited rendering of the Seventh, ending the final movement with decided flair.

Applause generally comes after pieces, not during them, a fact UMass audiences seem to be slow in learning. More importantly, Mr. Silverstein did an excellent job given the circumstances. Had Mr. Ozawa been conducting, no doubt the audience would have given the BSO three standing ovations; now, however, those standing seemed to want only to find the exits. Such rude leavetaking is nothing less than gauche.

The Fine Arts Council is certainly to be commended on their fine efforts of this season. With the likes of Leotyne Price, the BSO, and Julian Breem already so early in the season, we look forward to more excellent programming. Finally the Brass Ensemble now being in tune, they are a pleasure to hear when sounding intermission's end.

endorse construction of a road between North Pleasant Street and East Pleasant Street, and spoke in favor of the substitute motion.

The Amherst School Committee and Planning Board also supported the motion. Most felt the issue needed additional study to determine, as the motion stated, "whether or not the construction of a road in the area of North Amherst to the west of North Pleasant Street would significantly affect the goal of reducing traffic on North Pleasant Street through campus and to consider its effect upon traffic circulation within the University campus and within the town."

Town meeting members voted to appropriate monies for the purchase of the Belchertown Road sanitary landfill site. The site is opposite the existing landfill area for the town and was recommended by the town Finance Committee, the Board of Health, and the Solid Waste Task Force.

Residents living near and owning land near the site voiced their objections to the site, citing among their complaints, its closeness to the dense population area of Echo Hill, the proposed Echo Woods Development Area, and its possible effect of devaluing the land around it.

Board of Selectman member Robert Garvey said, "No matter where we put it, the people in the area are going to say, 'why us?'"

The new site is scheduled to last 25 to 30 years. The existing site is expected to last no longer than five more years.

Town Meeting passed the article 145 to 37.

The next two articles concerning the proposed Pulpit Hill sanitary landfill site and the financing of the new landfill site were dismissed by their sponsor, the Board of Selectmen.

The town passed an article asking the town to allocate money received from a state grant for the construction of a bike path between Hampshire and Amherst Colleges

St. Louis' 'arch to the West'

They left Springfield on May 26, and expect to reach Portland, Oregon in the summer of 1977. Old Town Canoe Company donated the use of a 17-foot ABS plastic canoe for the expedition.

Duke, a Collegian staff reporter, will be relating his adventures weekly in the Collegian as he canoes across the U.S.

Many cites have an identifying monument. New York has the Statue of Liberty, Pittsburgh has its spectacular fountain at the mouth of the Ohio, and St. Louis has the Gateway Arch.

Rising 630 feet above the waterfront, the gleaming steel structure symbolizes St. Louis' role as the Gateway to the West. We spotted the arch five miles downriver of it.

St. Louis is still a bustling port city. Barges choked the Mississippi. The river was low (due to drought), so many were waiting for a rise before they could be loaded and moved on.

My heart sang when I saw the Arch. It symbolized something intangible about the extent of my travels. I also knew that Sroka had a family friend there and planned a couple days of touring. That's why I couldn't understand why he pulled up and called it a day, with four hours of daylight and only two miles to the Arch. He typically wouldn't explain.

We made camp on a sand bar on the Illinois side. Although it's a large city, there's still a lot of wood right outside St. Louis. Except by river, we were camped a mile from anything.

The next morning, after a two hour coffee break aboard an Army Corpos of Engineers tow boat, we made it to the Arch. The Army bargemen had called the local NBC station and the cameras rolled as we docked, delighting tourists. A helicopter buzzed over us, providing the first aerial coverage of Transcontinental Canoe Lines.

We spent four hours strolling the waterfront. I took advantage of the time to visit the museum in the bottom of the Arch. Just as I came back to the river, I met our weekend host.

"Redd" Story, a silver haired man with a spring to his step and a twinkle in his eye strutted onto the dock. He had never met Stan, only his uncle. He mistook me for my partner. I corrected him as Sroka came up.

Redd assured us that we were his guests as long as we wanted. He regretted that "Lewis and Clark" couldn't stay in his apartment, due to other company. He told us that he was putting us up in a motel at his expense. He said he wouldn't listen to arguments, so we laughed and didn't give him any.

He took us to dinner that night and gave Stan the keys to his wife's car. We were flabergasted! It proved to be the best thing he could have done, because St. Louis is impossible to tour on foot. It's too spread out.

After a day of writing and gear straightening, we settled down to some hard touring. The Jefferson Memorial, consisting of the Arch, the old Courthouse and a church-museum came first. I took some time to wander downtown St. Louis. For a large city, it's amazingly clean.

I took the article of a Gateway guide and had lunch at Famous and Barr's salad bar. Famous and Barr is the western version of Jordan Marsh. Their restaurant and especially their salad bar are unbeatable. All you can eat, 22 ingredients, 10 dressings, rolls and butter. It may not sound like much to you, but after months of eating out of sandy cans ... it was heaven.

We saw as much of St. Louis as can be seen in a single day. We had to padd up the Budweiser Brewery, due to a lack of time. Stan got lost wandering around the moneyed section of town, landed on an Interstate and before we knew it, we were making good time to Kansas City without an exit in site. Mon Capiatine, the naviguesser.

One thing disturbed me in St. Louis. We talked to Redd's staff (he's St. Louis area sponsor for Dale Carnegie Courses), for two hours about our adventures. They asked Sroka how he decided on me as a partner. He gave them a multi-point synopsis that made it sound like he had extensively screened, tested, and selected from a large number of serious "applicants". I knew that I was the only person who had the time, reasons and raw insanity to take on what nature could throw at me with someone I had never met.

When Redd put us into the Missouri River above St. Charles, all I could think about Stan was a quote I'd seen in the museum of the Gateway Arch.

"We had proceeded only a few days travel, when the American character was fully exhibited. All appeared to be determined to govern, but not to be governed ... " Lansford B. Hastings, overlander.

News in Brief

Mondale and Dole get the limelight

[UPI] — Democratic vice presidential nominee Walter Mondale criticized President Ford's energy policy yesterday and Republican counterpart Robert Dole attacked Jimmy Carter's crime proposals.

The two principals in the campaign, Carter and Ford, for the second day in a row let their subordinates do most of the talking.

Ford met with Republican senators, governors and campaign advisers at the White House, and Carter prepared to leave on a trip to solidify his southern base in Florida, and North Carolina.

Both Carter and Ford reacted cautiously to the simmering issue of Air Force Gen. George Brown's interview on foreign policy scheduled for publication next week. Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, is reported to have said U.S. military support of Israel is a "burden" and that the United States "does not have the stomach to stand up to the Soviet Union."

Carter said Brown's comments could be a liability to Ford, mostly because of what the general said two years ago about Jews controlling most of the newspapers and banks.

Ford spokesman Ron Nessen said Brown's interview, recorded six months ago by an Israeli journalist, was being studied and that there might be a statement from the White House on it later.

Supreme Court rules on 'hot' issues

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court yesterday agreed to decide whether a city can maintain separate public high schools for girls and boys, and rejected a transsexual's claim that her rights were violated when she was fired after undergoing a sex change operation.

The actions came in a series of brief orders before the high court recessed for two weeks.

The high school case involves a challenge brought by a girl who was denied admission to Philadelphia's Central High School, an all-male school renowned for its academic excellence.

Susan L. Vorcheimer graduated with honors from a junior high school and preferred attendance at Central rather than the all-girl school because she believed its science facilities were better.

Her application was turned down, and the U.S. Court of Appeals in Philadelphia, over one dissent, ruled that nothing in federal law barred creation of single-sex schools, and that some parents preferred them.

The transsexual issue reached the high court for the first time in a suit by Paula Grossman, formerly Paul Grossman, who was fired from an elementary school music teaching job in New Jersey after she was surgically given the sex characteristics of a woman.

She alleged she was fired because of her sex, since she still would have her job if she had remained a man. State and federal courts, plus the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, turned down her claims.

McCarthy wants 'in' on last debate

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — Independent candidate Eugene McCarthy said yesterday he would have a good chance to win the presidency if he were allowed to take part in the final debate Friday night.

McCarthy charged there is an organized effort to keep his campaign from receiving the media exposure it deserves. He said his candidacy should be able to gather 20 per cent of the vote in eight or 10 of the states where he is on the ballot.

After being greeted by a smattering of followers at Lambert Field, where he arrived to begin a campaign trip through the St. Louis area and Illinois, McCarthy said he had little hope of court victory in his fight to enter the debate.

The one-time Democratic senator from Minnesota called the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington "probably most partisan court in the country."

Kissinger makes major policy shift

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry Kissinger made a significant shift in policy when he recently implied the United States would support China in case of Soviet attack, U.S. officials said yesterday.

Although American support for a China under attack has always been an unstated possibility, the officials said Kissinger's little-noted comments at a Cambridge, Mass. news conference Friday were stronger and broader than ever before.

Americans dominate Nobel awards

STOCKHOLM, Sweden [AP] — A Harvard professor won the 1976 Nobel Prize in chemistry and two American nuclear physicists shared the physics prize yesterday to complete an unprecedented sweep for the United States of all four Nobel science awards.

The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences named William Nunn Lipscomb, 56, winner of the chemistry prize "for his studies of boranes, illuminating problems of chemical bonding."

The physics prize went jointly to Profs. Burton Richter of Stanford University and Samuel C.C. Ting of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology for pioneering work in the discovery of a heavy elementary particle now called the "J Particle."

The work of Ting and Richter also confirmed the existence of a new property, called "charm" in the particles of the atomic nucleus.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI) — Harvard chemistry professor, William Lipscomb, hold a glass of champagne in celebration of his winning the 1976 Nobel Prize in chemistry. Lipscomb worked with the carbon-like element borane since 1949.

Supreme Court foils plea by abortion opponents that 'consent' be required

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court yesterday rejected a plea by abortion opponents that a Massachusetts law go into immediate effect requiring minors to obtain the consent of both parents or a court order before she can receive an abortion.

The Bay State law was struck down by a three-judge federal court in April 1975, on grounds it was an unconstitutional infringement on a woman's right to decide whether to give birth.

Last July 1, the Supreme Court struck down mandatory parental consent provisions in a Missouri abortion law, but said state courts in Massachusetts should be given a chance to interpret that state's law in light of the Missouri decision.

In light of that ruling, the three-judge court ruled last July 21 the Massachusetts law could take immediate effect as long as state officials promised to interpret the consent provisions in the spirit of the Supreme Court's ruling in the Missouri case.

William Baird, who challenged the state law originally, asked Justice William J. Brennan to block the latest lower court ruling and forbid use of the consent provisions until they have been fully interpreted by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts.

Baird claimed state courts had no rules or procedures in effect for determining whether to authorize abortions against a parent's will.

In addition, he said requiring pregnant minors to ask their parents' counsent would upset the "status quo" and possible make some forego abortions who might seek them otherwise.

Brennan issued an order barring use of the consent provisions in the law and antiabortionists asked the entire Supreme Court to overrule the decision, citing promises by state officials that the law would be enforced in a constitutional fashion.

Kosygin greets public after reported stroke

MOSCOW [UPI] — Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin, who reportedly has suffered a stroke, appeared in public yesterday for the first time in three months. Despite rumors he may be near retirement, the No. 2 man in the Kremlin leadership looked healthy.

Kosygin, 72, joined party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev, President Nikolai V. Podgorny and other Soviet officials in a 20-minute airport ceremony welcoming a visiting delegation from Mongolia.

Wearing an overcoat and an Astrakhan fur hat against subfreezing cold, Kosygin strode briskly across the airport tarmac and laughed warmly with fellow members of the ruling Politburo. He chatted animatedly during the ceremonies, broadcast live on Russian television, and removed his glove to salute during the Soviet and Mongolian anthems.

His surprise, almost casual reappearance appeared to dash speculation he had been incapacitated by a serious stroke since he was last seen July 22.

Kosygin, who is considered second in the Kremlin hierarchy after Brezhnev, has been ill, Soviet officials have confirmed, but they have not disclosed the severity of his ailment.

The Tass news agency said Kosygin also took part in the opening session of talks with the Mongolian delegation in the Kremlin, along with Brezhnev and Podgorny.

Speculation about Kosygin's health began in August when a London newspaper reported he had suffered a stroke while swimming in the Moscow River. The story said Kosygin was saved from drowning by a bodyguard who used mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

Rumors about Kosygin's possible retirement began circulating when Nikolai A. Tikhonov, 71, a deputy premier and associate of Brezhnev, was promoted to be the country's second first deputy premier.

Fighting continues on eve of Beirut 'peace'

BEIRUT, London [UPI] — Christians and Moslems battled with rockets in Beirut and fought for control of an army barracks in the south yesterday on the eve of what many observers expected would be a peace settlement at an Arab summit.

But no significant clashes were reported between Syrian and Palestinian forces observing a de facto truce while the peace talks were underway at the six-party conference in the Saudi Arabian capital of Riyadh.

Christian rightists and Moslem leftists pounded each other's residential quarters across the heart of the Lebanese capital, already 90 per cent destroyed, with rocket and mortar barrages that claimed scores of new civilian casualties.

One mortar exploded in a crowd waiting outside a bakery for rationed bread, killing and wounding at least 25 persons. A doctor at the American University Hospital said casualties "are coming in too fast to count."

Arab League officials announced they had mediated an agreement between the two sides to stop the shelling but it continued sporadically into the afternoon.

Christian militia also attacked the Moslem town of Marjayoun near the Israeli border, and leftist sources said they had Israeli help.

A rightist radio said the Christians captured the town's leftist-held army barracks, but witnesses disputed this and a leftist broadcast quoted a spokesman for the defenders as saying hand-to-hand fighting was still going on.

Underworld 'boss' buried; neighbors recall he kept area free of crime

NEW YORK [UPI] — Carlo Gambino — recognized in the underworld as the "boss of bosses" of organized crime but in his Brooklyn neighborhood as the quiet "godfather" who kept muggers off the streets — was buried yesterday in a funeral that lacked old-time gangland style.

Only one flower car accompanied long black hearse that carried the 74-year-old reputed Mafia leader to his final resting place. The 30 limousines trailing behind, while impressive, did not compare to the 150 that escorted such prior underworld celebrities as Albert Anastasia years ago.

About 150 relatives and close friends, including what police said were Gambino's top Mafia lieutenants, attended a funeral mass at Our Lady of Grace Church, Gambino's local parish in the Brooklyn neighborhood where he maintained one of several residences.

Gambino said by some to be the model for the book and movie, "The Godfather," died Friday at his Massapequa, N.Y., home.

Hundreds of residents of the Brooklyn neighborhood crowded the streets out of respect or curiosity. But burly guards at the church door screened those permitted inside and barred reporters and other outsiders.

Local, state and federal crime fighters, looking for clues to possible successors in Gambino's crime family, took pictures of those entering. But the only uniformed officers visible were directing traffic at the request of the church.

Neighborhood residents described Gambino as a "respectable" and "quiet" member of the Brooklyn community.

"He was always very good to the people in the neighborhood. He gave a lot of money to the church," said a cab driver.

"Maybe he cheated the government a little. But a lot of bankers do, too. Right?"

He said Gambino kept the neighborhood clean and free of street crime.

"I didn't know him. I just heard he was good to the people in the neighborhood," a middle-aged woman said.

Black homecoming

A smokin' weekend

By VICKIE TAYLOR

Homecoming weekend has been traditionally a weekend of parties and concerts, where the Greeks take over the campus and beer is evidently everywhere. Because there are no Black fraternities and sororities UMass' Black community misses out on the festivities that are enjoyed by many Black colleges and universities all over the country.

This weekend is nothing else but the social event of the year. The night before the Homecoming football game there is a program where all the football players are introduced and applauded to start the steam which will hopefully result in a victorious game. Then the various fraternities and sororities display their talents in the greek show, which is nothing less than a comedy show.

The next day there is a parade where the campus beauties sit atop bad rides and wave to the hundreds of onlookers down the main street. There are marching bands and clowns, everything but cotton candy. And then there is the game itself. No team would have the nerve to loose the Homecoming game, even if it's the only game they do win. That night the entertainment continues with good music and snapping fingers.

This year the spirit of Homecoming is going to happen to UMass. Without the Greek show and the beauties atop Cadillacs and Eldorados, we will enjoy the entertainment. The night before the Homecoming Game we will enjoy the talents of our own students and faculty, followed by partying until you can't stand it no more.

Home Coming '76
University of Massachusetts

Saturday, October 23, is The Game where we shall watch our football players perform their talents on the field, we know and have seen them in the past. And that night we will party to a live band and disco sounds in the Student Union Ballroom. Don't let the word Ball fool you, because a ball is what you are going to have. To make it easier for those who think of a Ball as something straight out of Cinderella, think of it as the baddest party to ever happen on this campus. The dress is not formal, who can afford an outfit for one occasion anyway, wear what you have but look good. If you come with a friend the whole evening will be cheaper since tickets are $2.50 per person, $4.00 per couple, so start finding that special someone to spend the evening with. Food will be served throughout the evening. Tickets will be on sale that week in the Cultural Center, New Africa House. Tickets will be sold at the door for a slightly higher cost. And we shall honor our Black football stars.

And there is the entertainment of the talented Natalie Cole. This concert will be held in the Fine Arts Center, Tuesday, October 26, 1976. Anyone who misses this concert will regret it. A word to the wise is get your tickets early, its guaranteed to be a sell out!!!!!!! So who says that UMass can't have a smokin' Homecoming Weekend. Let's get out there and do it this time around.

Compassion, understanding and freedom

To the Editor:

I just finished reading Bill Sundstrom's article, Thinking About Thinking, and after thinking about it came away a little confused. While I share his sentiments regarding the pervasiveness of anti-intellectual pursuits, such as television, rock music, partying etc., I can't agree with his suggestion that this is all that people do. How many hours a day do we spend at jobs or at school trying to make our lives meaningful and in the process exercising some form of intellectual input?

That's not to say all's well and good with intellectualism. And the people "hiding in colleges and universities or being pursued by the CIA as threats to the national security," are not the only intellectuals in this country, Mr. Sundstrom! Take those wonderful mind-manipulators who dream up all the crap on tv for example. And let's not forget Henry Kissinger, the Renaissance man. who made fascism a prerequisite of governments wishing to have relations with us.

Yes it is time to "reevaluate the goals of modern society," but it seems to me compassion, understanding and freedom would be far better terms to operate from than intellectualism. I think it's pretty cynical to put voting for presidential candidates in the category of non-thinking activities, while in the same column you say, "Thinking for the sake of thinking [is] perhaps humanity's most noble and distinguishing trait." Sure we're becoming too materialistic but won't we really find the "truth" in what we do and value rather than in thinking about thinking?

Combatting sexism with pride

To the Editor:

Regarding Martha Newcomb's recent article, we understand the point she was trying to make; men and women are equal, and we should not continue arguing over which sex is superior. But we think that there are some faults in this article that should be pointed out.

Ms. Newcomb writes that, "Prejudice and societal norms are not things of substance and shouldn't be treated as such." We agree that, naturally, ideas are not things of substances, but the actions that are caused from sexist ideas can plainly be seen every day. The existence of pornography is proof enough that sexism is rampant. Pornography is the exploitation and degradation of women, and portrays women as actually enjoying rape and submission.

Ms. Newcomb states that if a man makes a sexist remark, you should rationally discuss with him the reason you resent the remark. We agree that this would be the ideal way to handle the problem. But when men are treating you like shit, it is difficult to respond in a polite and decent manner. It is also impossible at times to do so, such as at loud bars, parties, and on the street.

As stated earlier, we agree that arguments over which sex is superior are useless. However, before we can sweep all superiority-inferiority theories aside and come to an understanding of equality of the sexes, women must be taught pride in themselves. For centuries, women were told that they were the inferior sex. With all this brainwashing, it's no wonder that many women began to believe that they were inferior. This belief is still held, at least to some degree, by many men and women today.

Charlotte Allen's article pointed out to women [and men] the many outstanding qualities women possess. It gave women a multitude of reasons to be proud of their sex.

Men and women must realize woman's great worth or there will never be equality between them. We feel that Ms. Allen's article was helpful toward this realization. It was unfortunate that some men were antagonized by the article.

Feeble forecasts

To the Editor:

Over the past few weeks I have become increasingly irritated by your newspapers' feeble attempt to publish the weather forecasts. Such things as "Look out the window" and "Thank you sunny" are not very informative. I realize that you feel the need to liven up the forecasts, but when this interferes with what the weather forecast actually is, I get upset.

The rhymes you make are fine, just as long as they tell the weather. Perhaps you enjoy going into a four hour lab with the sun shining, only to emerge in a torrential down-pour with no raincoat. I know I am not alone when I request you to report the weather forecast as it really is.

The big mistake

By RANDY GINZIG

Jimmy Carter has characterized his campaign as "politics of compassion" and understanding. Carter says he wants to put humanism back into politics, and that he will never tell the American people a lie.

Carter may not tell us a lie but he's been telling us alot about himself recently. Apparently his compassion doesn't extend to the Republican Party and since the second debate he's been blasting Gerald Ford with a venom that would make a rattlesnake cower.

Any American following the campaign is aware of Ford's blunders in the second debate and the subsequent polls indicating that Carter's lead is widening again. What he or she might now know is how Carter has attacked Ford at every campaign stop he's made since the debate, to the point where his advisors warned him to be careful of "overkill."

Carter, in referring to Ford's blunder on eastern Europe, suggested that the President may have been "brainwashed" when he visited Poland. He attacked Ford's economic viewpoint as "Marxist". He has repeatedly questioned Ford's finances. Carter hasn't said a word about Ford's visits to a U.S. Steel Golf Course because Carter himself has admitted to similar type excursions to a Georgia-based Paper Company.

Ford has not been sitting idly by, however. The Republicans jumped on Carter's Playboy remarks and tapped them until the polls were indicating large Ford gains. Robert Dole is well known for his sharp attacks on his opponents. And syndicated columnist Jack Anderson recently disclosed that covert campaign activities are not extinct. According to Anderson, the Republicans have been digging through Carter's past in an effort to uncover any Carter sex scandals, and offered Anderson the opportunity to print them.

It was also revealed recently that Carter aides had prepared a secret campaign manual including instructions for faking indentities in phony phone calls, stalling traffic to create a crowd, and instructions on withholding information from local party workers and media.

This type of mudslinging doesn't give us a clue as to which man is more qualified to lead the country. The unfortunate part about this campaign, which is one of the closest in years, is that it will probably be decided by mistakes.

Neither candidate has been scoring many points for positive proposals or plans for the future. Carter's original $15 billion cut in defense spending has been trimmed to $5 billion. Ford's Arab boycott memo came up way short of what he promised. Both speak indecisively on energy, third world problems, rising communism in Western Europe. In short, what is getting attention from the press and what will ultimately decide the election are mistakes, mudslinging, and personalities.

It is known that controversy make news. The media must jump on audience-grabbing characteristics of the campaign. Yet the media's reporting of the "news" often tends to be self-fulfilling. When Carter issues a statement in Playboy, the press reports it and all the negative reactions as well. The average reader reads this and begins to think that something is wrong, indeed there was no need for Carter to make a statement like he did. Ford's comments on Eastern Europe were recorded with condemning comments, including one made by running mate Robert Dole, and Ford goes down in the polls. The cycle is never ending.

The candidates are not unaware of this and take great pains in devising and portraying an image to the press. The press must report what it sees and hears, and they hear Carter spea about bringing ethics and compassion into government. They hear Republicans speak about experience and firm leadership. So this is what Americans see in print every day, and this is the image that formulates in American's minds.

The current waves of events run counter to the accepted image. Carter is not as compassionate as he says he is. He is a politician ready to pounce on his opponent's mistakes, so much so that his advisor's must warn him against his attacks backfiring.

Gerald Ford is not as firm and decisive as he'd have us believe. The past week's events demonstrate this.

There are men behind the image, men with real desires and human needs just like ours. It is important for Americans to remember that the President is not God and will make mistakes. Let's just hope that our next President is not put into office because he made fewer mistakes than his opponent. That would be a mistake for 200 million others.

Carter: Born to lose

To the distress of the Democratic Party, candidate Jimmy Carter's popularity has taken a chasmatic plunge in recent weeks. Before the second debate, Time rated the candidates to be in a dead heat. Now, Mr. Carter is an intelligent man, too intelligent to allow such a lead to wither as a result of gross stupidity. We can only see one rational explanation to explain the loss: Jimmy Carter must deliberately be trying to lose the election. But why not? After all, the world's greatest authority, Senator George McGovern, is a member of his own party. The following is a transcript of an imaginary meeting between the two men, occuring some time after Mr. Carter's nomination.

"Well howdy, George, ah'm shore glad y'could make tahm in yo' bizzy schedule f'me."

"Jamesy, my boy, I always have time for my party's nominee," muttered the obviously bored solon who thought, "What does this puppy want?"

Sensing the senator's impatience, Mr. Carter said, "George, ah'll git to th' point. Ah need help, 'cause it looks lahk ah'm gonna win the election onless ah kin figger some way to blow it."

"Well, have you ever thought about public exposure?"

"ExPOsure? A man kin git arrested f' thayat!"

"No, NO, you idiot! I mean your campaign. Why don't you just stay home and not campaign," as the senator thought to himself, "and not bother me?"

"Been tryin' thet, Gawge, and it ain't no good. All ah done since the convention is stay home an' play stupid sofballgames an' Walter Cronkite give me two minutes ev'ry naht jist th' same. Ah got media exPOsure fum now on an' there ain't a d—"

"That'll be all, Jimbo; I'll have none of that unchristian language around here!" commanded the senator. He added bemusedly, "But you do have a problem. Tell me, why did you run for office in the first place?"

"Gawge, any fool kin jist set at home an' let sumbody else be president. But it takes a special genius t' git a nomination an' then blow an election an' ah wanted t' prove t' mahself thet ah'm th' smartest man this sahd o' George McGovern!"

We have a tautology. No politician is immune to flattery. George McGovern is a politician. Therefore, George McGovern is not immune to flattery. Sure enough, Senator McGovern brightened and exclaimed, "Jimmy, you do have some class after all! Now, listen to this: You'll do a Playbody interview like I once did, only you'll tell them how you lust after women."

THE GREAT DEBATE

"Far out!"

"And you'll compare LBJ to Richard Nixon..."

"Outasite! Texas is Reagan country anyway an' there's no way ah kin carry Texas after insultin' her favrit son!"

"And you'll meet the Catholic bishops and tell them you won't support a constitutional ban on abortion...."

"That's where it is!"

"You mean, 'where it's at'. You'll call the Vietnam War a racist war...."

"Did thet awready."

"You're a man after my own heart," chuckled the senator lovingly. "But to top it off, you'll give a speech before the American Legion and announce you're for unconditional amnesty!"

"Oh gawge, yore th' greatest! Ah feel lahk a million pennies!"

"Just one more thing, though; watch out for Gerry Ford. The man is not simultaneously an ex All-American football player, a graduate of the Yale Law School, and a public spastic for nothing."

And now for the news...

Ten yards back and punting . . . Dallas, last weekend. Ford drove through the streets in an open car. Smiling, he was. Ear to ear and waving his way down Commerce St. Polite enough not to say anything about other Presidents making cordial visits to that sleepy city and not making the trip home. He tossed the coins at the beginning of the Texas-OU game and cut the ribbon to open the State Fair.

There were no questions from the press about his opinions on assassination in this country. And Ford is just the one to ask. Hell, he was one of the last Important People to see Jack Ruby alive in his cell, denying him the chance to go to Washington to tell all that he knew. And now we'll never know.

It is strange that this issue of political assassination, among others, is being avoided this election year. Last year it was big news, but the CBS specials seemed to quiet all the refried noise on the subject — media wise. The questions Ford was never asked may be just as important as the mistakes on foreign policy he made in debate. So much for trust!

A pregnant pause . . . There is a bill coming before the State legislature that deserves some attention, though it probably won't get any. In this state it still is not legal to practice midwifery through full term. This law, if passed, will finally allow a midwife to handle any normal pregnancy through its completion.

The advantages to this are many. First, it will reduce the cost of pregnancy considerably. This will allow the poor to get proper medical attention and hopefully reduce the number of 'defective' babies that have to become wards of the state, to cover the cost of their medical bills. Secondly, it will allow doctors to handle the more difficult births with more time and personal involvement, again reducing the chances of birth defects and maternal deaths. Thirdly, a midwife has more time to spend with the mother, explaining the small details a doctor with a busy schedule cannot be bothered with. This makes the mother a little more in tune with her pregnancy, feeling more a part of it than merely in the efficient machine's way. All fourteen of the countries that have a lower infant mortality rate than the U.S. have a legal program for midwives.

The people who are fighting this are the doctors whose business has been babies. Understandably, they do not want to lose the business. But if you weigh both sides of this issue, you find that mostly poor people will take advantage of this program, the people with money will still head for the OB man. The doctors can spend more time with the cases that need the most of their attention. I don't really see the change in law affecting them adversely. Most likely, they will work just as hard, get just as much money, but have the knowledge that more people are getting better care.

This doesn't seem like anything to fight. In fact, it seems like something to support. So write to your Congressperson, find out more of the facts and express your concern on something that ultimately effects us all, as a taxpayer, as a potential parent, as a person who cares about people.

Treasury frame-up exposed

By PETER FAY

Witnesses and victims of the recent governmental acts of coercion and subversion inside the labor movement will speak on Thursday, Oct. 28, at 7 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium to expose the Treasury Department's role in the frame-up of two local unionists and to unveil federal court efforts to thwart the growing working-class movement in the United States.

The serious threat posed to the rights and liberties of residents of Western Mass. by undercover government provocateurs is all too apparent in view of the following recent frame-up. Clearly, anyone organizing for basic human rights is now subject to possible government harassment and repression.

Alex Markley, the Western Mass. organizer for UE (United Electrical workers) and a loyal unionist, led the successful Worthington Compressor strike in Holyoke last fall. During this time he was repeatedly approached by T.G. O'Reilly, a top agent of the Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) division of the U.S. Treasury, who was then undercover, posing as a "friend of labor". This agent offered time and again to "help" by blowing up some trucks that were crossing the picket line.

Although there were no explosions or violence during the strike, Markley and Tony Suares, an IBEW unionist, were secretly arrested and indicted seven months later by the ATF for alledged "conspiracy to use explosives" during the strike. They were held 12 hours incommunicado by the same agent, T.G. O'Reilly, and threatened with fines and imprisonment if they didn't provide names and information on other unions. In short, Markley and Suares were offered impunity and payoffs if they become spies for the ATF inside the labor movement.

Both unionists staunchly refused and, contrary to ATF's exhortations, told their unions and made the frame-up public. As a result, they now face a possible 62 years in prison and $25,000 in fines.

In view of these facts, several questions beg to be answered: Why was the government's top expert in post-blast investigations on a peaceful picket line in Holyoke inciting the use of explosives? Why did the ATF attempt to keep the indictment and arrest secret? And how many other similar frame-up and spying activities are the ATF involved in in this valley?

The forum on the 28th will address these issues. In addition to a speaker from UE, there will be a speaker from the pressman's union (Local 6) from the Washington Post strike. Fifteen of their members face 268 years in prison as a result of federal grand jury manipulations in an attempt to bust the union and its 13-month-old strike.

Finally, Tim Butz and Sidney Peck from COUNTERSPY and PEPTIC will speak on US intelligence agencies' labor activities and the UE International Band will perform during the Thursday night forum.

U.S. Rep. Conte has now joined the many Valley UE members and other labor councils and citizens groups in calling for a full congressional investigation into undercover ATF activities.

Other Markley-Suares defense activities are: Oct. 21, 7 p.m. in Herter Aud., the film Sacco & Vanzetti and a UE speaker; Oct. 30, 1 p.m. Court Sq., Springfield, a rally in front of the ATF-Treasury building.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Freshmen honor society meeting

A meeting of the UMass chapter of Alpha Lambda Delta, a national scholastic honor society for freshmen will be held tonight at 7:00 in the Campus Center.

Anyone who would be able to reserve a speaker for the initiation ceremonies is urged to contact the possible speaker and Andrea Hayes (Tel. 253-2059). The plans for the initiation and the selection of a speaker will be finalized at the next meeting.

CHINS seminar to be held tomorrow

Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) will moderate a seminar presentation entitled "The CHINS Law and the Courts" as part of the "Host of Social Services Conference — 1976", sponsored by the Massachusetts Department of Public Welfare.

The conference is being held at the Beveridge Center, Springfield College tomorrow at 3 p.m.

The discussion, according to Collins, will provide an examination of the effects and problems concerning the implementation of the CHINS (Children In Need of Services) Law, and will hopefully result in suggestions for improvement where problems may exist.

Motor development to be discussed

"Motor Development In Young Children" will be the topic for discussion tomorrow at Room 17 in Skinner Hall, beginning at 7:45 p.m.

Dr. Maida Riggs, of the Physical Education Department here at UMass, will present slides and a discussion of the motor development of young children, including addressing the problems of environment in relationship to motor development and how it aids and often inhibits development.

Riggs has served as a resource for the Infant-Toddler Play Group, one of the co-sponsors of this Parent Information Series this semester, along with the cooperation and support of Health Education. Her creativity and excitement regarding the potentials of young children, and the role of parents and educators in encouraging these potentials, is shared through her excellent slides and her presentation. Riggs will also answer questions from those participating.

These Parent Programs are offered to all University families, and to people who are currently working with young children, as well as potential educators. The next program, Contraception, will be held Nov. 3, and will address the issue of contraception through the eyes of those parents interested in spacing of future children, and in the issues of sterility.

Classics professor to lecture tonight

George E. Dimock, Jr., professor of classics at Smith College, will give this year's Katharine Asher Engel Lecture at the college tonight at 8:30 in Wright Hall.

Dimock's topic will be "'God, or not god, or Between the Two?' Euripides' 'Helen'."

The Engel lectureship was established at Smith in 1958 by the National Council of Jewish Women (NCJW) to honor the memory of Engel who graduated from Smith in 1920 and served as NCJW president from 1949 to 1955.

The lectureship is granted annually to a Smith faculty member in the humanities or social sciences who has made an outstanding contribution in his or her field.

Dimock, who received the B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees from Yale University, was on the faculty at Yale from 1948 until he joined the Smith faculty in 1955.

He has written articles for the Hudson Review, the Yale Review, the American Journal of Philology, and Arion. He wrote the articles on Odysseus, Prometheus, Pelops, Hippolytus, Hesperides, and Erechtheus for the Encyclopedia Britannica.

A translation of Euripedes' "Iphigeneia in Aulis" by Dimock and the poet, W. S. Merwin, will be published by the Oxford University Press next spring.

The Engel lecture is open free to the public.

UMass documentary shown this week

The documentary television program, "Seabrook August 1st - 22nd," will be shown several times this week at UMass, Hampshire College and on Amherst cable television channel 8.

The half-hour program documents the action of several New England residents who occupied the nuclear power plant construction site in Seabrook, New Hampshire, as a non-violent action of open opposition to nuclear power. Covering the occupation of Aug. 1, the governor's ground breaking ceremonies of Aug. 5 and the arrest of 179 occupiers on Aug. 22, the documentary provides a unique perspective of the actions surrounding the Seabrook nuke issue.

The documentary, which was produced in part by the UMass Student Video Project, received funding last week from the Commuter Collective for national distribution. The program will be "aired" today and tomorrow on the UMass Campus Center concourse, tomorrow and Friday at Hampshire College, and Thursday night at 9:00 on Amherst cable access channel 8.

For more information, contact David Skillicorn, Student Video Project at 545-1336.

Change in drinking age

BOSTON [AP] — A bill raising the state's drinking age from 18 to 19 is likely to be pocket vetoed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, a spokesman said Monday.

Alan Raymond, a press aide to the governor, said Dukakis is "leaning toward a pocket veto" of the bill, but he might sign it if he were "convinced that it would have overriding benefits for public safety."

The spokesman said all other rights of majority-adulthood begin at 18.

The drinking bill was one of the last measures sent Dukakis before the legislature adjourned its 1976 session early Saturday morning.

Now that the legislature is out of session, the governor can pocket veto a bill by not signing it within 10 days of legislative enactment.

The drinking age in Massachusetts was lowered from 21 to 18 four years ago.

The bill raising the legal drinking age to 19 had little difficulty clearing the House and Senate this year after it was reported out of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, where it had been held most of the session.

Senate Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly, D-Oxford, was opposed to the measure, but his colleagues adopted an order requesting the bill be reported to the floor.

Keep Lamps Lit

By KIT WALKER

Today the moon is in Virgo, the sign of mental purity. Between 11 and 12 this morning she forms a harmonious sextile first to Uranus, then to Mars, both in Scorpio (death and rebirth). This should bring us an opportunity to act according to our intuition of the truth. Mars, an aggressive planet, was conjunct Uranus (a truthful planet) yesterday morning, and this conjunction may be changing our motives from selfish ones to more humanitarian ones, perhaps the hard way. Since both planets are in Scorpio, the sign of desire, we may have suddenly been made aware of some of our unconscious reasons for acting, maybe by a sudden turn of events that broke apart our secret plans — but we can be sure that if we follow our intuition's promptings, this conjunction will lead us instinctively to take the right action. Uranus symbolizes the Aquarian truth, and in Scorpio, Uranus is teaching us some maybe uncomfortable truths about ourselves; like how bound by our desires we are. So if we're not free from selfish ego patterns, we may find ourselves acting suddenly, compulsively, and perhaps with unpleasant upheaval as the result. So let's dig down deep and see if we aren't kidding ourselves about what we think we want, and what we really need.

Tonight between 7 and 8 the Virgo moon forms two aspects that may leave us bottled up in neurosis, unable to break through and relate. But it will be only to remind us of our own insides. It should also bring us to a new consciousness of our part in the universal brotherhood of human beings. This lunar transit will be setting off the semisquare of the Sun and Neptune, which completes itself early tomorrow morning. By the time we wake up tomorrow, we could have a clearer insight into True Love, if we can bring an unconditional quality to our love. This means recognizing that God is part of us all, and that we are all part of God — and we're fools to think that we're separate, self-sufficient entities. And those of us who persist in thinking that way are eventually going to be cut off from all help by their own doing.

We do need to recognize that some people play a more important part in our lives than others, and that they all have different but meaningful roles as related to us. But if we insist on playing ownership games and holding grudges, while failing to acknowledge the divine Plan that underlies all our relationships, we will be isolated by our own stubborn blindness. So if things aren't the way you'd like them to be, you have no one to blame but yourself.

Keep your lamp lit, and keep awake — because you never know when you'll be called.

Jazz programs to be shown this weekend

The Campus Center Program Council will present two jazz programs for Homecoming Weekend. First is multi-talented Rahsaan Roland Kirk and the Vibration Society Friday. Then, Gil-Scott Heron will perform with Brian Jackson and the Midnight Band, Monday.

Both will take place in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. General admission is $2.50 for each concert, with tickets on sale now in front of the Hatch.

Smith Hillel presents art film and lecture

The B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations of Smith-Amherst Colleges will sponsor a lecture today and continue its film series with a Yiddish classic tomorrow.

Today at 4 p.m. there will be a Jewish art mini-lecture entitled "Judaism Art and Beauty: The Jewish Response to the Second Commandment." The lecture will be held in the Bodman Lounge, Helen Hills Chapel, Smith College.

Tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Wright Hall at Smith, the movie "Tevye," a classic of the Yiddish film genre, will be shown. The film is also scheduled to be shown at Amherst College, today at 8 p.m.

"Tevye," made in 1939 and starring Maurice Schwartz, is a moving adaptation of the Sholem Aleichem stories about the now famous milkman. The film contains many memorable scenes of Eastern European life.

Both events are open free to the public.

'Rosencrantz' tickets now on sale at FAC

Tickets are now on sale for the forthcoming University Ensemble Theater production of "Rosencrantz & Guildenstern Are Dead", Tom Stoppard's award-winning play. It will be performed Nov. 4, 5, 6, 11, 12, 13, in the Rand Theater of the Fine Arts Center under Harry Mahnken's direction.

Students can purchase tickets for only $2.50, a saving of $1.00 over the regular box office price. Five-play subscriptions are still available at $9.00, a cost of only $1.80 per show.

'Christo Oceanfront' exhibition tomorrow

An exhibition entitled Christo: Oceanfront will be on view at the University Gallery, tomorrow through Nov. 21.

The show documents Christo's Oceanfront Project, which was included in "Monumenta", an exhibition of contemporary outdoor sculpture held in Newport, Rhode Island, in the summer of 1974. Christo covered the King's Beach Cove in Newport with 150,000 square feet of polypropylene fabric floating on the sea, attached to the shore by forty-two anchors. After eight days the piece was dismantled and the beach was returned to its natural state.

Included in the exhibition, which was assembled by the Princeton University Art Museum, are drawings, collages and photographs — supplemented by slides and videotapes — all documenting the entire process of the Oceanfront Project, from the preliminary engineering studies to the completed work.

Christo will speak about his work at 8 p.m. tomorrow in the Bezanson Recital Hall, room 248, in the Fine Arts Center.

Three films on Christo's work, including Wrapped Coast, Valley Curtain and Running Fence, will be shown at the University Gallery at 8 p.m. Tuesday Nov. 9 and Sally Yard, author of the Oceanfront catalogue and Amherst resident, will be available to answer questions.

The University Gallery, located in the Fine Arts Center, is open Tuesday, 11:30 a.m. - 8 p.m., Wednesday through Friday 11:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m., Saturday and Sunday 2 p.m. - 5 p.m.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, October 19 — Born today, you are one of those extremely adaptable individuals who can adjust with speed and alacrity to almost any situation or set of circumstances. When a change is in order, you do not allow your emotions to interfere with your adjustment to what is required of you; no matter how much you may have desired to act in one way, should you be required to act in another way, you will do so without tears, without fear and without the kind of frustration or anger that makes success impossible. You realize the importance of being able to separate how you feel from how you think; you know the value of being able to make decisions on the basis of reason, though your emotions may demand quite another standard be set into operation.

You possess a genuine knack for persuasion. You can guide others along such lines as they never would go unbidden by you, just as you can, by virtue of your calm manner, your cool intelligence, and your completely collected approach to any difficulty, come up with solutions others would not think of. On your own, you are capable of much more than you are in conjunction with another. Partnerships do not favor your success; rather, they are inclined to impede it, for they cause you, whether they should or not, to halve your effort and your interest while you increase your dependence on another.

Wednesday, October 20

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Take care that you don't drift aimlessly through a morning that, with a little bit of attention, could be extremely productive and profitable.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You may find that your personality clashes drastically with that of one you had hoped to get to know well. Back away gracefully.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Aggressive friends may make it difficult for you to begin a new project gracefully. Try to get things started on your own.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Though you may wish to apologize to another, you need not do so to such a degree that you belittle yourself.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Your tension in the early morning may take the form of initiating argument with family members. Be wise; be silent.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Take care that you don't back away from an unpleasant situation too quickly. There may be something in it of a gainful nature.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Don't allow your heart to rule your head today. On the other hand, don't be so logical that you fail to understand another's feelings.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take in your stride whatever the day brings. There will be time later in the week to rearrange your schedule.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Take care that you don't succumb to a hidden desire to live in the past. Look toward the future and work toward new goals.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — With home and family happiness your chief interest these days, you should not find it difficult to fill the hours. Be energetic.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Take even a little disagreement seriously, especially should it have to do with your immediate future. Strike while the iron's hot!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Though a minor ambition will be fulfilled today, you are not destined to be satisfied. Work toward the fulfillment of bigger dreams.

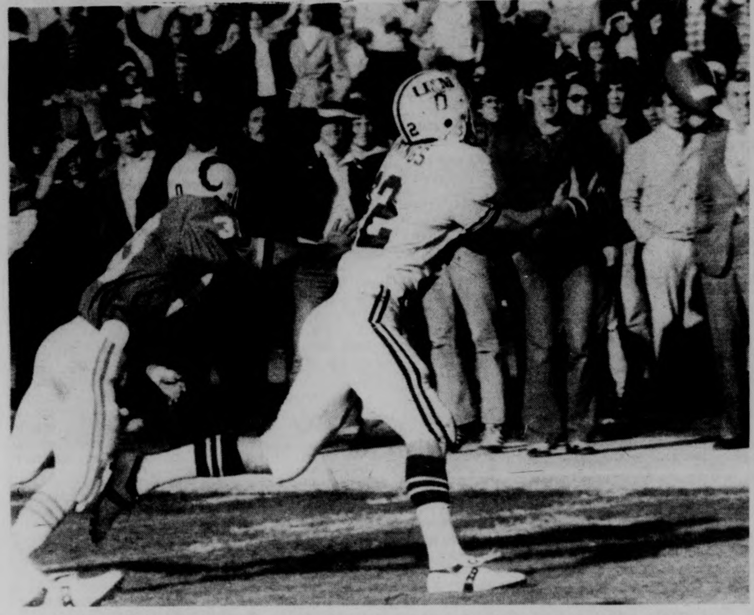
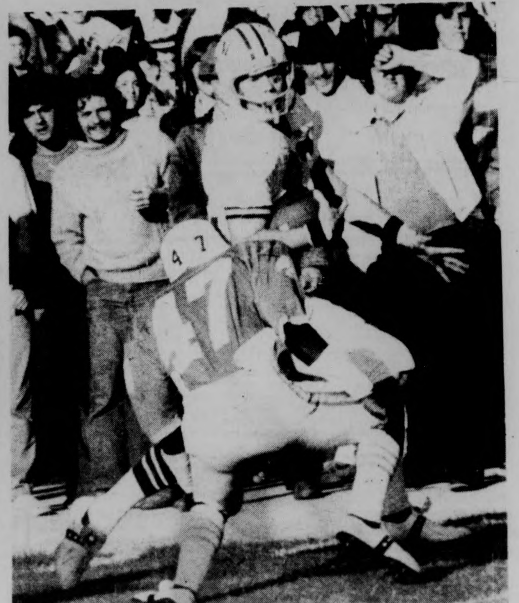
If it doesn't work once... ...go for it again





Faced with a third and 21 with time running short, UMass QB Brian McNally went to tight end Kevin Cummings (above) only to have the pass go incomplete. With the same situation on fourth down McNally again went to Cummings and found him for a 36-yard gain to the four yard line to give the Minutemen a 14-7 win over Rhode Island. Women's Tennis Minutewomen visit So. Conn.

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's tennis team will visit Southern Connecticut today in a match postponed from yesterday due to tournament-play usage of the Southern Conn. courts.

The women will be trying to up their record to 4-3, and if they do so will go over the 500 mark for the first time in two seasons.

The singles lineup will basically be the same as in the 7-0 victory over Keene State. Jennifer Ranz will play in the number one position. Dawn Minaai, the former number five player, has been playing well as the number two player and continues in that slot today. Dependable Carolyn Mooney and Kathy Sullivan will play in the third and fourth slots, respectfully. Martha Awiszus, undefeated so far this season, will play in the fifth singles position. Coach Ken Rubin is undecided as to who will play the sixth position.

As usual the number one doubles team will consist of Nancy O'Neil and Karen Holt, as the duo has yet to lose this season. The number two doubles will be a new combination of Leslie Howell and Caron Tsapatsaris; Rubin says they have looked very strong in practice. The third doubles team is Susanne Boissevan and Sue Store.

"Everybody is psyched for today's match, partly because we're playing arch rival Connecticut Thursday and we want to go into that match coming off a win," Rubin said, "We definitely won't be looking ahead of today's match."

Bowling teams fare well despite budget

Despite outside pressures of the re-allocated budget, the UMass men's and women's bowling teams did participate in the first Tri-State tournament this past Sunday. The tournament, held in New London, Ct., was hosted by the Coast Guard Academy in celebration of its Centennial.

The women's team placed first out of eight teams in the team event and took a second out of 24 teams in the doubles event. The team, consisting of veterans from last year, swept all match points in the doubles event, led by Karen James with a series of 561.

The men's team, all new members except for captain Paul Stutzman, took a strong third place finish of fourteen teams. The team match was highlighted by Mitch Foremen's high game of 234.

If both teams continue with the determination shown this past weekend, it should be a very successful year.

Judo—'the gentle way'—anything but gentle

By ALAN ROGERS

The word Judo means "the gentle way" in Japanese, but anyone who has seen a Judo contest would hardly describe it as being gentle. What appears to be two white pajama-clad contestants, locked together in sweaty combat, is actually the results of hundreds of years of martial arts development. In Japan, the art of Jujitsu was developed for the Samurai warriors, who needed some form of systematic weaponless combat for those moments when they were lacking their swords. Jujitsu is a combination of many powerful self defense techniques, primarily with the purpose of either killing or maiming one's opponent.

In the 1880's, a young gentleman by the name of Jigaro Kano started his study of jujitsu. However, after several years, and after studying under several masters, he became dissatisfied with the overly violent nature of Jujitsu at that time. Dr. Kano then established his own martial art, which he called judo, in an effort to make the practice of the martial arts safer. Kodokan Judo was born — Kodokan meaning "school of the martial spirit" — and survives today as an international center of Judo, located in Tokyo, Japan.

There are two guiding principles in Judo which every Judoka, or Judo person, is expected to live by. The first is the maximum efficient use of one's mind and body. That is to say, all of one's physical and spiritual strengths should be developed to the fullest, and be used in the most efficient manner possible. The second principle concerns one's relationship with others and is briefly stated as "mutual welfare and benefit." That is to say, with the increase in physical and spiritual strength, comes a responsibility to other people. The true Judoka is expected to aid others and also to share in his knowledge of Judo.

Judo became an Olympic sport in the 1964 Olympic games, and is sanctioned by the Amateur Athletic Union. An international match can last for ten minutes, during which time it is only necessary to get one point to win. There are four basic methods of getting that one point. The first is to throw your opponent forcefully on his back — this method is the most difficult to succeed at since a judoka is well armed with various counter and combination techniques with which he can prevent an opponent from throwing him. The second method is to pin one's opponent on his back for thirty seconds, so as to exhibit total control over the opponents body. The last two methods are less frequently used but are equally valid methods of winning — you can either apply pressure to the neck in order to choke out your opponent, or you can apply pressure to the elbow joint in order to get an arm lock.

Ranking in Judo is signified by the different belt colors. For Judoka over the age of sixteen, there are six ranks, with the first three wearing the white belt and the next three wearing the brown belt. Above these beginning ranks there are the "dan" grades, which are signified by the black belt. There are ten dan ranks, and it is said that the true study of judo commences with the acquisition of the first dan rank — called the "sho-dan." Promotion is obtained either through contest wins or through a comprehensive examination given by a board of examiners.

Above all else, Judo must be viewed as a way of life, based on self development and the cultivation of a humanistic spirit.

Anyone interested in joining the judo club is asked to come to the Boyden wrestling room on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7-9 in the evening.

UMass 3rd

The UMass judo team took third place at the New England team championships, held Sunday at Foxboro, Ma. Each team consisted of five players, and teams from all over New England were represented. The UMass team took third in the men's division, while first and second place went to Massasoit and Tohoku judo clubs, respectively.

The five members of the team were Mark Bradley, Mark Bruso, Steve Hoyle, Jim Javaras, and Allan Rodgers, all UMass undergrads and members of the UMass Judo Club.

UMass underdogs in quad meet

Volleyball coach Dianne Thompson expects a "very tough match" today as the spikers travel to Connecticut to compete in their first quad-match with Central Connecticut, Southern Connecticut and University of Bridgeport at 6:30 p.m. at So. Conn.

"It will be a really big upset if we win," said Thompson. "We are the underdogs."

Thompson cited Connecticut superiority in volleyball as the major reason for the underdog status.

"Volleyball is stronger in Connecticut than it is here," Thompson said. "I saw Central Connecticut earlier this year and they are very strong. They have lots of height and particularly big spikers."

Although Thompson considers Cent. Conn. to be the strongest team in today's match, UMass' 1-15, 2-15 loss to So. Conn. last season indicates that there is little difference in quality between these two Connecticut teams.

Thompson emphasized stamina as a problem for UMass in today's match. The spiker's loss to MIT last Saturday, their second match of the day, was a result of tiring too easily, Thompson said. In today's three matches stamina will be an important factor, she said.

Thompson plans to utilize the bench as much as possible to offset the strain of three matches.

By beating Northeastern last Saturday the spikers, now 2-7 on the season, gave Thompson some optimistic feelings about today's match, despite the superior competition.

"We pulled together on Saturday," said Thompson. "Our communication, which has been a problem, was good. In the second game we came from behind to win. Before Saturday we had problems whenever we got behind.

"If we can play as a team we might do o.k. We have to be on our toes for this one," she said.

Thompson said that her top setter, Shelly Soules, who sprained her ankle Friday, will have more mobility than she did Saturday. However, Thompson plans to substitute Pat Bradley for Soules whenever necessary.

"We will have to play very good volleyball."

Booters face WPI, hope to break jinx

By FRAN SYPEK

One thing the UMass soccer team will be hoping to avoid in tomorrow's 3:30 game with Worcester Polytechnical Institute at Boyden Field is another overtime game.

The Minutemen have played three such contests this season (against Bridgeport, Maine and Rhode Island) and lost them all.

The most recent one was last Friday, when the booters fell to URI by the score of 2-1.

"The kids played a tough gutsy game," said coach Russ Kidd.

Dave Tagliavini, back from an ankle injury, had the lone goal for UMass. "Tag's coming back gave us a big boost," added Kidd. "He gives us more speed up front."

UMass missed an opportunity to go ahead midway in the second half when Bob McChesney's penalty shot attempt was wide of the goal.

"To my knowledge, it's the first time he's ever missed one," Kidd said. "It was just one of those things."

Mark Hanks played another outstanding game in goal for the Minutemen. Tomorrow, Mark Hodgon will get a chance to show what he can do.

"I'm a little concerned about how these close losses are affecting our guys," stated Kidd.

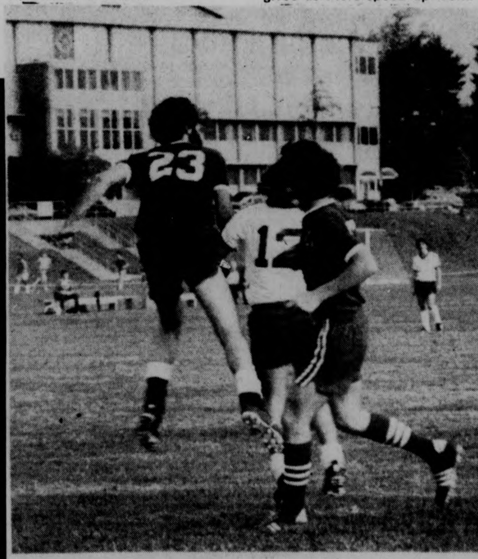
One thing the Minutemen have going for them is that WPI is a Division II team, but as Kidd says "nobody's easy."

Last year's soccer team found that out when it traveled to Worcester and were shut out by the Engineers, 1-0. Bob Grohmal, a freshman goalie from Springfield recorded the shutout.

The Engineers, who are coached by Al King, have a winning record so far this season. They attract a lot of foreign students.

WPI has a unique situation in that a lot of its players don't get to practice regularly because of labs, but the understanding is that they will still get to play.

BOOTER BANTER: Ed Niemiec, who is nursing an ankle injury, will miss the game for UMass... The Minutemen's record is now 2-5.... The Minutemen have no relief in sight as they host perennial powerhouse Connecticut for the annual homecoming weekend game. They then travel to Westfield State on the 27th for a game which has become increasingly tough over the years.



The UMass JV soccer team, shown here in action, will also meet WPI today at 3:30 on the JV field. (Staff photo by Laurie Traub)

Pats breeze to 41-7 win

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — Scrambling Steve Grogan scored two touchdowns, one on a 41-yard run, passed for another and accounted for 285 total yards Monday night in driving the New England Patriots to a 41-7 victory over the New York Jets in a nationally televised game.

Grogan punctured the Jets' line for 103 yards in seven carries and added a six-yard touchdown run on a fumble recovery. The second-year quarterback from Kansas State tossed a 10-yard TD pass to Andy Johnson, who also scored on a four-yard run.

Sam Cunningham ran 14 yards and Don Calhoun 15 yards for the other New England scores. New England set a team single game rushing mark of 330 yards in the game, eclipsing the 296 figure set two weeks ago against Oakland.

Grogan completed 14-of-23 passes for 182 yards before leaving the game early in the fourth quarter.

The Jets' lone touchdown came on a 12-yard pass from Joe Namath to Clark Gaines after New England had built a 27-0 lead.

The win was New England's third in the last 20 games against New York and lifted the Patriots to 4-2 on the season. The Jets are 1-5.

The Patriots won the game with 20 first half points. The first score came 5:26 into the contest as New England moved 58 in seven plays with Johnson finishing the march on a cut through right guard.

Grogan scored the next New England TD at 7:14 of the second period, capping a 64-yard drive by scooping up a Calhoun fumble and sweeping the left side.

New York running back Ed Marinaro and New England linebacker George Webster were hurt on the same play midway through the second period. Marinaro suffered a bruised left instep and Webster a bruised back when their feet got tangled following a pass reception by Marinaro. X-rays were to be taken on both players.

Late in the first half the Patriots added their third touchdown on Grogan's flip to Johnson after safety Tim Fox had intercepted a Namath pass. Grogan electrified the crowd of 50,883 early in the third period by ripping through the left side for New England's longest running touchdown of the season.

And a child shall lead them— Mike Quinn

By MIKE BERGER

As Don Shula of the football Miami Dolphins developed the "No Name Defense", Coach Ken O'Brien of the UMass Harriers has developed the "No Name Runner."

A no name runner is one who might be a pretty good but not spectacular runner in high school but is recruited by UMass. With the proper physical training and mental attitude, he may become an outstanding cross country runner and possibly an All-American.

In the past three years O'Brien has coached three such runners and is on the verge of producing another.

In 1974, Randy Thomas and Bill Gillen received All-American honors. This year's cross country captain John McGrail received it last year and this year the name which is being talked about in all eastern college cross country circles is Mike Quinn.

This 5-10, 140 lb. sophomore from Dedham, Mass. has within a year set an outdoor record for the three mile, been selected to compete in the three mile nationally, and has won three out of the four races he has run this present fall season.

Quinn opened up the 1976 season with a first place performance on the rugged UMass Apple Orchard course. His time of 25:09 was the fourth fastest time ever run on the course.

Quinn was temporarily set back (as were the rest of the UMass runners) in the infamous Providence-Harvard meet where he took a wrong turn on the course for approximately 75 yards, and could not get back in the race.

The sophomore came back though in the Northeastern-St. Johns meet held in Van Cortland Park in New York City to win the meet. His clocking of 24:41 was one of the top five UMass times ever recorded on the Bronx course.

A week later Quinn came back to again be a first place winner in a torrential rainstorm in New York. His time on the five mile Van Cortland Park course was only 26:53 but consider that Quinn and the rest of the UMass runners were running in five inches of water and 50 mile per hour winds.

The question is not how good Quinn is but how good he can be.

Already he has beaten his teammate John McGrail and convincingly defeated most of last year's top runners in New England including All-Americans Jon Flora from Northeastern and Bruce Clark from Connecticut. He has also kept up with two of the U.S. premier cross country runners from Providence, John Treacy and Mike O'Shea for two miles.

Coach Arnie Morse feels Quinn's limitations are still unknown and that this future success will be based on how healthy he will be during the next two years. However, Morse projects Quinn to be an elite caliber of runner in the same class as Treacy or O'Shea.

"Right now," said Morse, "Quinnie is a step ahead of John McGrail and is running at the level that Randy Thomas and Bill Gillen ran in their senior All-American year of 1974.

Right now I would predict that Michael will rewrite the UMass distance records and people will be saying 'Randy or Bill who?' when Quinn graduates," Morse said.

Head coach O'Brien concurs with Morse and is surprised by the consistent quality of races Quinn has performed so far this season.

"When Mike first ran here as a freshman, he showed a lot of promise but was inconsistent in his races. Sometimes he would have a good one and then come back with a bad race. But this year his races have been drastically improved in quality," O'Brien said.

Quinn has run since his freshman year in high school particularly in distance events. He was Dedham's number one man on the cross country team and his best time for 2.4 miles was 11:49.

In his senior year, he was the third best senior high school runner in Mass. behind Stetson Arnold, an All-American runner who recently transferred to UMass and Dan Dillon, Providence's number four runner.

Graduating in 1974, Quinn decided to go to Kent Hill Prep School in Maine. According to Coach Morse, Quinn went through a "hibernation period as far as running goes." Kent Hill had a very loose track organization and Quinn had little or no organized running that year.

Quinn came to UMass because of the tradition UMass has for cross country. "When I got up here, I knew it would be tough to make the varsity but with training I knew I could run competitively," said Quinn.

The probable physical education major was the number one JV runner last year despite being injured in the middle part of the season due to a sprained ankle. Quinn, however managed to gain second place in the IC4A junior championship with a five mile time of 25:45.

Quinn maintains that it was conditioning which produced the running success for him. "When cross country was over last year, both the coaches and myself decided that I overtrained. We decided to ease off on the hard training and concentrate on relaxing and developing consistency."

Quinn's relaxation and consistency finally hit home as he broke the UMass three mile record in outdoor track with teammates McGrail and Carroll. Quinn was invited to compete in the nationals but failed to make the semifinals.

Mike Quinn is the frontrunner here as he has often been this year as the surprise of the UMass cross country team. (Photo by Keith Kloza)

MSP charges in mail

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

A series of complaints alleging "a clear pattern of discrimination" in salary payments to women faculty have only been received by one of the four government agencies to which they were sent, as of yesterday afternoon.

The complaints were sent out Friday afternoon by the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) one of the two faculty groups which are seeking to become the faculty's representative in collective bargaining.

The complaints are based on a study completed in 1975 by a doctoral candidate in the Economics Department. The study, which takes into account factors such as education, experience and producutivity in teaching, scholarship and service, show women faculty earned 10 per cent less than males with equal factors.

According to the society, there are roughly 300 women faculty at the Amherst campus, out of a total of 1200.

The complaint, which was sent to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in Boston, the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination also in Boston, the Division of Federal Contract Compliance office in Washington, D.C. and the U.S. Wages and Hours Division in Springfield, has only been received by the U.S. Wages and Hours Office.

However, a spokesperson for that office said the class action complaint, as filed by MSP, would have to be tabled until their office received clarification of a June decision by the U.S. Supreme Court on the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The spokesperson said that since the society is alleging the violation of a law included in this act, his office must wait for the Supreme Court to decide if a prior decision on that law which stated the act did not apply to most state employes, would be applicable in this situation.

The complaint also listed violations of a federal executive order and Title IX of the 1972 Educational Amendments Act.

Faye Zipkowitz, a member of MSP in charge of filing the complaints, said yesterday that the study, compiled by doctoral candidate Emily Hoffman, showed the average male earning $20,942 and the average female earning $15,731. Zipkowitz said the study, financed by a federal grant from the U.S. Labor Dept., had been available to the UMass administration for over a year, but that no action has been taken to correct the inequities as shown in the report.

In a press statement issued by the University News Bureau, the administration stated, "The materials and charges mentioned by MSP have not been given to the administration. However, in accordance with the University's policy, we will continue our efforts to redress salary inequities including those that are brought to our attention by third parties."

University faculty have been subject to a salary freeze for the past three years, which also prohibited any merit or cost of living increases. This freeze was recently lifted.

Zipkowitz, a documents librarian, said the four agencies to which the MSP sent their complaints were chosen on the basis of which complaints the agency would investigate.

The Equal Opportunity Commission and the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination are quasi-independent bodies of the state government.

Zinkowitz said these were created to take some of the investigative burden off of the Judicial branch. The Division of Federal Contract Compliance Office was notified because many programs and studies at UMass are federally funded, and thus subject to federal laws in regard to equal pay, she said.

She said the MSP hoped to see the fastest action from the Wages and Hours office in Springfield, although at present there seems to be a delay concerning the jurisdiction of the equal pay law.

The president of the American Association for University Professors, the faculty group opposing MSP to become the faculty's recognized collective bargaining agent, said he was not surprised at MSP's filing of complaints, "if the Hoffman dissertation figures are correct."

Joseph S. Larsen, a professor of forestry and wildlife management, also said that Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery currently has $560,000 at his disposal and is considering using that sum to distribute to the faculty.

Larsen said the money was probably taken from surpluses in the University's other accounts.

Bromery was unavailable for comment yesterday.

Larsen said he hoped the action by MSP would not interfere with the distribution of this money.

Zipkowitz said the MSP was also aware of the $560,000, but "we have no concrete information on how the money will be used." She said the money may be used to make equity payments, but that it is not earmarked for the women faculty, as far as she knows.

A series of reports by the Women's Caucus of the MSP published a consolidated version of the Hoffman dissertation and a copy of this report was sent along with the complaint as documentation.

Also sent with the letter of complaint was a caucus analysis of the UMass grievance system, and how it could lead to discriminatory practices in salary payments.

The caucus' report states that the University uses the case method of dealing with salary complaints, rather than employing what they call the "statistical method".

Under the case method, the salary and job of a woman is compared to the salaries of "one or a very few male professors. In contrast, the statistical method ... implements a complete statistical analysis of all faculty wages, so that the impact of sex is considered in relationship to other factors," the caucus report stated.

Tenant issues on agenda

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Landlord-tenant relations will be the subject of warrant articles on the agenda tonight at the second session of the Amherst special town meeting.

Scheduled for consideration by town meeting members at 7:30 at the Amherst-Pelham Regional Junior High School are rent control, a Zoning by law concerning more than four unrelated individuals living together, a request for a town study of a proposed tenant security deposit account, and extension of the authority of the town Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee.

Rent control is up for vote for the third time in two years. If it is rejected this time, sponsors say they will petition for the issue to be put on the ballot as a referendum.

Vincent O'Connor, member of the Amherst Tenants Association, which is sponsoring the rent control article, said, "We're prepared in the event it doesn't pass to take it to referendum," which he said would put the issue before town voters in mid-November.

Voters dissatisfied with a town meeting decision must petition for referendum within five business days of town meeting. If at least 5 per cent of registered voters sign the petition, the question then goes before the electorate within two weeks.

O'Connor said rent control supporters did not put rent control to referendum after the spring town meeting because it would have put the issue to popular vote in June, a time when many area tenants are away.

The lengthy rent control proposal, Art. 23, asks the town to approve a 13-section Amherst Rent and Eviction Control Act. The act provides for the establishment of a five-member volunteer rent control board and sets guidelines for maximum rent as well as tenant evictions.

O'Connor said the ATA has been canvassing the town since Monday encouraging tenants and other residents to either attend tonight's meeting or watch cable TV channel 8 to see those "supposedly acting on your behalf."

He said it would "definitely be very good to have a lot of people there."

The ATA is also sponsoring an article asking for revision of the zoning by law, which now says that no more than four unrelated people can live and cook together in one unit.

O'Connor said it was a discriminating by law that ought to be abolished. The town's Citizens Review Commission recently issued a statement that said, "The commission believes that there is discrimination in the existing by law and is anxious to work toward changing it," recommending further study into the "highly complex" issues involved in this by law.

This by law was recently

SW to have porno vote

By BARBARA HOFFMAN
Collegian Staff

The issue of whether or not to show pornographic films in Hampden Student Center in Southwest will be decided by a student referendum.

The decision to set up the student vote was reached unanimously by the Southwest Assembly (SWA) last night. The referendum, which has been called for by Baroque Enterprises, the organization sponsoring the movies, has been scheduled for Nov. 15 from noon to 6 p.m. in Hampden.

The referendum is the result of a controversy which started last semester when Albert Sparks, head of Baroque Enterprises, tried to show pornographic movies such as "Deep Throat" and "The Devil in Miss Jones" in the student center in Southwest.

SWA voted to prohibit him from showing the films on the grounds they were sexist, but Sparks has fought their decision ever since, culminating in this referendum vote.

In other business, SWA voted to allocate $3000 towards an insert on Southwest affairs to appear in the Collegian. The assembly is seeking a newspaper coordinator to work on the four-page supplement.

The insert, which will be similar to Below the Salt and Nummo News in design and distribution, was selected by the SWA as its "most flexible option" for a community-based newspaper. Both a pamphlet and privately-printed paper were considered, but rejected as being either too expensive or difficult to circulate.

"If it's part of the Collegian, people will pick it up," Treasurer Mark Gardner said of the insert.

Finance member Mike Fox commented on the contractless agreement with the Collegian, by which the insert could be discontinued at any time if SWA sees fit to do so.

"It's our most flexible option," Fox said, "and the surest and safest way to start."

A proposal that Southwest contribute $1000 toward the Natalie Cole concert in the Fine Arts Center next week has been tabled for a week's consideration by the executive and finance committees. Questions were raised as to whether or not the assembly could legally fund a group outside of Southwest.

A proposal that SWA allocate $450 to a Southwest course, "Imperialism: Theory and Practice", for a presentation on United States imperialism was tabled for a week's consideration by the finance committee.

The assembly unanimously allocated $25.80 to the audio-visual service for a feeder cable for its videotape camera and player.

Monica Paranay of MacKimmie was named permanent secretary of SWA.

Commuters vote, support rent control

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

The Commuter Collective voted yesterday to support rent control for Amherst tenants, on the eve of the town's special town meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Amherst-Pelham Junior High School.

The 240 town meeting members will vote on proposals submitted by various residents and groups, and it is expected that rent control for Amherst tenants will be one of the main topics on the agenda.

The collective's unanimous vote supported three aspects of this issue — rent control for Amherst tenants, a provision stating that any number of people can inhabit a given apartment, and an arrangement for tenant control of security deposits.

In other action, a financial report prepared by Maurice Chabuz revealed that the Commuter Collective has $900 left in its budget. As a result, the group voted to freeze indefinitely all allocations of money. A fiscal policy committee was formed to study the finances of each interest group's proposal, so that members of the committee will be better informed about finances involved, before each collective meeting begins.

The collective also voted to let Woolman School, a private school in Deerfield, use its name in order to get a room in the Campus Center in which the school will show a film dealing about children raised in a Scotland Village.

It was voted to take $1,000 out of the $5,000 allocated to the campus Child Day Care program, and put it towards the salary of Mary Lee, the primary teacher of the Cha-Lumumba School of New Africa House. A second motion, calling for the collective to allocate money from their Herter Hall film series towards Lee's salary, was tabled until the group finds out how much money they will make on the upcoming films.

OHAG treasurer, Catalogna, resigns

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

The treasurer of Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG), Mark Catalogna, resigned last night, saying his personal ideas clash with OHAG's budget decisions to allot large amounts of money for educational and cultural programs.

Catalogna, who presided over the Finance Committee during the five-week struggle with the current year's budget, said he feels more money should have been allotted for social events which he believes would benefit more Hill residents.

The ex-treasurer also said he feels the special interest groups "take their money and run." He feels these groups are trying to isolate themselves from OHAG instead of working with the area government.

Catalogna, who took office only 6 weeks ago, followed OHAG treasurer Mike Carne, who resigned over the summer due to academic difficulties.

Three motions were passed to deal with the election of a new treasurer. Catalogna's resignation is effective next Tuesday, and people wishing to run for the office must have their nomnations in by this Friday.

Elections will be held at next week's OHAG meeting. Sunday night a briefing for all candidates will take place for the purpose of letting the candidates know exactly what the job entails.

Another issue discussed was the Field snack bar, which may begin operation this year after a two-year planning stage.

The area government also voted to submit a bid to the Finance Committee for money to start a radio station.

Amherst firemen were summoned to Brett House early yesterday afternoon and the dorm was quickly evacuated. This proved to be another one of the numerous false alarms that occur on campus. (Staff photo by Laurie Traub)

Women hold open house

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

A general meeting of Central area women, to introduce themselves to each other and to the relatively new Women's Center, will be held as an open house tomorrow night in Room 119-B in Baker House lobby.

"Every woman who is curious or interested in the center is encouraged to come and see what the center has to offer," said Paula A. Russo, co-cordinator, along with Linda J. Fuller, of the center. "We're looking for suggestions, ideas, and support — and to be supportive.

"The more people that get involved, the easier it is to get going," Russo said.

Wine and cheese will be served at the 8 p.m. event, and Susan Snedaker will sing women's music accompanying herself on the guitar.

The center was started last year with $500 funding from the Central Area Government. "There was really nothing for area women before last year," Russo said.

The center is currently on a budget of $1850 from the Central Area Government. Fuller said they were "very happy" with the increase over last year.

The co-coordinators agree that the biggest problem now facing the women's center is lack of exposure.

The center, which includes a comfortable reading room, office, kitchen and living room, has scheduled many activities and speakers for area women. Representatives from the UMass Health Services will be speaking there next Wednesday about Women's Health Issues. Dr. Emma M. Cappelluzzo, professor in the School of Education will conduct a talk Nov. 4 on native American women, centering on Navajo women; and Dale Melcher of the Women's Studies Department will speak about her department Nov. 17.

Tentative plans for the future include meetings with the local Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) committee, the People's Gay Alliance and the UMass Rape Task Force.

The co-coordinators also hope to provide some sessions on Assertiveness Training.

The center has been subscribing to magazines which deal with topics affecting women, and building a reading library. A library system for book borrowing has been discussed also, although the feasibility of such a system has been questioned.

Fuller and Russo said they hoped the center could serve as a proponent of women's issues in the Central area in conjunction with the area's Racism-Sexism Center.

They said they have had little contact with other campus women's centers and the Everywomen's Center, but they expect to be working more closely with some of them after they become more established.

The co-coordinators said they felt there was a real need for the women's center because women need a place to come and talk, especially in the co-ed living situations many people in Central are involved with. Fuller said she would encourage women to use the place as somewhere to study and get away, if they wanted — "Some place to have as their own."

Russo said she felt there existed a lot of sexism within the dormitories and she would like to see the women's center help women deal with this.

The center also offers some material on general University information, such as other organizations, CASIAC policies, etc. Its staff looks forward to offering a very diverse list of activities for area women.

"The older we get, the more services we'll have," Fuller said.

The co-coordinators of the women's center became interested in their work through different channels.

Russo is a senior psychology major who is very involved with Women's Studies. She got interested in the formation of a women's center for Central Area through a three-credit Orchard Hill course entitled, "Practical Women's Centers," which she took last semester.

"I loved it." Russo said. "I was

Las Vegas Night set for Sat.

By BRIAN KELLY
Collegian Staff

Is 13 your lucky number? If it is, or even if it's not, plan to attend the 13th Annual Las Vegas Night, to be held 7:30 p.m. Saturday night, on the first floor of the Campus Center. The event will be sponsored by the UMass chapter of Alpha Phi Omega (APO).

For every dollar contribution, the fortune seeker will receive $1,000 in play money to gamble with. Participants may lay down as much as they want on any one of the six roulette tables, or on one of the many blackjack tables, birdcage games, dice games, wheel of fortune games and poker tables.

Frank Evans, APO advisor, said everyone is encouraged to dress appropriately to wheel and deal. If people cooperate and dress up for the event, then along with the honky-tonk piano player, there ought to be a high-rollin' atmosphere. You may also wish to cast your penny vote for the "Las Vegas Night Royal Person." The winner of this event may raise nearly $400 for charity. Contestants will be solicited from Recognized Student Organizations, residence halls, fraternities, sororities, and clubs.

At the close of the games at 11:00, and during the night, over a thousand real dollars worth of merchandise will be auctioned off for the play money all of the gamblers should be piling up in front of them. The merchandise is donated by local merchants in the Amherst area, and the proceeds from the event will be donated to various charities on local, national, and international levels, according to Evans. In the past two years, Las Vegas night has raised $2,800 for charity, and in the total 12 years of Las Vegas night history, it has raised over $10,000 for worthy causes.

Some causes include the Amherst-based "A Better Chance" program, Boy Scouts of America, National Association for Parapalegics and the American Foundation for the Blind.

APO was brought to court in 1972 and reprimanded for sexual discrimination when they ran a "Las Vegas Night Queen" contest, but now, anyone and anything may enter the Royal "Person" contest.

Las Vegas Night at UMass is the largest interchapter event that APO is involved with, and it attracts members from APO and Gamma Sigma Sigma chapters from the Mass. Institute of Technology, the University of Maine and Rutgers. APO, which is an all-service fraternity, as opposed to a social Fraternity, will celebrate its 25th anniversary at UMass this May.

APO has given social service to the community in the past, with the help of Gamma Sigma Sigma and others by running the UMass "Blood Drive", and by sponsoring the Heart Fund Walk.

Solar energy law signed

By JUNE GREIG
Collegian Staff

A law requiring public agencies to obtain estimates on solar energy utilization for all state construction was signed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis yesterday. And nobody could be happier than Timothy Peters, Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) research associate.

Peters, a 21-year-old UMass senior, who assisted in the passage of the bill and testified in its behalf, said, "MassPIRG was the prime force behind the bill."

The law requires estimates on the long term costs of owning and operating different types of heating and cooling systems, including solar and wind equipment, before completeing the design of a building.

It affects new public buildings or additions to existing buildings that will add 10 per cent or more gross floor space to the building and where the estimated cost of construction exceeds $25,000.

Peters said the legislation was Sen. William M. Bulger's idea and was researched and amended by MassPIRG to make it more suitable for passage.

Sen. Bulger, a Boston Democrat and sponsor of the legislation, said, "This law is part of a two-year effort by the General Court to place state government in favor, instead of in the way, of solar energy."

Peter C. Bogle, staff attorney for MassPIRG was the chief lobbyist for the bill. It was approved by legislators Oct. 12 and will become effective on Jan. 1.

Bogle said, "Armed with the information provided by this energy cost estimate law, public officials can design schools, hospitals or housing projects that will not burden taxpayers with fuel bills that are higher than necessary."

Referendum No. 3: Religious Absentee Voting.

This is the third in a nine-part series giving the pros and cons of each of the nine referendum items which will be on the ballot Nov. 2.

Referendum No. 3 is Absentee Voting for Religious Reasons. The actual question on the ballot will read, "Do you approve of the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution summarized below, which was approved by the General Court in joint sessions of the House of Representatives and Senate on August 15, 1973 by a vote of 259-0, and on May 12, 1976 by a vote fo 262-1?"

The summary of the referendum is, "The proposed amendment would authorize the Legislature to provide for absentee voting by persons who hold religious beliefs in conflict with the act of voting on the day on which any election is to be held."

A YES vote is a vote to change the state Constitution to permit extension of absentee voting by persons who hold religious beliefs that conflict with voting on election day.

A NO vote is a vote to leave the state Constitution as it is.

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

The issue of being able to vote by absentee ballot because of religious practices is simply uncontroversial.

The Mass. State Legislature has passed the amendment unanimously both times it has been voted on.

As the Constitution now reads, qualified voters of the Commonwealth who, at the time of any election or referendum question, are absent from the community in which they wish to vote or are disabled and unable to get to polling places, may vote by absentee ballot.

The amendment would add to this law the provision that those who could not vote on a certain day because of their religious beliefs or practices would also be able to vote by absentee ballot.

The amendment was brought to the legislature by Rep. Nicholas Buglione (D-Methuen), because in his community, town elections were held on Saturday. Neither Jewish people nor Seventh-Day Adventists who strictly observed their religion were able to vote, because that day is their Sabbath.

Actually, 36 communities in Massachusetts have Saturday elections, including West Springfield, Oxbridge, Wilbraham, Ashfield and Goshen.

Buglione said the only questions he has received regarding the amendment are from people who don't understand it. Once it is explained to them, there has been no complaints.

The amendment was placed on the ballot by the legislature and will be binding — it will become part of the Mass. Constitution if passed by voters.

The amendment was first proposed by Buglione four years ago. The first reading of the amendment before joint sessions of the legislature was in 1973, at which time the vote was unanimous. It was reconsidered this year, and the vote was overwhelmingly in favor of it, to be placed on the November ballot.

The Mass. State Legislature has passed the amendment both times it has been voted on.

2 dead, 49 arrested

Stands go 'wild'... ...while Pats score

FOXBORO, Mass. [AP] — Two deaths. Forty-nine arrests. A policeman with a broken jaw and a man stabbed in the parking lot.

While the New England Patriots were slaughtering the New York Jets 41-7 Monday night in a nationally televised game at Schaefer Stadium, there also was a show of blood-and-guts in the stands.

"How can you figure things like this? It's the first time we've had a situation as bad as this. You can hope and pray they never have another night game," said Foxboro Police Chief Daniel W. McCarthy.

A combination of alcohol, cold weather, a 9 p.m. starting time and 50,883 ticket-holders helped turn the stadium into a bizarre nightmare.

Two men died of heart attacks during the game — Robert Blinn of Mystic, Conn., and Peter Knights of Wellesley.

An ambulance attendant, desperately trying to save one of the victims, gave him mouth-to-mouth resuscitation in the stands. The attendant reported that while he worked, someone urinated on him from behind.

Bottles were thrown randomly at moving bodies, and hundreds of fights broke out during and after the game. One Foxboro officer was assaulted, his jaw broken and his gun stolen.

The thief waved the gun in the air and yelled "come and get me." Fans scattered, and two other patrolmen subdued the man and retrieved the gun.

Two men bragged they fell from the top of the stadium, escaping with only minor cuts and bruises. But the hospital staff who treated them claimed they would have been seriously injured after a 40-foot fall.

"You wouldn't think it would be this way," McCarthy said. "You'd think the Patriots winning easily would be the best thing that could happen. I really don't know. What do people want?"

Many were parading for the TV cameras, hoping their onfield antics would get them a cameo role on the tube, he said.

'Country club set' linked... ...to Arizona reporter's death

PHOENIX, Ariz. [UPI] — A prosecutor said yesterday "the country club set" rather than the Mafia may have been responsible for the murder of investigative reporter Don Bolles.

"The mob doesn't kill cops and reporters," said Maricopa County District Attorney Donald Harris. "This is not a Mafia case. Don Bolles wouldn't have lived 11 days if this was a Mafia job."

Bolles, 47, a Pulitzer Prize nominee who frequently exposed deals involved prominent persons, was fatally wounded June 2 when a bomb blew up his car. He died 11 days later.

Jury selection in the trial of John Adamson, 32, who is charged with murdering the Arizona Republic newsman, continued through its second day.

Harris, who heads the government case for which a special prosecutor, William Schafer, has been appointed, said the slaying might well involve "the country club set."

"Organized crime doesn't have to be the Mafia," he said. "It can be the kind of people who are named Smith and Jones. I don't like the word Mafia. It is offensive to Italian-Americans."

Harris said the prosecution will ask for the death penalty for Adamson, a dog breeder and former tow truck operator who was an acquaintance of influential business and political figures.

"It's a murder-one case," said the Brooklyn-born district attorney. "The state is asking for the death penalty."

Shipment of marijuana seized

MIAMI [UPI] — The Panamanian freighter Don Emilio, caught on the high seas with a cargo of marijuana estimated at 82 tons, was towed into the Miami Coast Guard base yesterday afternoon with its imprisoned crew peering out its portholes.

If the estimate proves correct, the marijuana haul would equal a record seizure by the Drug Enforcement Agency in February off the coast of Colombia.

The ship also brings with it a mystery — what happened to a crewman who acted as interpreter for the Coast Guard when it took over the ship. The crewman disappeared when locked overnight with other seamen in a room with a narrow porthole he could not have gone through in one piece.

Uniformed U.S. Customs officers, armed with shotguns, strode aboard and joined Coast Guardsmen patroling the upper decks with automatic rifles.

Twenty Colombian crewmen were taken from the ship, which was seized on the high seas about 500 miles southeast of Miami Friday at the request of the Panamanian government. The crew was taken under guard to the Coast Guard base where they could be questioned by Immigration and Naturalization agents. Officials said they were being "detained" and were not under arrest.

Drug Enforcement Administration Regional Director John Van Diver said the marijuana would be unloaded Wednesday and burned. "We're gonna have one heck of a bonfire," Van Diver said.

Van Diver said the U.S. State Department has asked the Panamanian government what they want done with the ship, crewmen and marijuana, but has so far not received a response. "We can charge the crew here or return them and samples from the contraband marijuana if that's what they want," he said.

Capt. H.M. "Mike" Veillette, 42, skipper of the cutter Sherman, said the freighter was originally observed while the cutter was on maneuvers.

"We routinely reported it to headquarters and about two hours later a message was received to be on the lookout for the ship because DEA intelligence believed there was marijuana and cocaine on board," Veillette said.

"A chopper located the ship, which had been acting suspiciously — changing both course and speed. We pursued the ship and she continued to run. At night she would douse her lights. And she refused to stop.

Cold drives man south

[UPI] — A man jumped aboard an empty 37-passenger Greyhound bus parked behind a terminal in Toledo, Ohio yesterday and took off. He headed south.

The Ohio Highway Patrol said it caught up with the bus and David Washington, 21, near Bowling Green, Ohio, and charged the Detroit man with possession of stolen goods.

Police quoted Washington as saying he was tired of unseasonably cold weather and wanted to go south for the winter.

Many midwesterners and easterners had reason to feel like Washington Tuesday.

Snow blanketed a belt of the north central states from the northern Rockies to the eastern Great Lakes. Low temperature records tumbled from the central Appalachians to the mid-Atlantic coast.

Westerners halt Third World move

UNITED NATIONS [AP] — A Third World move for a binding world arms embargo against South Africa was faced with a triple Western vote in the U.N. Security Council yesterday.

Diplomats said the United States, Britain and France were determined to vote the resolution after an intermittent two - and - a - half month debate on how to get South Africa to give up the disputed territory of South-West Africa, a onetime German colony also known as Namibia.

Those three countries vetoed a similar resolution on June 9, 1975, and a proposal to expel South Africa from the United Nations on Sept. 30, 1974.

In advance of the vote, the diplomats said Benin, Libya, Tanzania, Guyana, Panama, Romania and Pakistan were equally determined to press their embargo proposal to a decision even knowing it would be vetoed.

Council members generally expected the vote would be 10-3 with 2 abstentions — China, the Soviet Union and Sweden were likely to join the sponsors in favor, Italy and Japan to abstain and the Western powers to exercise their permanent members' veto power.

The proposed resolution sought to have the council say that, "acting under Chapter 7 of the United Nations charter," it "determines that the illegal occupation of Namibia and the anti-guerrilla war being waged there by South Africa constitute a threat to international peace and security."

Under that chapter, such a finding is a prerequisite to a binding order from the council to the nations of the world to take diplomatic, economic or military action against the country deemed to be creating the threat.

The resolution aimed to have the council decide "that all states shall" end any military cooperation and arms licensing arrangements with South Africa, stop any recruitment of mercenaries for it and prevent the supply to it of arms, ammunition, planes and spare parts.

A comprehensive economic boycott against Rhodesia dating back to 1966 is the only similar enforcement action, or so-called sanctions, now in effect.

Some Western diplomats held that the outcome of the Namibia debate would not hurt Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's efforts to get South Africa to withdraw from the territory voluntarily. Others contended that it might stiffen the backs of hardline whites against concessions by the white minority officials of both South Africa and Rhodesia.

Ford trailing Carter in latest Harris poll

NEW YORK [UPI] — President Ford now trails Jimmy Carter by only four points in a Harris-ABC poll taken after the second presidential debate, which indicates the general election is "up for grabs," according to pollster Louis Harris.

According to a survey of 1,503 voters taken jointly by the Harris organization and ABC News between Oct. 7 and 11, Carter had 44 per cent of the vote, Ford 40 and third-party candidate Eugene McCarthy 6 per cent. The others were undecided.

Harris said the results of the survey show the momentum is "going Ford's way" and said "make no mistake about it, this election is up for grabs."

Carter lost his previous 50 to 41 per cent lead, despite his 54 to 30 per cent win in the second presidential campaign debate, Harris said in a statement.

'Tax' workers help community

HARTFORD, Conn. [AP] — Carmela Arcovito paid most of her property taxes this year by keeping books and organizing trips for the elderly. She was one of 100 unemployed or low-income residents of Hartford taking part in the nation's first work-for-taxes program.

Mrs. Arcovito — separated from her husband, without a job and facing a $1,100 tax bill — said the work not only eased financial pressure but also let her contribute to the community.

"It was a good opportunity because I was struggling along. Suddenly I had a chance to meet people and had a full-time job," she said.

Mrs. Arcovito earned $4 an hour in tax credits for seven weeks to pay off $1,000 in taxes, the maximum for unemployed persons.

In addition to covering the unemployed up to $1,000, a second phase of the program allowed low-income persons with jobs to work off this year's three-mill property tax increase. The increase meant an extra $3 in taxes for each $1,000 in real estate value.

Property taxes in Connecticut are considered high, because the state has no income tax.

"None of the positions were bogus jobs," said the program's administrator, Michael Cirullo. He said the jobs were with city agencies and "ranged from accountants to carpenters and welders in a number of understaffed areas."

The hourly pay ranged from $2.50 to $4, depending on the job. Participants had to pay the first $30 on tax bills themselves.

The City Council appropriated $300,000 to cover the cost of program, including $250,000 for salaries paid directly to the tax collector.

"Many taxpayers, through no fault of their own, begin to fall behind in their tax obligations to the city because they are out of work, drawing unemployment compensation or are on welfare," the council noted.

So far the city has used $42,000 for salaries and expects to spend about $45,000. Officials had thought about 1,000 residents would participate, but only 100 signed up.

Many decided not to participate because their unemployment benefits would be reduced, Cirullo said. He said the city might ask the legislature to change that if the program continues next year.

Tax Collector Thomas Sataro said many persons were discouraged because the tax credit is considered taxable income. City officials also agreed participation would have been higher if they had more than the six weeks allotted this year to plan and set up the program.

Maureen Cianci, who interviewed participants, said the program appealed most to the young just out of college and to the elderly.

John Gale, a law student and a homeowner, worked for 32 hours as an elevator operator and got $96 in tax credit.

News in Brief

2 shot in Ireland

BELFAST [UPI] — A lone gunman hiding in a cemetery shot two British soldiers in the back in an ambush yesterday. A young pregnant Catholic woman fought for her life after being shot in the back in a sectarian killing attempt.

The gunman ambushed a mobile army patrol at the junction of the Falls and White Rock roads in the predominantly Roman Catholic Andersons-town area.

The five-man patrol's landrover was about 100 yards from a military post, two miles west of the city center, when the gunman hiding in a cemetery fired a burst from the submachine gun at the back of the vehicle, hitting two men.

An Army spokesman said the wounded men were undergoing emergency surgery and it was not yet known how seriously they were injured.

Doctors at Belfast's Mater hospital said Mrs. Patricia Mullan, 21, whose baby is already a week overdue, was still seriously ill after being gunned down outside a social club late Sunday.

Ship abandoned?

HALIFAX, N.S. [UPI] — Three of 15 members of the crew of the abandoned Dutch ship Gabriella were rescued from rough seas south of Newfoundland yesterday but the others are feared dead and officials cannot guess why the still floating ship was abandoned.

Search and rescue officials said the three survivors and the body of one other crew member were plucked from the sea and a life raft some 250 miles south of St. John's.

The bodies of seven more crew members are believed to be in a liferaft drifting close to the disabled freighter Gabriella and four bodies have been seen floating in the sea.

"We don't really know what happened," said Capt. Everett Nixon of the Halifax search and rescue team. "We suppose they must have felt the ship was sinking and they wanted off, but apparently there was no fire or explosion aboard."

Nixon said the Transamerica, a large container ship, was at the scene but unable to conduct further rescue operations because of darkness and swells up to 30 feet. Winds gusted to 60 and 70 knots.

Israel strengthens

WASHINGTON [UPI] — In the past decade, Israel has purchased $5.7 billion in military equipment from the United States, including many sophisticated systems capable of using nuclear weapons.

Perhaps one of the most concise justifications for this come in the same transcript of the interview with Gen. George Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs, in which he said that from a strictly military standpoint, the U.S. support for Israel "has just got to be considered a burden."

Brown said: "Today there is stability because Israel is strong. She could whip Syria and Egypt handily and there is nobody else in control in that area unless the Russians took a direct hand."

According to Pentagon figures, U.S. sales to Israel amounted to $66.7 million between 1950 and 1965. Between 1965 and 1975, it totaled $5.7 billion. The amount in 1976 was $868 million.

Reporter arrested

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — An NBC correspondent was arrested and later released yesterday during a downtown lunchtime rally where Democratic vice presidential candidate Walter Mondale spoke.

Robert Hager, an NBC reporter who has been traveling with the Mondale campaign, said he was seized by a San Francisco policeman when he declined to climb aboard a flatbed truck that was being used as a platform for television cameras.

He said he hesitated, expecting Mondale staffers to allow him to move closer to the podium.

Hager was placed in a police van before San Francisco Mayor George Moscone instructed the arresting officer to release him. Hager said the mayor later apologized for the incident.

Gurney fingered

ORLANDO, Fla. [UPI] — Larry E. Williams testified yesterday that he became a fund-raiser for former Sen. Edward J. Gurney in February 1971 and promptly began collecting cash from builders in return for favors from the Federal Housing Authority.

The blond, broad-shouldered Williams testified for the prosecution in Gurney's retrial on a charge of lying to a federal grand jury in 1974.

Gurney, former Republican member of the Senate Watergate Committee, is charged with lying under oath when he said he did not know until June 1972 that Williams was raising funds.

Diapers — new art

LONDON [AP] — After three years of diapering her baby, Mary Kelly, a British artist, hung 28 of the soiled diapers in The Institute of Contemporary Arts, a new London gallery supported by public funds.

Ray Richards, 22, of Nottingham, has received about $850 from the Arts Council of Great Britain for sweeping dust in the street into variously shaped piles.

The Tate Gallery, a world-renowned, trendy, publicly financed art center, recently spent about $8,200 to purchase 120 cream-colored bricks arranged as a sculpture from American artist Carl Andre. They were mailed to the gallery with instructions on how to lay them out.

A three-man "living sculpture" team was given about $670 by the Arts Council to walk around with a 10-foot pole balanced on their heads.

These are just some of the expenditures of public funds in recent months for artistic endeavors that have been debated in London newspapers and on the floor of the House of Commons.

American executed

NASSAU, The Bahamas [AP] — In a common grave strewn with the bones of forgotten paupers and murderers, Michaiah Shobek of Milwaukee was buried yesterday after being hanged for murder.

The 22-year-old handyman was executed for the slaying of Irwin Bornstein, a New York accountant. It was 29 months ago that he confessed to that murder and to the slayings of Katie Smith, a 17-year-old Detroit tourist and Paul Howell, a Massillon, Ohio, lawyer.

He said then that his victims were "angels of Lucifer" and that God told him to commit the murders.

Shobek was awakened at 6:30 a.m. yesterday and had a breakfast of orange juice, bread, sausage, grits and coffee, a prison official said.

A short time later, his arms bound by his side and his feet secured, Shobek was taken to the gallows room next to the cell where he had been placed 48 hours before. A black hood was placed over his head and a half-inch thick nylon rope was put around his neck.

A hooded civilian pulled a red switch from a closet-like room nearby, releasing the floor under Shobek and sending the doomed man to a chamber below. The rope was then removed and he was pronounced dead by prison physician Dr. Victoriano Fermo.

Moderator chosen

WASHINGTON: Barbara Walters, co-anchor of the ABC Evening News, will be moderator of the final debate Friday between Pres. Gerald Ford and Democratic challenger Jimmy Carter, it was announced here yesterday. The three-member panel of questioners will be Jack Nelson, Washington Bureau chief of the Los Angeles Times; Robert C. Maynard, editorial writer and columnist for the Washington Post, and Joseph Kraft, syndicated columnist. The debate will take place at the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Va. (UPI)

Five 'killers' spared death by Governor

RICHMOND [UPI] — Gov. Mills E. Godwin Jr. commuted to life imprisonment the death sentences of the five convicted killers on Virginia's "Death Row" yesterday.

"The report from Death Row is less tension and general relief among the entire group," said assistant penitentiary superintendent Carl Atkinson. "The guard down there says they seem more relaxed."

Godwin commuted the senences in light of the U.S. supreme Court's ruling last summer which effectively struck down Virginia's mandatory capital punishment statutes.

Godwin took the action after consulting state Attorney General Andrew P. Miller and in a statement said, "I have been advised...that in light of the United States Supreme Court decisions culminating July 2 in North Carolina and Louisiana cases. Virginia's death sentences statues are invalid.

"Until Virginia has a death sentence statue over which there is no legal question, I do not feel anyone should be executed," Godwin said.

John Wessels, an aide to Godwin, said the governor will urge the 1977 General assembly to write a constitutional capital punishment law.

"I'm not sure if the death penalty will be one of his top goals during the 1977 legislature, but he has indicated it will be part of his legislative package," said Wessels.

★ Solar energy bill signed

The law could result in new public buildings that are better insulated, capped with solar collectors and surrounded by electricity-generating windmills.

Peters said lobbying for a bill is "an interesting process and depends a lot on who you know." He said little opposition was encountered by the Bureau of Building Construction, but the bill was amended to exclude the City of Boston for a four-year period because of opposition from a Boston lobbyist.

Proponents for the legislation believe the long term cost estimates will reveal the advantages of solar energy utilization and boost the economy.

"Over 100 buildings in the country are using solar energy successfully", said Peters, who has worked at MassPIRG for the past year. "If public buildings in Massachusetts use solar equipment it will encourage and convince citizens of its practicality and help the solar industry."

Under the law, summaries of the energy system life-cycle cost estimates must be filed with the Bureau of Building Construction. Peters said, "The estimates are a negligible cost if done in the preliminary designs of a building."

The Massachusetts Energy Policy Office has predicted that widespread adoption of solar equipment by Massachusetts citizens could cut their fuel bills by $120 million annually and add 11,000 jobs by 1985, according to a MassPIRG press release.

Other legislators credited by Bogle for passage of the law are Rep. Charles Buffone, (D—Worcester), Rep. Angelo Cataldo (D Revere), Rep. Barney Frank (D Boston), Sen. John W. Olver (D Amherst) and Sen. Alan Sisitsky (D Springfield).

MassPIRG is a non-profit corporation inspired by consumer advocate Ralph Nader, devoted to issues of public concern.

always at the Everywoman's Center, and I knew what Louise Sapp and Patricia Fielding (last year's co-coordinators) were trying to do with the Orchard Hill Women's Center."

Fuller, a zoology major of the class of '78, did not take the course at Orchard Hill, but was acquainted with Sapp and Fielding. She attained her interest through personal reading and the freshman Global Survival Program. With Global Survival, Fuller traveled to Washington to study the ERA, and came in contact there with the National Organization for Women, Common Cause and the Committee on the Status of Women.

Fuller is now teaching at the Student Development Center, which she cites as being another extension of her interest in women's issues.

Russo and Fuller now teach the course, "Practical Women's Centers" on Thursday nights at 8:30 p.m. in the Women's Center for interested people. The course is divided into two sections, "Theory Issues" and "Field Work," the latter of which includes helping staff the women's center in Central.

The center as yet does not have specific hours when it is open, but when closed, the key can be obtained by seeing Russo, who lives in room 206 of Baker House.

The 800 women living in the Central Area will be receiving a letter from the Women's Center, the coordinators said, in an attempt to make women aware of the open house tomorrow night and of the center itself. A turnout of approximately 50 people is expected.

★ landlord-tenant concerns head town meeting

questioned after the town asked a group of 11 people, not all related, to split up and move from the Carriage Road house where they live together. The group has refused to move.

An article sponsored by George Scheurer asks the town to authorize a study of the feasibility of a security deposit trust account for Amherst tenants.

Scheurer said yesterday, "The whole concept is to get the tenant money working for the tenant."

"State law says the security deposit is supposed to be held and returned to the tenant at the end of the tenancy," he said, but emphasized that tenants are only required to get 5 per cent interest on their deposit when property owners get much more than that, using the money for part of their working capital.

"I want to see the tenant get all the interest on the money," he said.

"There's no reason this money can't be put in a trust account. None," he said. If the town were sometime in the future to implement such an account for tenants, it would be the first in the state to do so.

He says legislation concerning such an account has been filed four times on the state level but has not passed because it is too cumbersome to be on a statewide basis.

Scheurer mentioned there is now basically no recourse for tenants if their security deposit is not returned due to the bankruptcy of its holders.

The town Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee is sponsoring three articles. The first requests the town to establish a five-member Amherst Fair Rent Commission with a fulltime director-housing officer. The proposed commission would have the authority to establish and enforce equitable rents and mediate conflicts between landlords and tenants arising from rent levels and-or changes to rent levels.

It would determine if rent charges were "harsh and unconscionable."

The Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee now has no power to deal with rent related issues.

The second LTRC-sponsored article asks the town to expand the committee's charge to include the mediation of complaints relating to rent. It also asks the town manager to appoint a fulltime housing specialist.

The committee's third article simply asks the town to reaffirm the original charge to hearing and mediating complaints between landlord and tenant of a non-rent related nature.

Other warrant articles that have not been dealt with include Art. 19, seeking approval for the purchase of development rights of active farms within Amherst. The proposal contains a nine-section agricultural development rights program.

In addition, the Conservation Commission is sponsoring an article asking the town to buy 38 acres north of Pelham Road (Main Street) for recreation and conservation. The land would cost the town $53,000. There is the possibility for a 50 per cent reimbursement through the state self-help program of the Office of Environmental Affairs.

Another article seeks prohibition of the transportation of large amounts of commercial radioactive waste through Amherst.

Christmas in October

In case you haven't noticed, it's time for television's annual, "sell 'em everything we got" campaign for Christmas. That's right, Christmas. Anyone who lives near or with a child, or who just watches a lot of cartoons, is hearing Santa's jingle long before it's due. My friend Nancy tells me that she would be in the middle of a conversation with her three year old daughter, Heather, and as soon as the commercial tones of "Baby alive, soft and sweet" came from the television set, Heather would run into the living room just in time to see little girls (just like her), playing with baby alive. Even Barbi, according to this years Sears catalogue, has a little three inch child to babysit for.

All this is very interesting but as long as they're going to be selling toys this early in the selling season, I'd like to see them a little more realistic. (Ah, now to the crux of the column). So, I thought I'd include a list of some of the toys that good little boys and girls all over the Amherst area would like to see under their Christmas tree.

"THE WAIT-A-MINUTE BUS"

This toy is a lot of fun. You send it out to get somewhere and it breaks down. Or, you have the driver pull over to the side of the road where it waits for fifteen minutes making everyone late. You can make this bus go anywhere you want it too, as many times as you want it too, but never send it to Sunderland. (batteries not included).

"BABY PAIN-IN-THE-ASS"

Little girls of all ages will love this one. Feed her in her little highchair and she gets sick; wash her in her little tub and she screams; put her in her little bed and she wets her little sheets. But she's so cute when she's sleeping.

"GROWING UP SKIPPER-GROWING UP BOBBY"

Turn Skippers' arm 360 degrees and she grows taller, slims down and developes breasts. Turn Bobby's arm 360 degrees and he grabs Skipper and they disappear behind the toy chest.

"DOCTOR BLOOD AND HIS TEAM OF DEATH"

Just right for that growing boy on your list. Dr. Blood comes complete with "Sting Ray" action (which is an actual vial of acid), his bone crushing machine (a portable vise), and dozens of "You're next" cards which he can send out to all his little friends.

"INVESTIGATIVE REPORTER"

Brand new this year. This kit includes a typewriter, note pad and pencil and a list of the ten best places to hide while listening to your friends talk to each other. (You may also get to hear what they really think of you.)

"SOUTHWEST COMMANDO"

In this age old game you get to do whatever you want to because mommy and daddy aren't watching.

"PORNO"

Comes complete with camera, projector and several masks. The trick is trying to find a drug store that will develop the film.

"THE STRETCHING PANTS"

With these pants you can eat and eat and eat and they'll keep stretching. That way you'll never know how much weight you're gaining. These pants also come with the booklet, "2,000 reasons to eat, other than being hungry."

and finally,

"PEOPLE-WATCHING" (inspired by the column of the same name)

This game includes several teams. The people watchers, the people watching the people watchers, and the people watching the people who are watching the people watchers. Not really too much happens in this game. Just a lot of watching.

Motor vehicle caravan

To the Editor:

The UMASS Coalition for Environmental Quality is currently organizing students from the Five College area and citizens from Western Massachusetts to form a motor vehicle caravan to the upcoming Seabrook, N.H. anti-nuclear rally, scheduled for 1 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 23.

The rally, sponsored by the Clamshell Alliance, will take place at Hampton Beach State Park, Hampton, N.H. The rally will feature music, plays, alternative energy displays, and guest speakers; Leo Goodman, a long-time nuclear activist, and Richard Grossman, coordinator of Environmentalists for Full Employment, of Washington, D.C., will address the gathering. Shortly afterwards, Clamshell representatives of several neighboring towns and counties in Massachusetts and New Hampshire will bicycle six miles to the site of the proposed Seabrook nuke to present Public Service Company officials with signed petitions denouncing the construction of the plant. The rally is expected to draw upwards of 2,500 people.

All those wishing to DRIVE to the rally are asked to attend a brief pre-trip meeting, Thurs., Oct. 21, at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 803. All those wishing to attend the rally but who cannot drive are asked to submit their name to the CEQ office, room 306 of the Student Union Building, or call 545-0618. Riders will be assigned to drivers with available space on a first-come, first-serve basis. Please submit all applications for rides no later than 6:00 p.m. on Thursday night, Oct. 21. Riders are asked to share expenses with the driver.

All drivers and participants are asked to meet in parking lot 33, across the street from the Whitmore Administration building on the UMASS campus. We will be leaving from Amherst at 9:00 a.m. sharp.

Further information can be obtained by stopping at the CEQ table on the Campus Center Concourse or by calling Kevin [584-8152], Pete [584-0569], Carol [546-4696], or Damon [546-4667].

The people, united, will never be defeated.

Damon Thomas, UMASS CEQ.

Rent control town issue

To the Editor:

This Wednesday evening Amherst Town Meeting will be voting on several issues that affect us all as residents of Amherst.

These issues are:

1. Whether or not Rent Control will become law in Amherst.
2. Whether or not more than four unrelated people can live together legally in a residential dwelling.
3. Whether tenants will have control over security deposits or if the landlords will continue to have the power to do what they want with money that is not legally theirs.

These issues are important to all of us since either we ourselves or our friends have had to deal with the frustrations and expenses of renting apartments in Amherst. According to a study recently completed by the Amherst Planning Board, over the last half decade the vacancy rate in Amherst has been one of the lowest in Mass. [1.1 per cent]. A vacancy rate of 6 to 8 per cent is normally considered adequate enough to allow those renting to move about freely and choose apartments they can afford. It is obvious therefore, that the housing market in Amherst is very tight. As a result, we as residents face spiralling rents, deteriorating housing conditions, and a lack of power in the face of landlords.

This condition does not have to continue. We can gain control over our own security deposits, we can win the right to live in collectives of more than four people without facing the threat of eviction, and most important of all, we can get Rent Control in Amherst. If you feel strongly about these issues, attend Town Meeting Wednesday evening and tell Town Meeting reps how you want them to vote. If we join together we can get results!!!

Sat. energy fair

To the Editor:

The Clamshell Alliance, a New England wide organization trying to halt construction of the Seabrook nuclear plant is sponsoring an alternative energy fair at the Hampton Beach State Park in New Hampshire on October 23. The fair will include speakers, workshops, solar energy devices, literature stands, films and slide shows, a theater presentation, music and more.

A bicycle parade will depart from the park with representatives from the regions that have signed petitions to halt the Seabrook construction. The cyclists and others in autos will ride the seven miles from the park to the construction site where the petitions will be handed over to an official and a proclamation will be made for continued non-violent action to stop the nuke.

The Clamshell Alliance, formed with the purpose of halting the construction of the proposed 2300 megawatt nuclear generating facility has maintained a philosophy of non-violent direct action in all its efforts, wherever they have been, to achieve its goal.

In February of this year, an apple picker from New Hampshire sat on a make-shift platform he constructed for 36 hours to publicize not only his, but thousands of people's opposition to the building of the proposed nuclear plant. In March, Seabrook residents voted down the plant 768—632, but Public Service Company pushed ahead with the groundbreaking, calling the town vote "non-binding." During the next four months, marches, sit-ins, one-to-one dialogues, and legal interventions [in Washington, D.C.] were used as tactics to halt construction. Civil disobedience on August 1st and 22nd was carried through as a physical statement of the activity people united are willing to take.

The October 23 alternative energy fair is another example of the kind of activity people are willing to take in educating the greatest number of people possible. It is expected that people will leave the energy fair better informed on the nuclear issue, and that they will be better able to decide what action, if any, they wish to take in carrying through their decisions.

Bowling needs support

To the Editor:

The Bowling Club has been in existence for about 5 years. The men's team has been budgeted for about 4 years, the women's team for 2 years. We have always been considered a recreational sport so we were listed as being part of the recreation committee of the Program Council. Last spring the Club was told by the former president of the Program Council that it would receive the same budget this year. At a Program Council meeting this fall, no indication was given that the Club would not receive the budget. In fact the schedule for upcoming events and last year's spending was asked for. So why 5 days before our first tournament was the Bowling Club told it had no money, except for the ACU-I's?

The Bowling Club belongs to the Tri-State Bowling League which is sanctioned by the American Bowling Congress and the Women's International Bowling Congress Collegiate Divisions. To continue to belong to the league and to produce winning teams, the Bowling Club must have their budget reinstated. We ask for support of everyone at UMass. Please sign a petition to reinstate funds for the Bowling Club.

"Good morning Mr. President. Did you sleep well?"

"Huh, oh, good morning Henry. Not really. I dreamed that I was a sheriff on an island resort and that a killer shark with huge white, flashing teeth was terrorizing the island's voters and lusting after the women swimmers. "Ya, zey zung sat on ze Titanic. Ah vell, vat would you like for breakfast, Mr. President? Kielbasa?"

views on abortion

The pro-life contradictions

By KEVIN KNOBLOCH

I still remember the horry story of a woman performing a self induced abortion and ending up in the hospital. An emotional and often frantic attempt to rid herself of an unwanted pregnancy would end in internal bleeding, shock, and sometimes death. This memory makes me realize how a Constitutional amendment prohibiting abortion would be and I wonder if it would have any effect at all.

In 1975 there were one million legal abortions performed in the United States and fifty million world-wide. The majority of these operations were done in a clean, healthy environment by licensed doctors with the aid of trained counselors and nurses. Pro-life advocates have described these figures as an "abortion epidemic," and argue that an amendment would drastically cut down the number of abortions in the U.S. It is here that I beg to differ.

An amendment outlawing abortion would have several effects. Several thousand women who would have previously considered abortion as an alternative will be frightened away. The careers of hundreds of doctors who insist they have a right to continue performing abortions will be ruined by legal prosecution.

But the amendment would not stop abortion. The alarming scenario of ten years ago, before the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion happened along, will return. Millions of dollars, at extreme inflationary rates, will be pumped into the abortionist's black market, restoring it to the prominence it enjoyed before 1973. Women demanding abortion, and they will be numerous, will be able to count on unsanitary conditions, unskilled surgeons, unsympathetic middlemen, and a constant threat to their health. The professional doctors that continue to offer their services under such a ban will be expensive, hard to find, and under extreme pressure, but they also will be numerous.

It seems to me that one's position on the abortion issue is irrelevant here. Women who feel strongly against abortion will refrain from obtaining one, but those who want an abortion can and will receive one, regardless of any legislation. Therefore, impressing the anti-abortion view into a law governing all would hardly change any opinions.

Just as the Prohibition Amendment during the 1920's and 1930's failed, so would the proposed amendment fail today. People still consumed alcohol, only the atmosphere smelled of wealthy black marketeers, numerous cases of blindness and death resulting from bad alcohol, and countless arrests.

Groups such as the Roman Catholic Church (led by the Respect Life Committee) and the Right to Life organization have little to gain from the amendment except self congratulations and moral satisfaction that they have saved the rights of millions of unborn children. They present an honorable argument, but do they really think abortion would magically disappear? They will not have stopped the rights of the unborn children from being infringed upon and ignored, but instead only rationalized why a woman should be denied a safe legal abortion. Unborn children will still be aborted and pregnant women will subject themselves to those who make money at the expense of their health, and have little concern over their welfare.

Anti-abortion organizations can only alienate people from their cause by seeking legislation. A more effective method may be education, both scientific and moral, about the rights of an unborn fetus, when human life actually begins, and rebuilding the respect for life that seems to be escaping us in this twentieth century. Of course I realize that the "education" method, in preference to legislation, has never been one of great success.

India recently became a prime example of this when they attempted to educate the people about the dangers of overpopulation and in frustration restored to forced sterilization as a means of birth control. But, India is not the United States and abortion is voluntary where forced sterilization is not. The education of the masses seems to offer much more hope than a Constitutional amendment, and must be seriously considered. The proposed legislation could only bring back the horror of the days when abortion was illegal.

Reverse sexism?

There is no such thing as 'reverse sexism' when you define sexism as one sex having concrete powers over the other. Yet this is a phrase that is being used over and over again, by some men who feel that they have been slighted. One often hears a man cry 'reverse sexism' when he has been discouraged from attending a women's function, denied entrance to a women-related conference, or disqualified from a job opportunity to allow a woman the job. Prejudice, maybe; reverse sexism, no!

More people have to realize the importance of women being together, alone together, in a non-intimidating atmosphere, where we can relax and enjoy being with each other. A 'separatist' function such as a women's dance, does just that, and alleviates the tension resultant of having men around. Many women have to tap extra energy in order to cope with men, on any level. For many women, the presence of men in an otherwise all women's event, presents problems that would not be there. Lots of women have to work at being nice to most men. Living in a male-dominated and oriented society is a 24 hour job, and we need time off. Men also need time together, without the presence of women.

Last year there was much consternation over the exclusion of men from a "Women and Violence" conference. The purpose of the event was to provide a relaxing environment in which women could discuss their feelings and thoughts about violent actions directed towards them by individual men. The violence women experience ranges from rape and beatings, to being grabbed in a bar by a stranger. Considering the subject, it was necessary to exclude men from the conference, or the purpose of the afternoon would have been defeated. Clearly, it is hard enough to deal with violence and consequent feelings, without having men around to complicate matters.

Granted, men and women have to teach each other about the manifestations of sexism and figure out ways to alleviate the problems, but women have to learn from and teach one another first, on matters such as these. Then we can help men understand.

Affirmative Action has caused many problems in the past few years among some white males who feel that they have been shafted. 'AA' is a federal law that requires employers to recruit, employ and promote women and Third World people. This simply means that if a man and woman are applying for the same job, the employer should hire the applicant who isn't a white male. In the event that a woman or Third World person doesn't have quite the same qualifications a man might, the employer should lower the job qualifications to allow them an opportunity to advance.

It is important to realize that this is not reverse sexism, as some would quickly coin it. Women and Third World people have not had the opportunities to advance to the levels that most white men have had over the years. Employment opportunities, admissions to colleges and universities, and societal prejudices have slowed everyone down, except the white male, that society caters to. It's a shame that a law has to be created to 'guarantee' equality in employment practices, but we have to start somewhere. If we were to wait for society to offer equal opportunities in all realms of life to women and Third World people, jobs would continue to be filled by white men for too long a time.

'Reverse sexism' is a farce, because women have virtually no power over men, not politically, religiously or institutionally... our day will come when at the very least, we are given a fair shake.

Former king found unconscious

NEW DELHI, India [UPI] — The former king of Sikkim, who wed New York socialite Hope Cooke in 1963, was found unconscious in his palace Tuesday apparently as the result of an overdose of sleeping pills, the Indian news agency reported.

The Samachar news agency said Palden Thondup Namgyal, former Chogyal king of the Himalayan state on the rooftop of the world which was annexed by India last year, had been flown to a nursing home in Calcutta.

"The prognosis is uncertain," said attending physician Dr. Amal Kumal Bose, according to Samachar. The 53-year-old former king was reported still unconscious late Tuesday evening.

Namgyal became king of the 40-mile-wide and 80-mile-long nation in 1963 a few months after marrying Miss Cooke. Their wedding in a kingdom described by visitors as a "Shangri-la" was the stuff of storybook romances and generated worldwide publicity.

Sikkim had been a protectorate of India since 1950. In 1973, the Chogyal asked for Indian troops to help quell a rebellion against him then agreed to establish a legislative assembly.

In 1974 the Indian parliament made Sikkim an "associate state" and last year organized a referendum, which supporters of the king charged was rigged and which resulted in abolition of the 344-year-old monarchy.

In May, 1975, over the protests of Namgyal, India formally incorporated Sikkim as its 22nd state. The nation is a strategic buffer between India and China, which protested the annexation.

The king told the newsmen at the time of the referendum that he was under house arrest but Indian officials said troops were stationed around the palace to protect the former monarch from a possible uprising against him.

India has tightly controlled access to Sikkim, which has a population of 200,000 persons, and has rejected the requests of most journalists to visit there. It has now announced that even citizens of Nepal, which borders Sikkim, will need special permission to visit, although most Sikkimese are of Nepali origin.

Hope Cooke Namgyal left Sikkim for New York in 1973 and took the couple's two children with her. The king said she left because of continual attacks by his enemies, who accused her of urging him to make the protectorate more independent of India.

Last June, President Ford signed a bill granting her permanent residence in the United States. She had renounced her U.S. citizenship at the time of her marriage to the king.

Seal's fans sponsor flight

ROCKPORT, Maine [AP] Fans of Andre the trained seal have made it possible for him to take his first plane trip.

Trainer Harry Goodridge of Rockport Monday said the 15-year-old pet seal would fly in a stripped down charter plane to his winter habitat, the New England Aquarium in Boston.

In past years Andre has been taken by van, but Goodridge said the flight would cut travelling time from four hours to about 50 minutes.

Goodridge said visitors who watched Andre perform here during the summer took up a collection to buy Andre a new cage. Funds were put into a separate bank account, and once the cage was purchased there was enough money left to pay the $270 fare.

Goodridge said Andre is scheduled to leave on Nov. 16 from Knox County Regional Airport at Owls Head for Logan International Airport.

Andre, whom Goodridge raised from a pup, for the past several years has wintered at the Boston aquarium.

Celebrated oceanographer and scholar visits UMass

Distinguished oceanographer and scholar Dr. Roger Revelle will visit UMass tomorrow and Friday, under the Phi Beta Kappa Visiting Scholar program.

The past president of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography and presently the Richard Saltonstall Professor of Population Policy at Harvard, Revelle will deliver the principal lecture of his visit, "The Ghost of Parson Malthus," at 8 p.m., tomorrow in Room 20, Hasbrouck Laboratory.

During his years as professor of oceanography and director of the Scripps Institute, Revelle led a number of deep-sea expeditions in the Pacific that won him the National Academy of Sciences Agassiz Medal for "outstanding achievement in oceanography" in 1963.

Long a proponent of international scientific cooperation, Revelle helped found the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission.

He was appointed the first chairman of the U.S. National Committee for the International Biological Program, and was also vice-chairman of the U.S. National Commission for UNESCO.

Since assuming his position at Harvard, Revelle has focused his studies on using science and technology to help less developed countries, emphasizing the interactions among rapidly growing populations, their resources and their environment.

Revelle will also speak with several classes and seminars during his visit. Those meetings are also open to the public and are scheduled as follows:

Tomorrow:

—10 a.m. — Coffee Hour, Herter 6th Floor Lounge.

—1 p.m. — "Man and Ocean Resources," meeting with Oceanography and Biological Problems classes, Hasbrouck 20.

— 8 p.m. — "The Ghost of Parson Malthus," Hasbrouck 20.

Friday:

—9:05 — "Are We Running Out of Resources?" meeting with World Food Class, Engineering East Auditorium.

"'The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum' is about the systematic victimization of a proud young woman. A politicized Bonnie Parker. A movie that looks as if it had been made out of steel. It is cold and bright and has dozens of lethal edges."
"Whips a liberal audience into a frenzy. There's something in the movie for any sane person to applaud. It speaks of the fascist potential of a police force within a democracy, most of all, it dramatizes a sexism so virulent it can kill."

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, October 20 — Born today, you are one of those romantic idealists who is inclined to take on more than can possibly be handled by a single individual. You have the mistaken notion that whatever you undertake, you can accomplish, whereas in actuality, you must be careful not to shoulder too much responsibility, for you are neither physically nor mentally suited to the stress and strain of tight schedules and dove-tailed activities. You need sufficient time each day to recover your physical energy and your mental alertness; without that time, you are inclined to suffer bodily fatique and mental depression, both of which will preclude your success.

You are not easy to please in terms of your own performance. You are, however, quite flexible in your standards when it comes to the work of others, for you are not inclined to demand nearly as much of your fellows as you are of yourself. Where your own work is concerned, you have a fixed and absolute scale upon which you habitually measure yourself; where others are concerned, you take into consideration all manner of extenuating circumstances -- including some that don't really exist. In short, you are a hard taskmaster -- but only of yourself.

You enjoy the company of others, especially of those who have already proven successful in their chosen professions. At the same time, however, you need to be alone and find yourself growing ever more irritable, even angry, as time passes and you are not able to get away from others long enough to gather your own thoughts and emotions together.

Thursday, October 21

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Allow your inventive mind free rein today and you may find yourself coming up with original ideas of great commercial value.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — A little personal effort goes a long way toward the establishment of good relationships with new acquaintances. Be open-minded.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Take care that you don't magnify the ill feelings of another simply as a result of your own ill will. Rest late in the day.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Hurtful situations arise early in the day; if you are wise you will back away without delay. Risk of physical harm is great.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18 — You may well be more stirred emotionally than you had bargained for today. A meeting with an old friend proves trying in the evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — If you insist upon crawling into your shell as a result of recent criticism, you may lose all you have gained up until now.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your basic tenacity will keep you moving toward your goal in spite of difficult hours today. Redirect energy away from old endeavors.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — An exceedingly sensitive reaction to another's difficulties may make it impossible for you to come to the rescue. Employ reason.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Unless you have selected the right marriage partner, this promises to be a difficult day. Try to restore peace on the home front.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A disagreement with another may be something of a shock to you this morning. Give another the impression, at least, that you are a peace-loving individual.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A trying situation tests your reaction time. Don't be disappointed with yourself as the day draws to a close.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Offer congratulations to one who has succeeded where you have failed. Your ease with words should help you in this.

Fall baseball looks to spring

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Back in the middle of September, coach Dick Bergquist of the UMass baseball team explained why his squad played during the fall.

"The purposes of fall baseball are to find and identify the ballplayers on campus, to try to fit a team together for next spring, and to give the players some more experience playing ball," he said.

Bergquist did not list winning among his main objectives, but he might well have, considering how his team performed this season. The Minutemen finished their fall campaign with an 11-8, 3-0 doubleheader sweep last over Dartmouth Friday, which upped their final overall record to 8-3.

"I wasn't really concerned with our won-lost record," Bergquist maintained. "I was more interested in evaluating players, experimenting, and giving the people a chance to hit in game-type situations."

Although the season is now over, the Minutemen are still practicing this week.

"We're still in the process of evaluating," Bergquist explained. "We still don't have all of our questions answered. But now we're stressing more individual things, such as infield drills and double plays."

But the coach has ironed out a few of his nagging worries. After seeing three-quarters of his starting infield, his entire catching corps, his leading hitter, and ace starting pitcher graduate last May, Bergquist was faced with a monumental rebuilding job. But after witnessing how some potential key players for next season performed this fall, it will be a more pleasant winter for him to face.

Jim Cullen, the only returning infielder, was moved to shortstop from his third base spot by the coach. He responded by leading the team in batting with a .514 average.

"Cullen showed that he could play a college-type shortstop and be a leader with the bat," Bergquist said.

Other impressive players were Ed Skribiski (.357) who played both second base and short, and veteran centerfielder Bavel Cummings (.362).

In addition, second baseman Mike Stockley (.313), who played with the JVs last year, was a "pleasant surprise", while freshman pitcher Doug Welenc lived up to his advance billing with an 0.86 ERA.

Returnee Jeff Reardon led the club with a spotless 0.00 ERA, but pitched only six innings due to arm problems, while Dave Stoller (another promoted JV) had a fine 2.37 ERA.

Netwomen victorious; singles play strong

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The women's varsity tennis team beat Southern Connecticut 5-4 yesterday afternoon, and now stand at 4-3 on the season. The women are above 500 for the first time in two years.

No. 1 singles player Jennifer "Yukon" Ranz beat Conn.'s Kathy Meyer 6-2, 6-2. Ranz lost her first two matches this year, but has gone unbeaten since then. Dawn Minaai continued her fine play in the second position, beating Diane Brown 6-3, 6-2. Steady Carolyn Mooney won again in the third position, with 6-2, 6-1 victories over Lynn Leventhal. No. 4 player Kathy Sullivan suffered the only singles defeat of the day, she was beaten 3-6, 3-6 by Karen Vasile. Martha "Klondike" Awiszus was unbeatable, as she has been all season, easily topping Debbie Didato 6-1, 6-0. Debbie Halpern, who consistently comes off the bench to score a victory for the Minutewomen, played in the sixth singles position and defeated Diane Levitt 6-2, 6-1.

All three doubles teams were defeated as a result of what Coach Ken Rubin called, "just plain old lousy play." The losses snapped a 7 match doubles winning streak. The no. 1 team of Nancy O'Neil and Karen Holt lost their first match of the season 5-7, 2-6 to Paula Fitzgerald and Mary Sherer. A makeshift second team consisting of Leslie Howell and Caron Tsapatsaris lost to Sarah Curry and May Danbergs 3-6, 1-6. The third team of Susanne Boissevan and Sue Store lost for the first time also. Southern Conn.'s Holly Schaefer and Joy Rootkowski came out on top, 6-7, 6-3, 6-4.

Rubin was unhappy with the doubles play, "Their strategy was good, they just made bad shots. We'll have some extra workouts tomorrow, and I think I'll have my regular no. 2 team of Leslie Howeli and Jeanette Flynn back together." The women travel to UConn Thursday afternoon for a 3 o'clock match.

11-15, 15-9. Although it took Cent. Conn. three games to down the Minutewomen, Thompson hinted that the scores were deceiving.

"They wiped us out in the first game," Thompson said. "They substituted freely in the second game, figuring we were push overs. We took the lead so they brought back their starters, to no avail."

Thompson also substituted freely in the second game — too freely, in fact. She made 13 substitutions, one more than the rules allow. Cent. Conn received a point for Thompson's error. However, one point was not enough to kill UMass' momentum in the second game.

Cent. Conn., back to normal with all their starters in, won the final game with little trouble, 15-9.

"Central Connecticut was very strong," said Thompson. "We couldn't receive serve," she added.

The spikers lost two consecutive games to So. Conn. 15-12 and 15-9.

"They were very, very good games," Thompson said.

Southern Connecticut.

According to Davidson a few of the reasons for the outstanding team play, was the shifting of Meliones from left inner to right inner, and the consistent assists by Ginger Bullman and Sue Kibling.

However, for the sixth straight time, the second half proved to be the downfall for the stickers.

They managed to get off only one shot in the second half, while Gipps was stopping 12 shots by the So. Connecticut stickers.

"We were lucky, they could have scored three goals just like we did, they came out very strong in the second half," commented Davidson.

Davidson attributed the main problem of the second half drabs to the poor endurance of the Minutewomen.

"I never give a conditioning practice the day before a game, and last week we had three games, so we didn't have a chance to practice, said Davidson. "This week we will have a chance to hold some conditioning practices."

WPI nips UM booters, 1-0

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

The UMass soccer team was hurt by its inability to put the ball in the net as the Minutemen were edged by Worcester Polytechnical Institute, 1-0, in a game played yesterday on a chilly afternoon at Boyden Field.

John Pavlos' goal at 29:46 was the only score of the day.

"I'd give my right arm for someone to put the ball in the net," said UMass coach Russ Kidd. "We had our chances early in the game, but so did they."

UMass dominated play early in the half. Raffi Donoyan had a good scoring opportunity, but his shot went wide of WPI goalie Bob Grochmal. Later, Tony Biladeau displayed some fancy footwork as he maneuvered around some WPI fullbacks and fired a low hard shot, but Grochmal was in position to make the save.

The Engineers came to life when Leo Kaabi sent Pavlos in all alone on UMass goalie Mark Hodgdon and scored.

The Minutemen seemed to lose some of their steam after the goal, as the Engineers continued to apply pressure.

Pavlos scored another goal late in the first half, but it was nullified as Norito Endo was ruled offside.

Mark Hanks replaced Hodgdon in goal in the second half because the latter twisted an ankle in the first.

UMass had some good opportunities to tie the game early in the second half, but the WPI defense was equal to the task.

Mike Shannon passed the ball to Tony Biladeau, but his shot just missed going in the lower right corner. WPI also missed a goal on a direct kick when the shot was just wide of Hanks. Late in the game, WPI's John Lukus fired a bullet that hit the crossbar.

The Minutemen tried desperately to get something going, but the game ended in frustration for them. Ed Niemiec, who missed four games with an ankle injury, returned to action in the second half.

WPI took 19 shots to 17 for UMass. Hodgdon had four saves and Hanks had five. Grochmal, who shut UMass out 1-0 last year, had only four saves.

"I was afraid something like this would happen," said Kidd. "The overtime loss at Rhode Island took a lot out of the team."

The booters are in action again on Saturday when they host a very tough University of Connecticut team at 11:00 a.m.

BOOTER BANTER: A tip of the hat to Cindy LaBorde, who keeps score for the soccer team and compiles the statistics.... The UMass junior varsity fared better than varsity as it defeated WPI's sub-varsity, 1-0. Coach Gary McKenna's men are now 4-2 on the season, including a win over Stockbridge last week.

The ball just didn't roll the Minutemen's way yesterday as the booters lost a heartbreaker to Worcester Polytechnic, 1-0 at the Boyden field. (Staff photo by Laurie Traub)

McDermott leads linksters to third N.E. championship

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The men's golf team, led by sophomore Jimmy McDermott, swept to their third straight New England championship yesterday at a cold and windy New Seabury CC.

The linksters finished with a two-day total of 326-314-640, a pretty good score when the weather is considered. Boston College, playing on their home course, finished second, only four strokes back at 644. Central Conn wound up third, with a score of 648.

The four stroke victory by the Minutemen can be largely credited to the spectacular play of McDermott. All he did was shoot 74 yesterday, and win the low medalist honors in a dramatic playoff.

After shooting an 80 on Monday, a day when only five scores under 80 were turned in, McDermott shot a tremendous 74 on the second day. The score was good enough to enable him to tie for low medalist after the regulation 36 holes.

In the playoff, McDermott sank a crucial 20 foot putt for a birdie on the first extra hole. On the second, he played a fine trap shot, and holed-out for par, while his opponent, Phil Pleat from UNH took a bogie.

"Jimmy had a super tournament, and deserves a lot of credit," said a very satisfied coach Fan Gaudette. "He's played very well all year for us."

Backing up McDermott, were Bob Sanderson, Tim Diskin, Flynt Lincoln, and Bill Locke.

Freshman Flynt Lincoln turned in one of the rare sub-80 rounds on Monday, a 79. He shot an 84 on Tuesday, for a 163 total. Co-captain Bobby Sanderson went 83-78-161, while senior Bill Locke, played well in the fifth position, shooting 84-81-165.

Co-captain Tim Diskin, had an atrocious first day, shooting a 96. He rebounded very well though, and shot an 81 yesterday for a 177 total.

The scoring was best four of five scores each day, therefore Diskin's 96 on Monday did not count, nor did Lincoln's 84 yesterday.

Coach Gaudette was very pleased with the victory, in light of the two somewhat disappointing performances of the past week. "We didn't play tremendously well, but we did play well enough to win."

"The weather was just terrible, it was cold and windy, around 30 degrees. With those conditions, I'd say we did pretty well." said Gaudette.

The problem of consistency, one that has plagued the linksters in their last two matches, was less of a problem yesterday, as the scores were generally better on the second day. The ability to play well in tight situations, has been a hallmark of this team all season.

"We were very consistent today, our scores were good enough to win," said Gaudette.

Spikers split games; outing pleases coach

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The women's volleyball team did "better than expected" according to coach Diane Thompson in a quad-match last night at Southern Connecticut winning over the University of Bridgeport while losing to Central Connecticut and So. Conn.

"I'm really pleased," Thompson said about the spikers performance last night. "The women played very well."

Thompson said she was upset upon arriving at So. Conn because the JV matches were cancelled. This proved to be a blessing in disguise for Thompson used JV players in the spikers 15-10, 15-6 victory over Bridgeport. Apparently it worked out well

"JV's Mandradous and McGrath were substituted freely along with Sue Sabia and Joan Wotkowicz. They saw lots of action and played well," Thompson said.

The substitutes frequently relieved starters Lynn Decosmo, Heidi Dickson, Jayne Greenburg, Deb Kusdeba, Diane Bunker-Hannula and Shelly Soules.

Although Thompson said the girls played well in all three matches, she had special praise for Diane Bunker-Hannula and Jayne Greenberg.

"Diane showed lots of hustle. She played heads-up ball," Thompson said. "Greenberg was a standout setter."

Reds romp again; DH Driessen stars

NEW YORK [UPI] — The Cincinnati Reds, who have accused the designated hitter rule of ruining baseball, Tuesday night used the weapon to destroy the New York Yankees when their own DH, Dan Driessen, rapped out a single, double and homer to spark a 6-2 triumph that gave the Reds a commanding three games to nothing lead in the World Series.

The Reds now need just one more triumph in the best-of-seven series to become the first National League team in 54 years to win back-to-back world championships. The Yankees, who have won 20 World Series, would have to win four games in a row to win the Series and no team has ever come from three games behind to win.

It was ironic that Driessen was the hero since if it hadn't been for the designated hitter rule he would not have played in this series. Reds' manager Sparky Anderson was so vehemently opposed to the DH that he had toyed with the idea of not using one. But he gave in out of respect for his club and Driessen, the only man ever to serve as a DH for the National League, has come through superbly.

After having gone 2-for-8 in the first two games, Driessen managed a perfect 3-for-3 Tuesday night and scored twice to spark the victory. In the second inning he beat out a controversial infield hit to touch off a three-run rally, in the fourth he cracked a long homerun into the right field stands and in the sixth he doubled, although he was left stranded.

By the eighth inning the Yankees had earned such respect for him that he got an intentional walk to load the bases, setting up a run-scoring single by George Foster. Foster earlier had doubled home a pair of runs in the second inning.

Gipps earns shutout; stickers win again

By JAY SARET
Collegian Staff

For the second consecutive game, the women's field hockey team held its opponents scoreless, enabling the Minutewomen to breeze through another victory in defeating Southern Connecticut 3-0.

"There's no way I can describe how well we played today," commented coach Judith Davidson, "Everything was working."

UMass broke the game open in the first half, something which is becoming a trait of the Minutewomen's attack.

Cheryl Meliones opened the scoring attack with a goal in the first half. She also scored the second goal of the game, giving UMass a two goal lead, and giving Meliones her fourth and fifth consecutive goals for the Minutewomen.

Meliones scored the second, third and fourth goals in UMass' 4-0 trouncing of Worcester St.

Julie McHugh put the finishing touches on with a goal, UMass' third of the first half, giving them a 3-0 lead at half-time.

UMass' second half resembled the ones of the past, as they managed to get off only one shot-on-goal, but thanks to some outstanding goaltending on the part of Kathy Gipps, held on for a 3-0 victory.

The win upheld coach Davidson's words of last game that "we will not lose another game this year."

When asked to respond to that statement, Davidson said, "We can beat anyone as well as we played first half, if people relax and keep their heads."

Getting back to that first half, the Minutewomen sent 16 shots at Southern Connecticut, compared with the three shots-on-goal by

A ramble down memory lane

In the spirit of this bicentennial year and the re-living of famous and historic events from our past, here, in the spirit of the bicentennial, is a nostalgic look at a famous sports event.

It's been almost one year to the day when the Reds and Red Sox met in the sixth game of the 1975 World Series. After the disappointing year the Red Sox had this year, you can't help but look back to that one famous game.

After four days of torrential rains and raw weather, the heavens opened up, the skies cleared and a gentle summer-like southwest breeze prevailed. It was as if Indian summer was making her last call on the New England area.

It was just a beautiful night for a baseball game.

Outside Boston's Fenway Park, ticket scalpers lurked in the darkening shadows, making last minute deals with prospective clients as the crowd of over 35,000 slowly entered the park.

Unlike the prior World Series games held in Boston, there seemed to be something missing in the crowd as it entered the park. The exciting atmosphere of the Series prevailed among the people, but it seemed as if they were going to pay a final tribute to their home team — the Red Sox.

Trailing in the Series, 3-2, the Red Sox were on the verge of elimination, and the nervous and tense crowd portrayed the anxiety of the situation as it sat back quietly.

Suddenly, a surge of applause and the chant of "Loo-Eee, Loo-Eee" permeated through the stands as the pudgy little pitcher of the Red Sox, Luis Tiant, strolled into the dugout from the rightfield bullpen, receiving a hero's ovation.

The crowd was tense and on the edge of its seats in the first inning, until Fred Lynn cracked a three-run home run in the bottom of the first off Reds' pitcher Gary Nolan.

The anxiety of the crowd then disappeared as everybody sat back and enjoyed the performance Tiant was displaying as he strongly mowed down the Reds.

Then in the fifth inning, anxiety filled the air once again when Lynn crashed into the center-field wall attempting to catch a shot off the bat of Ken Griffey. Down and motionless in centerfield, Lynn drew a complete hush from the Fenway crowd. Nobody said a word as they held their breath. Lynn rose to his feet and the crowd gave a sigh of relief and gave Lynn an appreciative ovation.

Nevertheless, the damage was done. The Reds tied the game, 3-3. In the seventh inning the Reds picked up two more runs and in the eighth they got one more. It appeared the Reds had the title all wrapped up, as they led, 6-3.

After Cesar Geronimo homered in the eighth inning, Red Sox manager Darrell Johnson replace the tiring Tiant, who received a thunderous ovation and the chant of "Loo-Eee, Loo-Eee".

The game now seemed to be in the hands of the Reds. It was now just a matter of time.

Then in the bottom of the eighth Bernie Carbo stepped up to the plate as a pinch-hitter, and rocketed the ball into the delirious centerfield bleachers to tie the score, 6-6.

Triumphantly Carbo strutted around the bases and was mobbed by his teammates at home plate. The Sox still had a life.

The crowd was now completely delirious and was on the verge of madness as relief pitcher Dick Drago put the Reds down in order in the ninth.

With the crowd on its feet for the ninth inning, Boston started what looked to be a winning rally, only to falter due to baserunning mistakes. It was now on to extra innings.

No longer was the crowd quiet. It roared on every pitch, hit, or out. On and on the game went. When was it going to end? Who was going to win?

It was nearing one in the morning, when Boston's Carlton Fisk led off the bottom of the 12th inning. Wasting little time, Fisk stroked the first pitch off the left field foul pole to win it for the Boston Red Sox, forcing a seventh game.

What happened on that night and after, is now just history.

Vets face controls here

By JOE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

UMass is taking steps to introduce new controls into the enrollment and matriculation of student veterans in the wake of reports that there have been overpayments to veterans attending Massachusetts schools.

Some $267,000 may have been overpaid to veterans here in the past 10 years, James Chandless, adjudication officer for the Veterans Administration (VA) in Boston confirmed yesterday.

The overpayments are part of some $10 million that was overpaid to Vietnam era war veterans under the G.I. Bill since 1966, The Boston Herald American reported yesterday in a copyrighted story.

The Herald story said more than 25,000 veterans and "scores" of colleges, universities, and post-secondary schools are being held liable for the overpayments.

Careless administration at the colleges and universities in the state is the major cause of the overpayments, Chandless said. He said many schools failed to report changes in the enrollment status of veterans until the end of the school year which resulted in up to nine months of overpayment to either veterans or the schools.

Daniel M. Melley, director of public relations at UMass, said yesterday that he is "unaware" of charges made by the VA against UMass. He said that Arthur Hilson, director of the Veterans office in Whitmore Administration Building, will conduct hearings on the cases of some 20 students who may have received overpayments in the past.

Melley said the changes in administrative procedures were made in the UMass Veterans Affairs office in the last month in an attempt to avoid future overpayments to veterans. He said the staff has been "beefed up" to allow the office to make manual monthly checks on the status of each student who is receiving veterans benefits.

In the past, according to Melley, a student was required to apply for the G.I. benefits once and would receive benefits for 36 months without having to reapply as long as the student was making progress toward a degree.

Now, Melley said, students will be required to reapply on a routine basis to the VA for the money.

"Our people feel we are doing the best that we possibly can at this point with the new controls. The paperwork has increased incredibly," Melley said.

Rent control stifled in town meeting

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
and JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

A rent control measure was defeated by a wide margin last night at the second session of the Amherst Special Town Meeting.

It was the third time in two years a rent control proposal has been defeated by Town Meeting members.

Vincent J. O'Connor of the Amherst Tenants Association said the group will attempt to put the issue to a town-wide referendum in mid-November.

A modified rent control article from the Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee LTRC to establish an Amherst Fair Rent Commission was also defeated, 88 to 71.

Town meeting members voted to adopt the nine-section Agricultural Development Rights Program designed "to preserve agricultural land in the town, as well as voting town purchase of 38 acres north of Pelham Road in East Amherst for recreation and conservation purposes.

The Town Meeting voted 122 to 67 in favor of the purchase after an hour debate.

The lengthy rent control proposal elicited little vocal opposition from meeting members but was defeated 145 to 44.

Although the deadline for submission of a petition calling for the referendum is next Tuesday at 4:30 p.m., O'Connor said he anticipates no trouble "whatsoever" in getting the five per cent, about 700 people, of the registered voters needed to sign the petition.

O'Connor said although he suspected the article might be defeated he said he was distressed "we did not persuade more people than we did at town meeting."

"I'm appalled there aren't more open-minded people in the town of Amherst," he said.

O'Connor said in his presentation that every town board opposed the rent control article.

Six town meeting members spoke in favor of the article as did three registered voters. No one spoke in open opposition.

"Many people feel this issue is related only to students, hippies, transients", said Town Meeting member Kenneth Mosakowski in support of the article as he introduced an elderly supporter of rent control.

"I'm on a fixed income", said Mrs. Gemma Caprioti. "They sweep my hall once a year, and they won't even sweep the walk when they mow the lawn. I am ashamed to live in an apartment, but I have to because I can not afford a private home".

Mrs. Caprioti said later she "could have told those filthy mugs a lot of things, but I got jittery, so I didn't."

Representative James G. Collins (D-Amherst) voted against the article.

"If we could avoid the enormous amount of governmental red tape, I would vote for rent control," he said. "I prefer the creation of a new committee to study rent control."

He voted "yes" on the modified proposal.

Those interviewed who opposed the article said they were against it because they had trouble with sections of the motion.

An alternative rent control article described as "something less than rent control but more than good will mediation" by a backer on the sponsoring Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee was also defeated.

That Committee is also sponsoring two other articles concerning landlord-tenant relations. However, Judy Eckhouse, LTRC member, said the other options "do not regard the matter of rents."

The article would have established a five-member Fair Rent Commission to determine "whether a rental charge is so excessive with due regard to all circumstances as to be harsh and unconscionable," according to the text of the article.

O'Connor opposed this article as did other supporters of the rent control article sponsored by the Amherst Tenant's Association. "This is their idea of rent control. But what is 'so excessive', and what is 'harsh and unconscionable?" he said.

Senate rejects nomination for Attorney General

By ROBERT DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night rejected 2 unanimous recommendation of the Student Government Association (SGA) Attorney General search committee which had nominated Karen J. Kelly for the position.

After nearly two hours of heated discussion, the committee's nomination was defeated by a 36 to 18 vote. Thirteen senators abstained from voting.

The debate stemmed from a disagreement between SGA co-President Paul M. Cronin and Jay A. Martus on the committee's selection.

Martus said he supported the committee's selection because he felt the two candidates for the position were equally qualified but that the nomination of a woman would "help bring women into the power structure of the SGA."

Cronin said he did not favor the nomination because he felt that another candidate, Paul Yanowitch, had superior qualifications to those of Kelly.

Yanowitch was the acting SGA Attorney General until his term expired at 12 a.m. this morning. The SGA is now without an attorney general.

"The Senate spent two hours last night fighting about one appointment, while not even considering the real issues it should be dealing with. There is now no Attorney General to deal with problems of endangering behavior, theft, vandalism or destruction.

"There is now no Attorney General to asssre that students' rights are being defended nor has the Senate dealt with these issues," said Kelly last night.

Senator Raoul Roach said he felt the affirmative action program has never been followed in the Senate's appointments. "I agree with the position that qualified people should fill the positions that they are qualified for but I think also the Senate must open up to the University community and stop systematically excluding potential candidates for appointed office. In tonight's dispute over the appointment of the Attorney General, the Third World community was obviously not represented on the selection committee," said Roach.

Roach added that he is concerned for his constituency and for the University community. He also said that he will do everything in his power to see that affirmative action guidelines are followed in the future in selections for all SGA offices.

Kelly estimated that it will now take the Senate three to four weeks to appoint someone to the office of Attorney General. She said that she feels this is a severe problem since cases in which SGA policies have been violated cannot be prosecuted until the position is filled.

In other business, the Senate passed two motions that it hopes will build the Student Federal Credit Union (SFCU). One motion called for an investigation into possible investment of the Student Activities Tax Funds into the SFCU while the other motion authorized the treasurer to request the Five-College Coordinating Board to invest all Senate donated monies into the SFCU.

Workers strike at Moe's

Workers at Moe's Restaurant on North Pleasant St. in Amherst picketed yesterday in the first day of the strike brought about by grievances against the management of the establishment.

Workers contend that management had "violated federal law" by interfering with their unionizing activities.

In addition, the workers are protesting the firing of former manager Jerry Hewitt last Sunday.

Observers of the picket line yesterday said that a Teamster's delivery truck refused to cross the striking workers picket line.

A spokesperson for the striking workers said they were prepared to stay out until their grievances were resolved.

Management representatives could not be reached last night for comment.

GSEU head hopeful about union hearings

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

The head of the Graduate Student Employees Union says he is optomistic about the outcome of hearings now being conducted before the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission (MLRC), which will decide if a vote will be taken to determine the existence of a state-recognized union.

The first set of hearings was held Oct. 13, 14 and 15 with both the University and the graduate group presenting arguments. The next set of hearings, concluding the presentations, is scheduled for Nov. 3, 4 and 5. All hearings are conducted at the MLRC office in Boston.

Union Chairperson Michael D. Forster said that because of prior decisions by the commission on similar cases, such as a hospital interns union, he expects a favorable ruling from the commission.

Forster also said he thought the University's presentations seemed to have minimal preparation.

The group, which is seeking to become the collective bargaining agent for graduate research assistants and associates, and teaching assistants and associates, was begun in November, 1975. There are between 1700 to 1900 graduate employees on campus.

According to Forster, the union filed with the labor relations commission last May to schedule the hearings, but the union does not expect a ruling on them for six to eight months. In order to file, the group must have at least 30 per cent of graduate employees as members. Forster declined to reveal current membership.

Forster said the union is not planning to ask for an extension, and if the University also does not, elections could be held in about a year.

During the first set of hearings last week, Forster said the group was trying to establish that without graduate employees, an administrative re-organization would have to occur within the University.

He said the academic departments needed graduate assistants and associates to function under the current administrative process. Forster also said the union presented testimony that graduate employees did not necessarily work in areas of their academic interest, but worked in departments where the University needed them.

Forster said during the hearings, the University argued that graduate assistants and associates were primarily students, and the com-

JS faculty ask for info, want equity after resignation

By CHAS O'CONNOR
Collegian Staff

Close observers of the Journalistic Studies (JS) — English program say that the Monday resignation of program Director Howard M. Ziff could result in the program's eventual separation from the English department.

The Journalistic Studies Committee, responsible for overseeing the JS program, met for more than two and a half hours yesterday and drafted a resolution to send to David R. Clark, head of the English department.

Committee members declined comment on the resolution, but did say that during the meeting they had "regretfully accepted" Ziff's resignation.

JS faculty are concerned, close observers say, that all issues relevant to the resignation be aired. Ralph Whitehead, Jr., associate professor, said that "if we conclude that there has been any unfairness in how the department or Howard has been treated, and remained silent, then that may be regarded as approval of the resignation."

At a meeting Tuesday of the long-range planning committee of the English department, a resolution was sent to Ziff asking him to appear before the committee and discuss his resignation.

Sources in the JS program say that some unreasonable requests may have been made of the program and Ziff himself, which coincides with a long-time sentiment among JS faculty that the program has been operating under oppressive circumstances which have handcuffed faculty members and have proven detrimental to student interests.

Areas of concern among JS program members, faculty and students alike, are based on understaffing and underappropriation for the program, members claim.

The JS program, which has about 250 majors (of which about 240 also are required to major in English), has no secretary, one work-study student, five full-time faculty members and little support in the way of supplies, according to Whitehead.

Whitehead feels the burdens on JS faculty are extraordinary. "We're expected to handle all of our obligations as members of the JS Studies program, as members of the English department, and as members of the profession (journalism)."

"We realize that we have been swimming against the tide of retrenchment," Whitehead says, indicating that over the last five years the JS program has been growing while the rest of the University has been cutting programs to try to hold the line on spending.

Rights Program which will allow local farmers to sell the town the development rights to their farms was adopted by Meeting members.

Board of Selectmen chairperson Nancy Eddy said "the primary purpose of this article is to preserve agriculture."

Speaking in favor of the board-favored article Eddy said, "I can't guarantee that any of the farmland will be developed, but I'm not willing to bet that in 50 years that farmland will still be there."

The program presented last night was the result of a town meeting vote last spring requesting the town to develop such a program.

The program will preserve some farmland from being developed. The town will have no right to public access due to agricultural preservation restrictions. Only owners of eligible farmland in Amherst will participate in the program.

In a related article the town appropriated $5,000 for the appraisal of options for the purchase of farmland development rights.

Some town meeting members expressed concern over the Conservation Commission-sponsored article by saying the commission should be more concerned with the 680 acres already under their jurisdiction before "adding on and adding on and adding on all the time."

Stockbridge Dean stresses stronger student-faculty relations

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

Dean J.W. Dennison, dean of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, stressed the need for stronger communication between students and faculty, students and administration, students and state representatives in a talk given at the Stockbridge Student Senate, last night in the Campus Center.

Regarding the budget, Dennison commented that for the first time agriculture has been noticed by the administration due to more student interest; the University gave the College of Food and Natural Resources "a larger slice of the pie", he said.

"Don't take second best," advised Dennison on the topic of large faculty loss. Professors are stretched to their limits with increased class numbers and additional responsibilities, he said.

The Dean also urged students to inform teachers as to their expectations.

Dennison said he believes a solution could be rendered by using Extension Service people to "bring the real world of business to the Stockbridge students."

Excellent teachers that know their business regardless of education, should be brought into the school, he said. As director of Stockbridge, Dennison said he aims to give students "highest quality, best instruction, and the widest scope possible."

Reporting on the Lotta Crabtree Trust Fund, Dennison said a new trustee recently contacted him, after sixteen years, and wants to reopen the fund to young people in production agriculture in the two and four year schools.

Funds unrelated to discrimination

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last night reported that the $560,000 now in his disposal "bears no connection" to solving inequities in faculty pay because of sex discrimination.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), one organization competing to represent faculty in collective bargaining, last Friday filed a series of legal complaints against University administrators for unlawfully denying UMass female faculty members the opportunity to earn equal pay for equal work.

Joseph S. Larson, president of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) which is the other faculty organization competing to represent faculty in collective bargaining, said yesterday that the money Bromery held would be used to equalize pay inequities because of sex discrimination.

Larson added that he hoped the action by MSP would not interfere with the distribution of this money.

But according to Bromery, this isn't the case at all.

"That money was put aside to make salary adjustments on pay inequities resulted from time of hiring and salary freezes, not sex discrimination," said Bromery.

"What you have is someone hired in 1973 for $13,000 never getting a raise because of the three-year salary freeze and then someone hired this year for $16,000. "To 'heal' this problem is the purpose for the $560,000."

Bromery added that pay inequities because of sex discrimination would be compensated through other funds as soon as they came to his attention.

Female faculty members interviewed last night all agreed, however, that people all along have known of inequities in pay between male and female faculty members.

"It wasn't a surprise to anyone," said Joyce A. Berkman, associate professor of history last night. "It's true nation-wide. Now I'd like to see the appropriate adjustments made."

In many states across the country, this problem of pay inequities because of sex discrimination is being remedied by enacting legislative amendments calling for equity actions for women at state universities. Such legislature has passed in Maryland, Texas, California and Pennsylvania.

Robert D. Bickel, Florida State University attorney in a telephone interview yesterday commented on the legislation.

Bickel said the legislation set up commissions to study employment conditions for women at state higher education institutions. The commission then makes recommendations to each institution to alleviate bad employment practices if any should be evident through the study.

According to Bickel, Florida State recently received the first recommendations from the commission and these recommendations are now under University reviews.

Bicket said that "to the best of his knowledge", the amendment appears with legislation speculating on the appropriation of monies to state higher education institutions and not with legislation dealing with sex discrimination "at least in Florida."

Bicket said that in 1972, 14 women filed to sue the Florida State for pay inequities because of sex discrimination. He said the formation of a task force to study the problem and make recommendations alleviated the problem.

Bickel said that as far as he knew, the suit had nothing to do with the establishment of the legislative amendment calling for equity actions for women at state higher education institutions.

Callahan predicts Health employees will avoid charges

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

John M. Callahan, Hampshire-Franklin County District Attorney has predicted that no criminal charges will be pressed against employees of the UMass Health Services for financial misconduct.

Callahan came to his conclusion after receiving a verbal report from State Police Trooper Thomas O'Connor, who has been investigating the Health Services for the past two weeks. O'Connor will be giving Callahan a written report "in a few days" finalizing the results of his investigation.

Callahan also expects to have a written report on the investigation ready by next week.

The investigation was requested last month by a group of former Student Health Advisory Board members who had received information they thought warranted an investigation from health services employees.

Officials of the health services have denied any wrongdoing.

The group of students and former students who had worked on the Advisory Board charged financial conflicts of interest existed at the Health Services. This was characterized as favoritism in hiring and promotions, a lack of competitive bidding and "abusive" overtime pay.

James Starr, an attorney in the student Legal Services Office had helped the advisory board members prepare the information presented to the district attorney's office. None of the parties involved have made specific details of the information available to the press.

Student brigade hosts 'Election '76' debate

By ROB THAYER
Collegian Staff

A challenge from the Revolutionary Student Brigade (RSB) to the UMass Democrats and Young Republicans will culminate this evening in a debate entitled "Election '76-Which Way Forward?"

The three groups will square off at 7:30 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium for a session which will be opened to the audience following debate and questions from the moderator, Collegian Executive Editor Joseph Mahoney.

According to Charles V. Bagli, a member of the RSB, his organization is not supporting a candidate for President "because we don't think it's a question of a good candidate or a bad candidate. It's a question of a system that is based not on the needs of the people but on the profits of the rich."

"When it comes time for people to enter the voting booths, and they see the names of Carter and Ford before them, I feel that the Democratic party will be the pragmatic choice", said Jonathan Hite former sppaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate and representative of the UMass Democrats.

The Young Republicans will be represented by Glenn Marston, a member of the Amherst Republican Town Committee and a UMass student. Marston told the Collegian that he will address himself primarily toward Hite's positions during the debate.

"Gerald Ford has demonstrated his abilities to the public", said Marston. "I intend to show how Jimmy Carter has been inconsistent in a number of his positions", he added.

Cliff Kornfield, a national leader of the RSB, will represent that group.

The debate is scheduled to open with brief statements from each side, outlining the respective positions regarding the November elections. Each speaker will be allowed two minutes for a rebuttal. The program will then be turned over to the moderator.

Referendum: Who will provide electricity?

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

This is the fourth in a nine-part series giving the pros and cons of each of the nine referendum items that will appear on the Massachusetts ballot on Nov. 2.

Referendum No. 4 is for the establishment of a Massachusetts Power Authority. The actual question on the ballot will read, "Do you approve of a law, summarized below, which was disapproved by the House of Representatives on May 5, 1975, by a vote of 179-46 and in which no vote was taken by the Senate before May 7, 1975?"

A yes vote is a vote to establish a Massachusetts Power Authority.

A No vote is a vote against establishing a Massachusetts Power Authority.

The passage of question number 4 on November 2 will mean the electric power will be provided by a state run Power Authority as opposed to the private companies that now supply electricity.

Under the present system, a series of companies — including Western Massachusetts Electric, Holyoke Water and Power, and Boston Edison — generate and distribute electric power to the citizens of the Commonwealth.

If the referendum is passed, the Authority will establish and operate a bulk power supply system to supply wholesale electric power to utilities throughout the Commonwealth. The utilities, in turn, would retail the power to the consumer. It is the utility companies themselves that now control the distribution of electricity from generator to household.

The question has become one of the hottest political items of the election season. Both sides of the issue have sunk substantial advertising budgets into their campaigns, although the utility companies have been more heavily financed.

A similar measure died in the Massachusetts House last May. Proponents of the bill collected more than 160,000 signatures in order to place the item on the ballot.

The proposal gives a Massachusetts Power Authority the right to build and operate all new generating and transmission facilities in the Commonwealth. In one of the more controversial aspects of the proposal, the Authority would have the option to purchase existing facilities through negotiation, condemnation, or eminent domain.

The Authority is to be tax exempt, but it would pay to local communities a sum that is equal to what the local property tax would be.

The Authority would finance its activities by issuing revenue bonds that are non-taxable. The bonds will not be backed by the full faith and the credit of the Commonwealth.

There would be seven members of the Authority appointed by the Governor to staggered six year terms.

Proponents of the bill maintain that a fundamental change is needed in the way that electricity is provided. They point that Massachusetts has the second highest electric rates in the country, and that electricity should not be treated as a commodity to be sold for the profit.

Opponents of the bill have stated that there will not be a savings realized for at least 10 years after the creation of the Authority.

Opponents point to the need for long range planning for supplying energy, saying that "it is a job for professionals, not amateurs." Proponents counter with the claim that one of the provisions of the bill is for the Authority to establish a master 20 year plan within 18 months after its inception.

Proponents also say that rates will go down because capital costs for generating power will be less, but opponents say that amounts to only 20 per cent of the energy providing budget and it is doubtful that even that savings could be realized.

They also point out that the Authority would have the power to automatically raise rates, while the utilities now must conduct public hearings before they are allowed to raise rates.

Utility companies also point out that while the Authority would be tax exampt, the utility companies paid more than $120 million in taxes in 1975.

Proponents of the bill counter with the argument that the Governor's Public Power Study Commission found that public power would be cheaper than private power over the next 40 years.

Meals to be reimbursed?

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

It's possible that a program could be set up to reimburse students for unused meal tickets if they are willing to pay the extra cost, according to Arthur H. Warren, University Director of Food Services.

Warren also said that it can also be made possible for students to use their meal tickets in the Campus Center food facilities.

Lite said that before either proposals could be put into effect, strong student support must be made evident.

"The only way, students can get reimbursed for their unused tickets is if they pay for 100 per cent of the cost of meals instead of the present 88 per cent, said Warren.

He explained that students are now paying 88 per cent of the total meal cost per semester because the University Food Services expects students to miss 12 per cent of their meals during the semester.

The estimated increase, according to Warren, would require an additional 25 per cent rate increase in all meal programs.

"I definitely think this proposal could be done but to the several student groups we have talked to, the general feeling we get is that students do not way to pay the 100 per cent cost," said Warren.

Jay A. Martus, Student Government Association (SGA) co-president said a referendum must be conducted to see if students really want the proposal.

Martus said that this proposal will be a student referendum question on next semester's SGA presidential election.

"Reimbursement of unused meal tickets could be done and will be, if the students want it," said Martus.

"That's how students got the present weekend meal plan. They wanted it, asked for it, and now that proposal is in effect," he said.

There is a good possibility that students could exchange meal tickets in the Campus Center, but as yet there has been no discussion between the University Food Services and Campus Center officials, said Warren.

"I can't imagine the Campus Center having any objections to this idea. I would think they would enjoy having the extra business," said Warren.

Warren predicted that there would be no additional cost to the students if the Campus Center exchange proposal was to be put into effect.

Martus said that the present proposal calls for students to be able to utilize any of their meal tickets, regardless of their meal plan, in the Campus Center, specifically in the Campus Center coffee shop and the Hatch.

Martus cited the need for additional space within those areas to handle the extra students. The additional space and enough student support are problems to be solved before the idea is brought to University Food Services and Campus Center officials, he added.

The Rents and Fees Committee is doing budget research on both proposals, said Martus.

He said he expects the committee to report its findings before the end of the fall semester and for a special student committee to draw up a brochure describing the full ramifications for both proposals.

"This brochure," said Martus, "will hopefully be given to all students on the meal plan just before the SGA elections next spring semester."

Community Center appoints new NE/Sylvan director

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

A new director of the Northeast-Sylvan area will assume his duties Monday.

James West, former director of the Orchard Hill-Central area, was reassigned by the Community Development Center (CDC) to the Northeast-Sylvan area last week. He will replace Kenneth Burnham, who is now working with the CDC.

West said he plans to "attempt to assess the needs of both the students and staff, and then develop programs to meet these needs."

This will take time West said because he has acquaint himself with the area first.

West said he does have one project in mind, to increase and open the flow of communication with students and staff in the area.

An increase in student and staff input will decrease the possibility of major communication problems, said West.

"Usually curiosity and individual desire to work together overcomes communication problems," West said, but he said he doesn't want to rely on that alone.

West stressed the need for student and area staff input so he can become aware of what the needs of the area.

His two main objectives as the Northeast area director will be "the openness of communications, decision making, budgeting, and expenditure, and the area office acting as a support base to the heads of residence and staff, are extremely important," he said.

West, who has spent 11 years within the University programs, said he is eager to meet and speak with students in the area.

His office, located on the first floor of Johnson House, is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The intention of the Lotta Crabtree Fund is to loan graduates money to begin farming, particularly in the fields of fruits, vegetables, and animal industries, said Dennison.

Dennison explained that the Lotta Crabtree Funds were frozen by "people who had no concept of what agriculture was or is, and young people."

He assured the Senate that students who desired to transfer to the four-year program upon graduation, would have no problem with admissions regardless of closed admissions in the four year school.

The Stockbridge School of Agriculture will not move to the proposed veterinary school at the state hospital in Grafton, said Dennison.

Both the University and the graduate group called two witnesses to appear before at commission hearings officer.

Forster said in the next set of hearings, the group will attempt to "demonstrate a community of interest between teaching associates and assistants is that they are paid from a different payroll account. He also said that teaching associates usually have to pass comprehensive exams, whereas for assistants, the standards are not quite as high. 80 deaths estimated

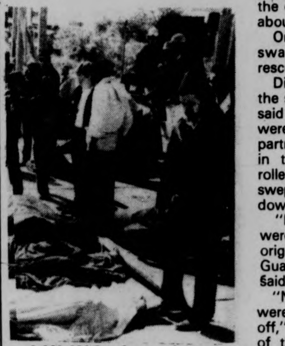
Ferryboat capsizes

DESTREHAN, La. [UPI] — Usually the George Prince provides a sociable time for passengers along the deck rail as they make the seven-minute trip across the Mississippi River to their jobs at the chemical and oil plants in Luling, La.



LULING, La.: A rescue worker stands by, preparing to move several of the 22 bodies recovered from the ferry boat George Prince. (UPI)

The crowded ferryboat collided before dawn yesterday with a Norwegian freighter, capsized and sank. Passengers, many of them trapped in their cars, were hurled in the cold water and officials feared about 80 died.

Only 18 persons, some of whom swam for a half-hour, were rescued.

Divers recovered 22 bodies from the sunken ferryboat, and officials said they thought more victims were still in inaccessible compartments. Other bodies likely were in the estimated 35 cars which rolled from the flat deck and were swept as far as a half-mile downstream.

"Information indicates that there were at least 75 to 100 people originally on the vessel," Coast Guard spokesman Jim Morrison said.

"Not everyone got off. There were lots of them who didn't get off," said Gean Wolverton, 36, one of the survivors of the predawn collision of the George Prince and the 664-foot freighter Frosta.

"I been crossing for a year now and I been watching this little girl and a guy who go on the same ferry. They were sitting on the side of me in their car and they didn't get out. I know they didn't."

P. J. Breaud passed up the George Prince for another ferryboat because of the overcrowded conditions.

"In the little room where everybody stands to get out of the weather, all you could see was white construction hats. It was loaded. I feel fortunate and thank God that I'm here but I sure feel sorry for all those boys that I know that's on that ferry."

Most who remained on deck were thrown free of the collision. Many clinging to debris were blown downriver by the stiff winds.

News in Brief

Cease-fire doubtful

BEIRUT, Lebanon [UPI] — Christians and Moslems intensified their terror bombardment of the capital's civilian areas yesterday with the "worst shelling of the war," darkening the outlook for the new cease-fire due to begin at dawn.

Despite appeals for peace, spokesmen for both sides in the civil war were pessimistic. The Palestinian guerrillas charged again yesterday that Israel had taken part in fighting inside Lebanon.

Beirut radio said the deadly rain of 80-and 120mm mortars that has devastated the city since Tuesday was "by far the worst selling of the war." More than 1,500 shells fell in West Beirut alone in a nine-hour period.

The barrage was nonstop, so no attempt could be made to count the casualties from mortars and shrapnel. Newspapers estimated more than 200 people have died since the weekend.

Ford defends Ford

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford said yesterday he did not believe his actions as House Republican leader in 1972 amounted to blocking a congressional investigation of the Watergate break-in.

The President also again stood by his testimony in 1973, at his vice presidential confirmation hearing, that he had no recollection of being contacted by aides to Richard Nixon in connection with heading off a Watergate inquiry by the House Banking Committee.

And asked about a report that he might pardon Watergate conspirators John Mitchell, H.R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman, the President said: "There is absolutely no validity whatsoever to that rumor."

At his early-afternoon news conference, Ford acknowledged meeting with Republicans on the banking panel, then headed by Rep. Wright Patman, D-Tex., to discuss Watergate. But he said:

"I don't believe what I did in working with Republican members of the House Banking and Currency subcommittee was blocking the investigation of Watergate.

"I did that because responsible Republican members asked me to get them together and that investigation did not cover the entire Watergate matter."

Violence hits Italy

ROME [AP] — Strikes, arson and bombings plagued Italy on yesterday as leftist leaders met defiance in trying to convince workers to swallow the austerity program of the new Christian Democrat government, which rules the Communist support.

Some 70,000 workers marched through downtown Milan in a violence-marred demonstration of union rank and file discontent.

At some places, the workers, taking part in a four-hour regional strike, scuffled with ultraleftist students who had their own ideas about protest.

Groups of students roamed the city before and during the march, attacking stores and businesses, throwing firebombs and beating bystanders. At least two persons were hospitalized with injuries, but damage was limited mostly to broken windows.

Jews end sit-in MOSCOW [UPI] — A dozen Soviet Jews who said they were driven out of town and beaten by secret police ended a three day sit-in at the Soviet parliament yesterday in return for a promise that their request to emigrate would be heard.

The Jews, all men, told Western reporters that Interior Minister Nikolai A. Schelokov relayed a promise that he would meet with the group-known colloquially here as "refuseniks" — to discuss their grievances.

Watched by some 15 KGB secret police who had been filming the demonstration, the Jews then left the Supreme Soviet parliament and dispersed.

The protestors, who began a sit-in at the parliament's administration office Monday morning, were joined by 13 supporters yesterday.

They brought a new petition protesting the attack on the group Tuesday and repeated demands they be given reasons for the government's refusal to let them emigrate.

Flu shots endorsed

ATLANTA [UPI] — More than two million Americans received swine flu shots last week at the height of reports doubting the safety of the vaccine, and federal health officials said yesterday the turnout strongly indicates confidence in the nationwide inoculation program.

The national Center for Disease Control said most of the 2,109,706 Americans receiving flu immunizations were elderly persons or the chronically ill, another indication the adverse publicity did not scare away great numbers from getting inoculations.

HARTFORD: Assistant City Editor Trudy Mahoney with coat over arm reads the final issue of the Hartford Times that carries the announcement that the newspaper will stop publication, yesterday. The 159 year old newspaper is the only afternoon newspaper in Connecticut's Capital City. (UPI)

Dukakis to veto

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis announced his intention yesterday to pocket veto a bill raising the legal drinking age in Massachusetts from 18 to 19.

"Despite the emotionalism surrounding this issue, there appears to be little evidence that the lowering of the legal drinking age has contributed to the problem of alcoholic abuse by teenagers, or that raising the age one year would somehow end that abuse," Dukakis said.

The bill actually will not be pocket vetoed until next week when the 10 day period from the time it arrived at Dukakis' desk runs out without the governor having signed it.

Union for Ford

SPRINGFIELD [AP] — Saying President Ford has served commendably in the White House, the Springfield Union yesterday endorsed him for election to a full term.

In an editorial, the newspaper said Ford has taken clearer stands on the issues and adheres to principles the paper supports.

Ford has been a valuable curb against runaway fiscal and monetary policies of the Democratic congress, the Union said.

Fire kills kids

LEICESTER [AP] — Four children of a 13-member family died in a flaming upstairs bedroom of their home yesterday as firemen dragged their mother, screaming her children's names, away from the flames.

One of the dead children had survived open-heart surgery to overcome a birth defect.

Six other children of Mr. and Mrs. William S. Sawicki escaped. Sawicki had gone to pick up a son at work.

Grandparents identified the dead children as Cindy, 14; Mary, 13; Michelle, 7; and Wayne, 4.

Kevin, 18, was hospitalized for shock after he fell from a ladder while trying to rescue his brothers and sisters.

Mrs. Albert A. Remi, grandmother of the dead children, said, "Cindy underwent open heart surgery four years ago at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

the election

Voting against a no-choice system

By JIM LEAS

Both Ford and Carter make me sick. No matter who wins there won't be anything to be happy about on Nov. 3 so I'm voting Socialist. As Eugene Debs said, "it's better to vote for what you want and not get it than to vote for what you don't want — and get it."

There are four minority parties on the ballot in Massachusetts but I think that the Socialist Workers Party is the best. Their candidates are Peter Camejo and Willie Mae Reid.

For sure, they won't win, but a few per cent vote tally for the minority party candidates will legitimize the idea of breaking away from the Democratic and Republican party stranglehold on politics. It will put pressure on the media to give all candidates equal time instead of hyping for major party candidates only. The socialist vote will be seen as a challenge to the whole no-choice political system.

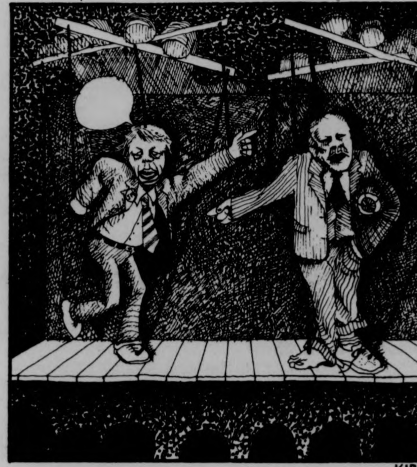
In terms of practical politics, asserting our independence from the capitalist parties puts much more pressure on them than accepting the status quo and voting for the "lesser evil".

A look at the positions of Carter and Ford on major issues shows that, in this election, both candidates are very evil.

Jimmy and Jerry are both in favor of $100 billion defense budgets coupled with cutbacks in education and social services. Carter fully supported and applauded Ford's military invasion of a Cambodian island during the Mayaguez affair. Carter was an ardent supporter of the war in Vietnam. While Governor of Georgia he proclaimed a special holiday to honor Lt. William Calley — the convicted mass murderer of My Lai.

Also while Governor, Carter signed the bill legalizing the death penalty that was recently upheld by the Supreme Court. The death penalty will be used to kill blacks and other minorities disproportionately.

Carter's stand on amnesty reveals what we can expect from him in general. Most of us who saw the first debate recall that Carter made a distinction between amnesty and pardon. He said that he was for a blanket pardon for those who violated Selective Service Laws. That sounded good at first. The trouble is, the pardon would be applied only to those who resisted the draft laws. Military deserters are specifically excluded. Yet, there were ten times as many deserters as draft resistors.



KIRBY

Of the 790,000 Vietnam era veterans who got less than honorable discharges for their resistance to the war, not a single one would benefit. Nor would one of the 7500 persons already convicted of draft resistance have their criminal record erased and civil liberties restored. Nor would one of the tens of thousands of civilians arrested because of antiwar protest activity be cleared.

Ford's clemency program and Carter's pardon combined represent a drop in the bucket. What's needed is an immediate, universal, and unconditional amnesty — no less than was offered Richard Nixon or the Southern racists after the Civil War.

Jerry and Jimmy both agree that women should not have the right to control their own bodies. They both want to turn the clock back on abortion; they only disagree on how best to do it. Ford supports a constitutional amendment outlawing most abortions. Carter doubts that such an amendment could pass at this time. He wants Congressional restrictions.

Carter applauded the recent antiabortion rider passed by Congress three weeks ago. The rider bans the use of the Federal funds for most abortions.

In response to the vote in Congress, Carter said he favors "any step they take to eliminate Federal financing of abortions." Asked about the inherent discrimination against poor women, Carter shot back, "I don't favor the Federal Government paying for abortions for either rich or poor women."

While Gerald Ford is a supporter of nuclear power, some anti-nuclear activists believe that Carter is a closet anti-nuker. The truth is that Carter waffles on this issue. During the debate Carter said that he supports nuclear power only "as a last resort". He also said that he wanted more stringent safety requirements including putting reactors underground.

Those of us who will rally on Saturday against the Seabrook Nuke are not demanding that it be built underground at Seabrook. Nor are we demanding that it be built there as a last resort. We are saying "no nukes" period.

Carter's "last resort" could turn into "our only hope" as soon as the price of oil goes up or the opponents of nuclear power go home. If Carter were genuinely against nuclear power he would use the tremendous publicity his campaign gets to educate the public about the dangers of nuclear power and help to mobilize the sentiment in a movement to stop all nukes. But Carter wants to play both ways on this issue.

If nuclear power is to be stopped it will not be because we rely on some capitalist politician to do it for us. We need massive protests and demonstrations to stop the nukes. (Buses and cars for the rally at Seabrook are leaving from Whitmore at 9:00 a.m. this Saturday).

On the dignity and rights of Third World People, the Ford and Carter brands of racism are indistinguishable. Their own words speak volumes for their feelings: Last week Ford accepted Earl Butz's resignation, calling him a "decent and good man," and a "close personal friend." This, despite Butz's racist and sexist comment.

The exact words Butz used were not printed by most of the major media despite the fact that the text was distributed by the wire services. Students at UMass have a right to know what our rulers say and feel about our fellow citizens. This is what Butz said: "I'll tell you what coloreds want," Butz said, "It's three things: "first, a tight pussy; second, loose shoes; and third, a warm place to shit. That's all!" In accepting Butz's resignation Ford said, "This has been one of the saddest days of my presidency."

Carter used more refined language last April to express his racist sentiments. He was complaining about the "Black intrusion" into white neighborhoods and called for "ethnic purity" in those neighborhoods; that is, he called for segregated housing.

The Democratic and Republican parties, with their all-male, all-white, big monied presidential and vice presidential candidates, are the parties of war, racism, sexism, inflation, recession, unemployment, capital punishment, cutbacks, nukes, Watergate, FBI harrassment, and lying politicians.

I intend to make my vote count — as a vote against this system and for a better one. That's why I'm voting socialist.

Clarifying Affirmative Action

By ANNE THORKELSON

There are two purposes to this article. First, the commentary "Reverse Sexism?" by Charlotte Allen in yesterday's Collegian contained some factually erroneous remarks concerning affirmative action that should be corrected. And second, I want to support the author of that column in her contention that affirmative action is neither reverse sexism nor reverse racism.

First, the facts. Affirmative action is not a federal law. The phrase refers to a series of laws and executive orders (which are presidential policy-deciding guidelines) which are aimed at eliminating racial and sexual discrimination in educational and employment opportunities. It requires employers and admissions people to search for qualified Third World people and women, and to provide equal opportunity in hiring, training, and promoting these groups. The laws say nothing about not hiring white males; that would be sexist and racist. Instead, it says that if a man and a woman are perfectly equal in their qualifications (a rare occurrence), and if the organization in question has not yet "utilized" the appropriate female work force, then it should hire the woman. But only if she is the most qualified applicant.

The last thing affirmative action requires is a lowering of job qualifications. Indeed, part of the idea behind it all is that by recruiting and including women and Third World people in traditionally white male domains, a more enriched and diversified atmosphere will be created. For too long we have been without the ideas, input, and talents of these groups. It's about time that our experiences and contacts were broadened.

Although some of Charlotte's facts were wrong, I feel that the ideological principle behind her article was right on target. As I said before, affirmative action is not reverse discrimination. Discrimination is an act of power, which women and minorities have never had, and which they still do not have. Affirmative action is not a source of power. It is an agent of change, one with which equal opportunity might be created. Its success depends on many factors, such as the commitment involved, the support it receives, and the understanding people have of it.

Unfortunately, public understanding is often incorrect. Affirmative action does have real problems; it tends to be bureaucratic and cumbersome; its use of "goals and timetables" for implementation too often turns into a quota system; and preferential treatment does occur. However, it is also the only means presently available by which real, systematic changes can be made in the white, male status quo.

The principle of of affirmative action is hard to argue with; if you feel that its methods of implementation are wrong, then think up a better way, (short of revolution), and then, and only then, will I consider the existence of "reverse discrimination."

Anne Thorkelson, Affirmative Action Coordinator for the Student Government Association, is a Collegian Guest Commentator.

Which way forward?

By CHARLES BAGLI

This evening, 7:30 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium will be a debate on Election's '76, Which Way Forward.

It's true there will be the Democrats and Republicans, which potentially could make this debate as boring and empty as the Presidential debates. However, there will be a third participant, the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

The reason the Brigade challenged the Democrats and Republicans is because, around the country they've been campaigning and bringing their message to the American people. A message that many people are turning off or taking as the less of two poisons.

They say the answer to the problems people want fixed, like unemployment, slashes in education, inflation and decaying cities, is to elect their candidate. Then they get elected, the problems continue and then say we gave them the mandate for budget cuts and foreign aggression.

This year people aren't voting so the politicians and rulers say we don't care. That's outrageous! We don't care what's happening to this country? I think it's just the opposite. People are angry about the country going to hell on a sled. And rulers are trying to such our anger into a voting booth where it doesn't hurt anyone. On Election Day (November 2) the RSB encourages people to join the demonstration of the Unemployed Workers Organizing Committee in Boston which will say loud and clear we don't accept these election choices, politicians fight for $ interests, we must fight for our own.

The debate will be an important opportunity to clear the air. An opportunity to take the Elections '76, which way forward, head on. Joe Mahoney, Executive Editor of the Collegian will be moderating and after opening statements, questions from the audience will be taken. We encourage people to ask questions and debate the questions as hotly as they affect us. This won't be any bedtime debate or Saturday night jive. It's for real.

Utile machine

Someday, I would like to build a machine that performs strictly aesthetic tasks. I expect that it will be mammoth in proportions; but visions have a way of dwindling as they come into the plane we so foolishly call reality. But what the hell, no matter of size, a machine it will be.

Loads of people have made these machines; I purport no claim to originality. In the 20's and 30's the artistic movements of surrealism and da da turned out a multitude of this utile machinery. Probably the most recognizable names in this area are Marcel Duchamp and Alexander Calder.

The machine must by definition have moving parts, and, as I'm reading my faithful dictionary I see that it is also defined as "any combination of mechansim for utilizing or applying power."

Of all the powers I'd like to apply in my machine, it would be "vision" that I would use. Not the vision as in watching TV, but vision as in having one.

Ideally, the parts should be of a translucent material so the viewer could see through the machine at the same time as seeing the machine.

The difficult part will be to construct it in such a way that an accompanying pamphlet of explanation would not be necessary. You know what I mean, so people won't look at it and say, "that's stupid; it doesn't do anything". The vision should go beyond the subliminal aim of the surrealists to a tangible experience.

I've had this fascination for people that work at the same piece of machinery in a factory for years or any long period of time. It seems that the machine must affect the worker with at least its rhythm but moreover its power.

I'm a firm believer in the theory that the best imaginative minds inhabit the bodies of the menial workers. How else could these souls bear the tedium?

I want to build a machine that could spark up some of the imaginations that inhabit the bodies of the overly-literate, something that will puff smoke and whirr and be so intricate as to seem almost infinite.

Probably the best recipe for the construction of a machine of this type is exemplified in Piet Hein's little poem:

TECHNIQUE
The height of technical felicity is to combine sublime simplicity with just sufficient ingenuities to show how difficult to do it is.

That's one of the points on our modern world. Why made something simple when you can make it complicated? Why have a knife when you can have a veg-a-matic? Why look for simple truths when you can get entangled in all sorts of causes?

I'd like to build a machine that would be so complicated that it would collapse at its unveiling; leaving something simple like a pendulum; but I probably never will. I'll probably write a book.

An unjust judicial system

By PAUL WOLF

The Fifth Amendment clearly states "...No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of the law...". After reading and talking about Brian Turner's case I can only feel sympathy towards him, because he has been done an injustice and if he wants to get off the hook he is going to have to run the biggest rat race of his life.

Let me disgress briefly. The Sixth Amendment states "...The accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial...". There is no doubt in my mind that the University deals accordingly with this statute except that it only deals with half of it, namely the right to a speedy trial (if you want to call it a trial); but the trial is in no manner public.

Let me give you an overview of the University's judicial system. Once the accuser has a complaint they bring it to the next person up on the administrative ladder and eventually it reaches the Dean of Students. The Dean after little or no investigation of his own then writes a letter to the accused stating that "he-she is to terminate their residency of the University residence halls system within five days of the date of this letter." Occasionally, depending on the severity of the charge the accused is also withdrawn from the university. The last paragraph of the letter states something to the effect of "you have the right to appeal this accusation, if you so desire you must inform this office in writing no later than 4:30 p.m. three working days from the date of this letter."

Should this person elect to appeal their accusation they will be entering the rat race I spoke of earlier. The next letter this person receives has a time, place, and date of appeal, usually at the (so called) Judges' convenience. These Judges I speak of are appointed as per University Rules and Regulations 1975, and they include an area director, a counselor, a student and a head of residence all from an area other than the accused's. Only these people will decide the outcome of the case.

The actual appeal takes place in a room with the accused and the four Judges. What happens is the accused tells the story and the Judges listen — nothing more nothing less. If the accused brings some friends the judges may listen to them but they are under no obligation to do so. After all this is over a recommendation either for the execution of the removal or an aquittal is given to the Dean of students who then endorses a letter to the accused stating the outcome of the appeal.

If any of your have run the race before you know the score. Those of you who haven't don't take my word for it, ask someone who has I'm confident they will convince you.

I ask you; is this due process of the law? Do we sign away our constitution rights when we enroll in the university?

Someone is accused and found guilty at the first statement of the charge, then is given a chance to appeal it (appeal in this case is defined by the Merriam — Webster Dictionary as a rehearing, indicating that there was indeed a prior one...which there was not). If this person does not appeal it, it will automatically mean a guilty finding and this will be put on their academic record. During the whole deal the accuser can remain anonymous. Who's to say what talking never went on before the appeal between the Judges, the Dean, the accuser and outsiders, who's to say that these people aren't biased in some way or another? At the time of this writing and to best of my knowlege Brian Turner's case had not been appealed yet, but for all we know it could very well have been decided upon.

The university's judicial system is my opinion is in many respects similar to the old kangaroo courts. In conclusion I feel that the system needs drastic revision — besides, isn't it about time the university printed a 1976-77 Rules and Regulations? The last issue was 1975 ... rumor has it that times have changed. Have they?

Support Moe's strike

To the Editor:

As former Valley waitresses we are excited and inspired by the action taken by the waitresses, bartenders and cooks who are now on strike at Moe's in downtown Amherst. Anyone who has worked in a restaurant knows about the arbitrary firing that occurs, the lack of clear job descriptions that forces waitresses to work like slaves for horrendous pay, and the sexist harassment, racist attitudes and general lack of respect from owners that make so many of us want to quit.

Jobs are so hard to find in this area that restaurant owners feel they can do anything to us and if we're customers they feel free to overcharge and undernourish us. Instead of "putting up with shit," the people at Moe's got together when they heard they were going to be fired and formed a union in 4 days. And when their manager was fired for helping to build the union, they walked out — to show that unions and job security is their right — saying "if you hurt one of us, you're hurting all of us." How rare and beautiful that is in this tight, competitive job market!

We wish we'd had it together to form a union when we worked in a restaurant in Northampton, but instead we were picked off one by one, fired or forced to quit over such false and petty issues as "not dressing sassy enough," "not smiling enough," "taking teasing too seriously," and "talking back." We thank Moe's workers for having the guts and brains to fight back and for paving the way for other restaurants in Amherst.

We urged UMass people not to patronize Moe's, nor to accept a job there till the dispute is over — and to spend some time on the picket line to show the strikers your support. And to other restaurant workers — why don't we write to the Collegian about our experiences? Do you agree that all restaurants should be organized?

Let's do something about that food

To the Editor:

I am a teaching assistant in Rhetoric, and have taught here at the university for some time, getting to know a wide range of students.

Unequivocally, as we become more certain of the causes of illness resulting from inadequate diet, I charge the food services in the University complex with providing food high in carbohydrates, food which has been processed, food which is made with white flour, white bread, white sugar — all of which have been proven to be without adequate nutritional value; in other words, THE FOOD THE STUDENTS EAT DAILY IS A MAJOR CAUSE OF THEIR ILL HEALTH.

I believe it is a part of the responsibility of this university, where it undertakes to provide food in the dining commons and cafeterias of the complex, to provide healthy food, in order that the students may enjoy good health. I believe also that it is a shocking indication of neglect to allow the present Food Service which has contracted to supply the University with food, to continue to serve its customers, at a hefty price, with total unconcern for the poor quality of its product.

It is a product, friends — and you pay a high price for white rice and beans. Doughnuts in the morning heavy with fat and dough and sugar. Fried foods on the grill saturated with heavy fats. Fruit — raw fruit — and yogurt — in the university cafeterias is neither abundant nor cheap. And the yogurt is usually the kind with additives. Check your labels.

This is no faddist's protest. I am certain, as I see the students sitting before me in class with rotten colds, or bad coughs, or just looking ill and debilitated, that a good part of their ill health, comes from the poor food they must consume. For my part, I bring my own food to campus, after a year of trying to get decent value for my dollar, in the cafeterias.

Do I hear any remarks? Students in dorms feel there is nothing they can do. I say — there is plenty we can do. We can compel the food services to provide decent food. It costs no more, and it makes the difference between ill health, and good physical and mental well-being. Write to the Collegian, or to me.

Affirmative action views

To the Editor:

This letter is directed toward the editorial by Charlotte Allen in Wednesday's Collegian. Allen's remarks concerning Affirmative Action [AA] were erroneous in regards to lowering employment standards in order to hire women and members of the Third World. As I understand the laws, they were designed so that if a man and a woman and a member of the Third World were applying for a particular job and each of the three applicants had the same qualifications, the job would not summarily be given to the white male without giving equal consideration to the other two applicants. Ms. Allen, I do realize that the function of an editorial page is so that people may have a chance to share their views with the general public, however, please get your facts straight before you attempt to incite anyone, be it women, men, or Martians.

Ms. Allen, please note that our world functions and reproduces itself due to the fact that there are two sexes. Not only do women have to work at being nice to men but I have found that I need to work at being nice to women too. It's a fact of life, and, if you haven't learned it by now then I am truely sorry, people will just have to function as well as they possibly can until the computers take over or scientists develop an asexual homo sapien.

I do not want you to think that I am a namby-pamby wishy-washy female who enjoys male dominance. In fact, I am often just the opposite of that stereotyped image. I have experienced prejudice and hatred and I think that perhaps you should devote more time to combatting those evils than to combatting sexism or reverse sexism. If men could see that you, a female or simply another human [huwoman] being is trying to do away with forms of prejudice that reach to the ends of the world then perhaps they will have more respect for women in the future. Things that are solely women's concerns [such as rape, the female body, reaching the total capacity of the female mind] are just that, a woman's concern. Please realize, though, that some of the greatest thinkers of all times were men and that perhaps men could help us cope with the world and themselves as human beings. Besides, I think that the world, and my love life, would be rather boring if women had the upper hand in everything. All that I want is the chance to prove myself as a thoughtful human being to the world and not to have the world judge me by my sex but by my acts. Perhaps if people were just a little more considerate, and worried less about the sex of each person that they were dealing with, there might be a bit more real improvement in the world.

Five indicted for election violations

PROVIDENCE [AP] — Five persons including an unsuccessful candidate for the state legislature were indicted Wednesday by a Providence County grand jury for allegedly violating Rhode Island election laws in the state's Sept. 14 primary.

Twenty-four separate counts of election law violations were reported in the indictments along with two counts of conspiracy and one count of perjury. Each of the indictments involved 161 shut-in ballots from the 1st representative District in Providence, the grand jury said.

Those named in the indictments included Victor Mourachian Jr., unsuccessful 1st District House candidate, and notary public Patricia Holland. Also indicted were Richard T. Goins, Carmine Balzano and Algis Antonavicius, all of Providence.

The report said the panel found no evidence of fraud involving voter registration in Providence but did say there were technical violations made by the city Board of Canvassers. However, it said no voters were disenfranchised.

The grand jury also recommended changes in Rhode Island election procedures including revision of the method of counting absentee and shut-in ballots so that they are counted on the same day of the election.

None of the 161 shut-in ballots in question were counted by the state Election Board but the possibility remained that challenges to the outcome of two races could be filed.

Those races were the Democratic U.S. Senate primary and the 1st representative District Democratic primary where incumbent Samuel C. Kagan lost by 203 votes to Donald B. King.

Auto dealer Richard Lorber was declared a 100-vote winner over Gov. Philip W. Noel in the U.S. Senate primary. Noel has said he would challenge the outcome if widespread fraud was discovered.

However, the grand jury said in its report: "We conclude that there is no evidence to substantiate any widespread fraud excepting in the 1st Representative District of Providence."

Noel was not immediately available for comment.

The grand jury charged Mourachian with 26 separate violations, including aiding and assisting in the violation of election laws and filing false documents. Goins was named in 17 separate counts, Balzano with 13 violations and Antonavicius with five.

All four were also charged with conspiracy to violate election laws.

Miss Holland, who testified last month before the state Election Board that she notarized 148 of the shut-in ballots, was indicted for nine separate violations including perjury and conspiracy.

The grand jury said it heard testimony from more than 40 witnesses, including state police which reviewed and investigated 2,903 absentee and shut-in ballots and applications.

Artist to display works at Herter

Sonia Cullinen will present a series of "Black and White" paintings, collages, and painted relief sculpture at the Herter Art Gallery, Herter Hall, UMass, from Sunday to Nov. 8.

The opening of the show will be Sunday at 4 p.m. The public is cordially invited.

Cullinen will present 61 abstract pieces. All her works share in common the shape "square" and are in black and white. She is concerned with the contrast between straight and not straight, round and smooth, regular and irregular. The exhibit represents many years of sensitive study and response to both abstract and concrete stimuli.

Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by STELLA WILDER

Thursday, October 21 — Born today, you are one of those courteous, instinctively pleasing, highly sociable individuals who is destined to have few enemies, equally few close friends, and very many admirers. These last may or may not enhance your daily life, depending upon the degree to which they rely upon you for their enjoyment of life or are capable of admiring you from a distance without making claims upon your actual presence or interest. Your magnetic personality may cause you considerable embarrassment, for you will often find that people know you when you don't know them, that they expect from you the same kind of interest in them as they display in you when, in truth, you can scarcely remember what there is about them to be interested in.

You instill confidence in others as if by magic. You don't have to be physically present in order to influence another's behavior or performance, for people have a tendency, once they know you, to carry an image of you in their minds as they go about their daily business -- and it is that image that inspires them to their best efforts. That the results of these efforts are absolutely to their credit and not to yours may not occur to your admirers; thus you may often find yourself thanked for gains you know nothing of.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Help another to overcome a pessimistic outlook. Point out the bright spots in the present situation on the employment scene.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Dissension early in the day causes you to lose more than your temper. Children carry the brunt of unpleasantness at this time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Harmonious circumstances on the home front make it easy for you to accomplish your purpose where personal relationships are concerned.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Selectivity in the choice of the day's companions is a must for Capricorn now. Don't join forces with any or all you meet.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Unwarranted praise is as difficult for you to handle today as would be unwarranted criticism. Keep emotionally free in the afternoon.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Reticence may keep you from advancing when you should. Try to deliver on a promise before the day is out.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — If you hope to avoid trouble at this particular time, keep to your own business. Others may be looking for things to criticize.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A clash of personalities brings you face to face with a terrible temper; whether your own or someone else's is the question.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Home is more than a place to hang your hat. Let others know that you appreciate the trouble they go to to make things pleasant for you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You can harness public attitudes for your own private use. Look at another's progress from a new point of view and you'll be happier with it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You may have to make a complete change of plans before the day is out. Don't be so sure you were right the first time; think about it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — If you are to know ideal companionship today, choose wisely. Another's real personality may be hidden behind an uninteresting facade.

Yanks saved by weather

NEW YORK [UPI] — Now nobody will ever know whether the Reds can run on water. Baseball people are convinced the World Series is all over already and many of them have gone back home. If last year's series was the most exciting ever, this one has to qualify among the dullest, only because the Reds have outclassed the Yankees so completely.

The only world series I can remember rivaling this one for lack of excitement, at least in the past 25 years, was the Giants' 1954 sweep of the Indians. Willie Mays' spectacular over-the-shoulder catch of Vic Wertz' long drive and Dusty Rhodes' pinch homer made for a first game thriller in that one, but the rest of that series deteriorated into a yawn....

Don't go getting the idea baseball is dying again, though. Wait until you hear some of the prices the free agents are asking. Reggie Jackson is looking for $4 million over five years. The Orioles offered second baseman Bobby Grich $1.2 million for five years but he's shooting for $2.4 million. Dave "Yes we can" Cash wants "only" $2 million.

Don Gullett, the Reds' only free agent, says he hopes to be back with Cincinnati next year, but isn't sure whether he will be or not.

He's hobbling around on crutches with his foot in a cast now and when he was asked how he'd feel about leaving the Reds, he said, "I don't know because I haven't thought about that."....

Pete Rose declines to be drawn into any comparisons between last year's Red Sox and this year's Yankees. "How can you make comparisons like that?" he asks. "It's like trying to compare Babe Ruth and Roger Maris and Ty Cobb and Pete Rose." One thing about Pete, he doesn't bring up any bums....

Most impressive statistic, to me, anyway, is the one which shows the Reds have now gone 26 consecutive post-season games without having a stolen base charged against them. Johnny Bench has caught all 26, which tells you a little something about the kind of arm he has ...

Everybody's now talking about a sweep. Can you remember the last one in 1966 when the Orioles took four in a row from the Dodgers? The big thing many remember about that series is the Orioles' pitchers setting a series' record by holding the Dodgers scoreless over the last 33 innings. What some forget is that Sandy Koufax pitched his last game ever in that series, and lost it, being knocked out after six innings....

Lou Piniella, the Yankees' outfielder, is one fellow who isn't giving up. He listens to all the talk of how the Reds are going to win the series four straight and says,

"Then how come they bothered printing tickets for the fifth, sixth and seventh games?"....

NHL talent waiting, Indians last stop

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Starting off its season in the newly revamped 6-team American Hockey League, the 1976 edition of the Springfield Indians, under new ownership have kicked off its season as they have returned to the Coliseum in West Springfield after playing for several years in the Springfield Civic Center. The Indians this year have hookups with both the Philadelphia Flyers and the Washington Capitals of the NHL who will be supplying the bulk of the talent for the Tribe. Included on the Springfield roster are the first four draft picks of the Flyers, including top pick Mark Suzor and number two pick Drew Callender who racked up 49 goals and 56 assists while playing for Regina of the Western Canadian Hockey League. Among the players supplied from Washington are Greg Joly, the Capital's first draft pick ever in its brief two year history, and Mike Marson who has been up with the Caps for those two years. During that time, Marson was the only black player in the NHL.

The Indians this year are under the direction of head coach John Hanna, a veteran performer of the NHL, WHA, and AHL. Unfortunately, Hanna has not had a chance to coach the Indians from the bench yet, as he was hit by a truck in Easthampton when leaving his car to attend the Indian's first practice of the year at Williston Academy. This left Hanna with a broken hip and the Indians with no coach. The Philadelphia Flyers management acted quickly and supplied Terry Crisp, who played on Philadelphia's two Stanley Cup championship teams, to act as head coach until Hanna is able to get behind the bench.

So far the Indians have played four home games and have compiled a 2-2 record while besting the Rhode Island Reds and New Haven Nighthawks and losing to the Nova Scotia Voyageurs twice, on last Friday and Saturday night. Three of these four games have been played before crowds in excess of 4,000 at the Coliseum which has to be encouraging for the Tribe management after last year's dismal attendance figures at the much larger Springfield Civic Center. Another encouraging note is the type of play that the Indians have exhibited in their first four games which is very reminiscent of the rough Philadelphia style of play. Says Terry Crisp of Fred Shero: "When you play for a guy for five years, you naturally learn his system." The Fred Shero style was well in evidence in last Saturday night's game with Nova Scotia as 114 penalty minutes were compiled while three Indians were ejected for fighting.

McCarty picked for weekly YanCon star

Massachusetts inside linebacker Peter McCarty was named to the weekly Yankee Conference All-Star team for his performance in last Saturday's 14-7 win over the University of Rhode Island. Also named to the All-Star team was Nick Giaquinto of UConn, Dave Loehle of UNH, and Scott Shulman of Maine.

McCarty was a standout in the Minuteman defense which held the Rams to three second half firsts down as UMass rallied to its third conference win and upped its record overall to 4-1.

The six foot, 225 pound junior from Bangor Maine, had three quarterback sacks among his eight tackles and twice made key stops on short yardage situations.

Giaquinto had 144 yards for UNH last Saturday while Loehle for UConn had 162 and one touchdown in the Huskies loss. Shulman helped engineer the Maine upset as he had 14 unassisted tackles and 11 assists, blocked two passes and caused a fumble.

Colts, UMass show togetherness wins

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Take away the greedy, money hungry players, the "I and me" concept, and put in the "We and the team" ideal into sports.

That's what sports was meant to be in the beginning, what is isn't now, and who knows what it will be in the future.

Specifically this article is dealing with the loyalty of players to coaches and vice versa.

Early in September the Baltimore Colts of the NFL let go Ted Marchibroda — the 1975-76 NFL coach of the year. Marchibroda, coaching the Colts to ten consecutive wins following four defeats at the beginning of the 75 season, resigned and then was rehired just prior to the start of this football season.

The reson for Marchibroda's resignation was a dispute with Colts owner Robert Irsay concerning how to run the ball club.

"Marchibroda expressed his concern about the Colt's system of running the football club and also requested that the system be changed or otherwise he would resign," said Irsay.

Marchibroda's reason for his resignation was interference from the ownership and management of the Colts.

"Any coach, in order to lead his men must have the authority to call the shots. But this differs from the ownership and Colts management's position and I can't tolerate it any more," Marchibroda said.

Ten days later, Marchibroda was rehired following a two day confrontation between the players and assistant coaches versus the Colt's management.

The Baltimore players and assistant coaches threatened not to play their first game of the season if Marchibroda was not rehired. The Colt's management, pressured by this threat, conceded to the players and rehired Marchibroda.

The following day the Boston Globe ran a photo showing a group of Baltimore players hugging and slapping Coach Marchibroda on the back, welcoming him back to practice and the team. Since last year the Colts have won 13 out of 15 games only losing to Pittsburgh in the playoffs and to Dallas 30-27 on a last minute field goal.

For years the Patriots head coach has been the subject of criticism, second guessing, and complaint. But Ray Hamilton defensive player for New England along with two or three players jubilantly commented gave credit to the entire Patriots coaching staff when New England recently beat Pittsburgh three weeks ago.

"We gotta give credit to the coaches. They really prepared us for this game and since I've been here, there is a great relationship between our coaches and the players. It's great to be winning again," said Hamilton.

Locally here at UMass, the relationship between the coaches and players is directly proportional to the success of the team.

Both co-captains John Toner and Brian McNally of this year's 4-1 Minutemen said that they and the rest of the team have great respect and admiration for head coach Dick McPherson.

"I have only good things to say about him. I'm sure a lot of players on this team feel very close to him. He is a coach who cares for his players on and off the field," said Toner.

Quarterback and co-captain Brian McNally agrees with Toner's feelings and says that the players are behind McPherson 150 per cent.

"You really have to have a real positive feeling for him," said McNally.

"He is a guy who cares about his players on and off the field. And I just don't mean just the starting players. To really know coach McPherson you really have to be on the bench. Even though you might not be playing, you really know Coach knows you are there," McNally said.

Captain John McGrail of the 10-1 cross country Harriers feels that his teammates have a natural respect for Coach Ken O'Brien because of his experience in the sport and his over .700 winning percentage.

"Not only is OB one of the best cross country coaches in New England but what makes him a good coach is he gives us a reason for all of his decision," said McGrail.

The senior roadrunner said that O'Brien is willing to listen to his runners regarding any policy decision as on workouts or away trip policies.

What surprises McGrail is the amount of time O'Brien is able to give to individuals even though he is head coach of the men's and women's cross country teams.

This isn't to say that players should lay down and agree with everything the coach says all the time. Neither should a coach take an authoritarian viewpoint and pretend he is God.

Once a team has gotten rid of its "I complex" and realizes that both coach and players are dependent on each other, the most important hurdle before success has been scaled.

Loyalty is not something that can be measured concretely. But it can definitely be seen in this year's Baltimore Colts, New England Patriots, and the UMass football Minutemen and cross country Harriers, or just any team that surpasses racial and ethnic differences and concentrates on winning together.

Grapplers open camp under Coach Amato

By HEIDI BERENSON
Collegian Staff

The UMass wrestling team, under head coach, Dave Amato, has taken to the mats in preparation for its 1976-77 season.

Amato, new in the capacity of head coach at UMass, is no stranger to wrestling or coaching. He was a 1973 graduate of UMass, winning the New England Championship title twice in his academic stay here.

By standards, Amato is no rookie coach, either. He was assistant wrestling coach at URI when they won the New England championship and he was assistant coach at Warwick High School the year the team won the New England tournament. Last year he was head coach at Potsdam State in New York, and the team ranked eighth in the nation at season's end.

Evidence of his superior coaching ability came as he was one of three coaches in the nation to be nominated for the honor of "Rookie Coach of the Year".

Amato views this season as one for rebuilding the team. He has some of the veterans from last year returning this season including: Kevin Griffin, Dennis Fenton, Tim Fallon, Sean Cronin, Pete Sachon, Harry Conforti, and Robin Osbourne.

Coach Amato said that he is working with "an outstanding group of guys". Due to the variation in weight classes and inexperience, Amato said, "There is a lack of depth on the team but, practice is going well and everyone is working hard".

The first match for the Minutemen is December 1, at home against Boston University. Coach Amato says, "BU is a tough opponent, but URI will be the toughest match of the season."

Crowley, Welzel and Diane Perry. Rounding out the top seven were Swartz and Anne Bradshaw.

After that, the women finally came home for a rematch against Williams. Once again, they had no trouble against last year's New England runner-up, winning 18-45.

Chapman and Lafreniere tied for individual honors in that one, and a blanket of 38 seconds could again be placed over them and Swartz, Crowley and Welzel, the next three finishers. Callanan and Farmer rejoined the top seven in this meet.

The next "contest" for the women was the Brandeis Invitational, in which UMass ran up a total score of 22 points, a mere 69 points better than the second place team. Lafreniere was again out front for the Minutewomen, as she narrowly defeated Crowley, who was followed by Chapman. Swartz and Callanan completed the top five which was only 31 seconds apart. Bradshaw and Welzel completed the important top seven.

The last regular season meet saw the women competing in their third meet in seven days, a gruelling task which had left four top people injured. Even without them, the women easily defeated Dartmouth, 15-48. Lafreniere again ran first, followed by Chapman, Crowley, Swartz and Bradshaw, with a gap of 45 seconds between them. Monica Scott and Bonnie Bukowski, two steady runners all season long, finished sixth and seventh.

Now the women stand on the threshold of what cannot fail to be a very successful post-season. The top runners have all bettered their times from last year with one exception — Jane Welzel was so outstanding last year that her improvement has not been so noticeable. The other times have improved anywhere from 30 seconds to 1:15. The women have shown that they can rearrange their own order and still come up winners. Their spirit of team unity and competition is high and should carry them far.

Earlier, a lot of stress was put on the top five and top seven spots in a race. This is because these are the positions that score points. If you have a tight group as your first five, then other teams can't squeeze runners in on you. The sixth and seventh runners are important because they can push back the other team's top five runners.

About the only thing which may hurt the women's chances is the injuries recently suffered by Welzel, Perry, Callanan and Farmer. However, they should be healed by Saturday, allowing them to participate.

Analysis

Post-season here Women CC ready

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

After an extremely successful regular season that saw it go undefeated in five meets, the UMass women's cross country team will be taking the first step in its post-season schedule on Saturday when it competes in the New England Championship to be held here at UMass.

A development process that actually started last year and which has continued right up until now is beginning to bear fruit for coach Ken O'Brien and his Minutewomen harriers.

Last year was the initial season for the women's cross country program, and the UMass women proved that they would be a force to be reckoned with on the national scene before long, as they easily won the New England title and finished ninth in the AIAW, or Women's Nationals. After losing only one runner from that squad, O'Brien hoped to have an even better season than last.

After a long summer of workouts and more of the same in early September, the women were more than ready to go when it came time for the first meet of the year, the Lowell Invitational.

It was cloudy and overcast on September 18th as the UMass van sped towards Lowell U. The women were keyed up and ready to begin proving that they were the class of the same region they had conquered the year before.

The meet shaped up as a showdown between three of the top four teams in New England from the year before, but UMass left no doubt as to who would be number one this year. From the gun the women burst to the front of the field and controlled the race from that comfortable vantage point, winning easily, 24-57-78, over Williams and Brandeis.

Johara Chapman supplanted Jane Welzel as the number one runner for the team, at least this time out. One fact that stood out and which was to mark the team all season long was the gap between the first five runners. Only 22 seconds separated Chapman and the next four women. Sue Swartz, Julie Lafreniere, Maggie Crowley and Welzel turned in the first of several superlative efforts this season. Also finishing in the top seven were Debbie Farmer and Barb Callanan. These seven runners dominated the top 12 positions in the race, demonstrating for the first of many times UMass' depth.

After a break of ten days, the women travelled to Boston for a rematch with Brandeis and a first time ever confrontation with Radcliffe. The location had changed, but the results were the same. UMass' Panzer unit went to the front en masse, and completely dominated the meet, winning 25-58-72.

Chapman was once again victorious, but the order behind her altered a little bit, which was to be a continuing and positive trait all season long. The gap of 38 seconds between the top five was a little wider but still very respectable, the runners who annexed these four positions being Lafreniere,

Minutewomen travel south of border

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The women's varsity tennis team travels to UConn this afternoon for a 3 o'clock match. Coach Ken Rubin says, "This is probably our biggest match of the season. UConn is a Yankee Conference rival in other sports, and the girls are determined to beat them. UConn beat Mt. Holyoke 6-3, and we lost to Holyoke, so we're going to be in for a very tough match. I'm sure we can win if our girls play up to their potential, but we'll need a better effort in doubles than we had yesterday against Southern Connecticut." The women lost all three doubles matches in that contest.

As usual the number 1 singles player will be Jennifer "Yukon" Ranz. Hawaiian born Dawn Minaai, who probably has had enough New England weather to last her a lifetime, will play in the number 2 position. The number 3, 4, and 5 singles players will be Carolyn Mooney, Kathy Sullivan, and Martha "Klondike" Awiszus, respectively. The number 6 position will be played by Kendra Bowker.

As usual the number 1 doubles team will be Captain Nancy O'Neil and Karen Holt. The regular number 2 doubles team of Leslie Howell and Jeanette Flynn will be back together, and their presence increases the Minutewomen's hopes for victory. Susanne Boissevan and Caron Tsapatsaris team up for the first time to play number 3 doubles.

MATCH POINTS — There is an unconfirmed rumor Yukon Ranz and Klondike Awiszus will show up for today's match wearing bathing suits, thus proving they really do have Eskimo blood.

Auerbach does it, Silas for Rowe

BOSTON [UPI] — The NBA champion Boston Celtics yesterday sent rebounding wizard Paul Silas to the Denver Nuggets in a three-way deal that brought them the Detroit Pistons' all-star forward Curtis Rowe.

The Nuggets sent Detroit guard Ralph Simpson to get Silas, who was unable to reach a contract agreement with the Celtics after a month-long holdout.

Rowe, who averaged 16 points and nine rebounds a game with the Pistons last year, played at UCLA with another Boston newcomer, Sidney Wicks. The two, combining with center Dave Cowens and veteran all-star forward John Havlicek, give the Celtics one of the most impressive front lines in the history of the game.

"Rowe was a great All-American at UCLA and a winner, just like Sidney Wicks," said Celtics general manager Red Auerbach, who appears to be in the midst of a rebuilding effort accenting youth.

The Celtics expect Rowe, at 6-foot-7 and 225 pounds, to fit in nicely with their fast break style of play.

"Curtis is a good percentage shooter and a very active player, a great defensive performer, a good rebounder and, overall, a dedicated player," said Auerbach.

The aquisitions of Rowe and Wicks, along with first round draft choice Norm Cook, relieves the age problem that promised to decimate the Celtics' inside corps within a few years. Havlicek is 36 and Silas is 33. Don Nelson, who started at forward opposite Havlicek for a number of years, retired last year.

Silas, 33, had been on the option year of his contract but was seeking a large increase over his present $175,000 per year pact.

Earlier, the Celtics announced they had cut second year guard Jerome Anderson, a player the team thought well of last year. Anderson averaged 15.1 points and slightly over three rebounds a game for the Celtics in 20 appearances last year.

Silas, a pivotal player in the Celtics' championships of 1974 and 1976, is regarded as one of the top rebounding forwards in the NBA. As president of the NBA Players Association, though, Silas was privy to information regarding the salaries of all the league's forwards.

Howard also wrong Monday night

During Monday night's Patriots-Jets game an ABC cameraman focused on an individual who provoked unusual hysteria from the broadcast booth.

No, it wasn't a naked person streaking gracefully across the Schaefer astroturf. Not many people run around naked in twenty degree weather, and nobody runs gracefully on frozen astroturf.

It wasn't a dog or some other four-legged creature trying to disrupt the game. Animals, like naked people, tend to wait for warm days in which to steal the limelight.

And no, it wasn't a kid holding a "we love Howard Cosell" sign. That just doesn't happen.

The figure who completely unnerved the gruesome threesome was Jets offensive lineman Gary Puetz, sitting on the bench, smiling and laughing. Of course, the Jets were already a couple of touchdowns behind.

Alex Karas said that if Puetz were on his team and smiling while losing, he would be punched out. I thought that Karas was going to run onto the field to knock out a few of Puetz's smiling teeth.

Howard Cosell, for perhaps the first time in his life, was almost silent. I thought he was going to get sick right there on national television.

Neither Cosell nor Karas forgot the image of the smiling Jet. Cosell made up for his initial silence by needling Puetz whenever he made a mistake. "I wonder if he's smiling now," he'd say to Karas, who would answer in similarly derogatory terms.

Why were Cosell and Karas so harsh on a member of the Jets, a team whose coach, Lou Holtz, describes as "only seven or eight years away from becoming a contender?" To further illustrate the plight of the Jets, Holtz said, "The only time we bring our fans out of their seats is when they get up to get a hot dog."

Why does a smile or a laugh on the field, or even on the bench, strike such a reactive chord is so many sports fans? Puetz certainly wasn't happy that his team was losing, but he wasn't going to hang his head in sorrow, either.

Why do comic sports figures such as Bill Lee offend so many fans while enthralling others? Is it because we normally see athletes as automated sports heroes whose every move must be dictated by the scoreboard? Is is because we expect these individuals to act in an inhuman, predictable way, so that we can objectively analyze the game?

There are two groups of athletes allowed to show emotion on the field. One group is the champions. Muhammed Ali can rattle off comic poems about his challengers. The winners of a playoff or championship game can smile, laugh and jump all over each other.

The other group of emotional athletes is the constant losers. Casey Stengel, as manager of the original "amazing Mets," was the predecessor to such joking, losing coaches as Lou Holtz. Joe Garagiola and Bob Uecker now make a living on cutting themselves down before a national television audience.

No one else can smile or laugh, especially when his team is losing. It's neither expected nor accepted by the fans. Gary Puetz's smile was practically anti-social, piercing the competitive spirit of the American sports fan. It's no wonder that Cosell and Karas were so upset. Their jobs rely on predictions, and a smiling loser is unheard of.

Even humorous teams such as the Globetrotters are expected to show some predictability. How many times have you seen the Globetrotters lose? There is a need for spontaneious humor in sports. Even such sights as a Gary Puetz smiling on the Jets' bench have a place. It reminds the fans that sports are not as predictable as we believe.

So smile on, Gary Puetz. And joke on, Lou Holtz. Maybe you can even silence Howard Cosell when you defeat a team he predicts will clobber you.

Tragedy Strikes Philadelphia Convention

by Dee Greaze

Richard Hammerich certainly enjoyed the production of '1776' and he aptly expressed the views of many with his review in the Springfield Union (October 18) when he wrote "...'1776' is the most entertaining civics lesson in history...and a good place for a history lesson is on the college campus, which is where a first rate production of 1776 appeared Friday night at the Fine Arts Center (UMass)..."

It is a good civics lesson. The musical won the 'Tony Award' for the songs in the production, but it lasted on Broadway for two years, as the script was a winner of its own. '1776' is an attempt to create a musical which is not only entertaining but also a replay of the events of the Second Continental Congress as they may have happened.

After experiencing '1776' it is unlikely someone from the audience would run out and buy a U.S. savings bond, as the production is not in any manner a super patriotic production, rather it is a three hour show with thirteen songs and a cast of 28 working together to tell a story, that being the events leading up to and the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

In '1776' one can experience American history in a manner lacking from a fifth or junior high class. No where did those teachers of the past instruct my class to the raging battle over slavery which held up the signing of the Declaration, and no where did those government paid instructors indicate to the class the expression which reached popularity during the Vietnam mess, that which McNair the custodian in 1776 truly expresses, "You gonna go join the war (?) hell man, you don't see them (the congressmen) going out fighting."

Wonderful line he expresses, too bad it is true. What held true in '1776' remains true in 1976. Same with fishing rights and the underlying current of slavery. Then it was black slaves that the Declaration sought to protect. Next week on the ballot it is women rights.

'1776' is a good civics lesson. It is also a lesson in cooperation of the creative folks at the Fine Arts Center, who produced, directed, choreographed and managed the production.

Calling on Hammerich again he writes..."it is unlikely that we will have many more opportunities to see this show performed so well with a full cast...the reason being that no professional company can afford to stage it with 27 Equity actors, now that the Broadway run is finished..."

Welcome Back

For years UMass Homecoming has been a gala affair by and for frats and the alumni. This year for Homecoming the annual events will be all the sweeter with the presence of a very sweet lady, one who has floated and performed her way from Orchard Hill to the top nightclubs in this country and particularly in the Orient.

From the good hometown audience of the Pub in Amherst to the star studded stages on national T.V., from a show stopper at the TOC to the near impossible position of following in her fathers footsteps.

The concert of Natalie Cole, Grammy award winner, Capitol recording artist and UMass ('72) graduate is all a part of this homecoming, and it happens this next Tuesday at the Fine Arts Center.

The long awaited return performance of Cole is part of the University and Black Homecoming week. Also appearing with Cole will be Reconstruction, a rhythm and blues group with the same roots as Cole, training and performing to the Amherst area audiences.

Cole is a graduate of UMass, '72. She first performed as a vocalist at The Pub in Amherst in 1971. After leaving Amherst, she pursued her musical career following the footsteps of her legendary father, the late great Nat 'King' Cole.

Her first album, Inseparable' and the hit tune 'This Will Be' won her two Grammy Awards for Best New Female Vocalist-Rhythm and Blues and Best New Artist of The Year.

Last month she was presented with another award for her new album, 'Natalie.' Her second release rose to the top twenty in Billboard and has been on the charts 23 weeks.

Since her local debut Natalie has performed at the top nightclubs, Copa, Diplomat, Shepards and the famous Mr. Kelly's in Chicago. She has toured nationally and internationally and recently won awards for her performances in Japan.

Her numerous television appearances include specials on the Mike Douglas and Jack Paar Shows.

Appearing with Cole for Homecoming is Reconstruction, an Amherst area group that is making its own musical waves. Formed three years ago, Reconstruction has progressed from practicing in dormitory lounges into a headlining act on their own.

Their appearances in western Massachusetts are usually standing room only. This summer the four man contemporary funk rock rhythm and blues group performed in Boston and Hartford with return engagements scheduled after their strong performances. After hearing the group perform at UMass last year Ella Fitzgerald noted that the group "performing as it does insures a true preservation of Black music in America."

Reconstruction will be backed by Sunlight and Shade, also from UMass.

Tickets are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets. For more information call 545-2511.

Eating Around Town

by Lauren J. Traub

The New Townhouse Restaurant
Route 9, Amherst-Belchertown Line

Luncheon served Tues. - Sat. 11:30 - 2:30
Dinner served Tues. - Thurs. 5-9 p.m., Fri. & Sat. 5-10 p.m., Sun. 12-8 p.m. Closed Mon.
253-7561

The New Townhouse Restaurant, taken over almost three years ago by Siegfried and Trudy Renner, has a spacious, homey "living-room" type atmosphere which is at once consistent and dichotomous with their amazingly varied menu. The atmosphere is unpretentious, yet over 30 entrees, some quite sophisticated are listed on the menu. The luncheon menu is slightly more condensed, leaning towards lighter dishes, and hearty sandwiches. In addition, daily printed menu inserts announce the luncheon and dinner specials. Center tables here are well lit and widely spaced; the booths along the wall are darker and more intimate. Waitresses sport colorful peasant blouses and dirndls, straight from Germany.

Dinners range in price from $5.50 for Broiled Schrod with Lemon Butter to $8.95 for a variety of steaks, and roast beef. A large assortment of seafood dishes, and different preparations of beef are listed, also a scattering of Siegfried and Trudy's native German dishes, including the ever-popular Wiener Schnitzel, for $5.95. Included in the price of all dinners are: relish tray, soup or juice, bread and butter, salad, choice of vegetable and potato, dessert, and beverage.

The relish tray was served while we enjoyed our cocktails, and consisted of cottage cheese with assorted crackers, three bean salad, and an exceptional homemade giardiniera of large crisp chunks of fresh cauliflower, carrot, and celery in a teasingly bitey vinaigrette. Soups of the day were Pea with Bacon, or a richly flavored onion with fresh crouton. The "fresh baked goods" as described on the menu turned out to be commercial slices of light and dark rye bread, but even these were distinguished by the butter pats which were regally clad in blue and gold wrappers.

Lauren J Traub

Escargots Bourgignon as an appetizer ($2.50) were not the least bit sandy or chewy, and served with crisp toast points to soak in their garlicked butter.

We chose two of the "specialties du jour" for dinner. The German Sampler ($7.90) gave the opportunity to try the traditional German dishes of Sauerbrauten (marinated, long simmered, and thinly sliced "pot roast"), Knockwurst, Bratwurst (a spicier sausage), Goulash, hot Sauerkraut, and Sweet and Sour Red Cabbage, and noodles.

The Surf and Turf ($7.95) consisted of Sirloin Steak, Baked Stuffed Shrimp, Buttered Alaskan King Crab, and coleslaw. Needless to say, the serving sizes are more than adequate, especially with the numerous preceding courses, and doggy bags are cheerfully provided.

The Steak and Sauerbrauten were skillfully prepared; the Steak cooked as ordered, and both tender and flavorful. Also especially good were the red cabbage, and sauerkraut which, though both are made from cabbage, were two distinctly different taste experiences.

Although a choice of four desserts is included in each dinner price, we opted instead for the Special Homemade Pies (at an extra charge). If you can possibly find room, the excellent Sour Cream Pie ($.85) is similar to cheesecake but more tart, and of a lighter consistency. The Grasshopper Pie ($.95) is absolutely the piece de resistance, with its chocolate graham cracker crust, and cool fluffy mint filling.

Prices at the Townhouse seem more than reasonable considering the quality and quantity of dinners, and their accompanying side courses. Bring a hearty hunger, and "Guten Appetit!"

RY COODER
Chicken Skin Music
(Warners)

Ry Cooder has been making perfect albums for five years now, and this his fifth one, continues the unbroken line of his development of American music. There is really no one in above ground music quite like Ry Cooder. Even Pete Seeger, who bridges the time between Woody Guthrie and Ry, is a stylist in one basic mode, while Ry has dabbled in the many musical idioms that all are included under the cover of American music. This time out, Chicken Skin Music includes Hawaiian and "Tex-Mex" music with peerless results.

Not as accessible as his prior album, Paradise and Lunch, Chicken Skin is nonetheless filled with enjoyable, joyous music. The starting out point for Ry on the album is the west coast. Previous albums have been musical travelogues ranging from the Dust Bowl and east coast of the depression, to Trinidad, and to Mexico. Chicken Skin will get you into a private party Ry is having with Flaco Jimenez, a star in San Antonio, Texas, and two of Hawaii's biggest musicians, Gabby Pahinui and Atta Isaacs. In between, Ry uses traditional and popular music (like "I Got Mine" from the minstrel era, and "Stand By Me", from the Fifties), nine songs in all, to create this American music retrospective.

Production and arrangements are by Ry. It is in the liner notes, also by Cooder, that the true intent and purpose behind this album and Cooder's music making in general comes out. So in his own words, "the years of work and friendship...reach a level of real understanding and mutuality in music — sort of solemn but optimistic."

After The Dust Settles
(RCA)

Juice Newton plays acoustic guitar and sings country style in a strong and resourceful voice. Silver Spur complements Juice's vocals and adds to the country flavor with their pedal steel, lap slide, dobro and bottleneck guitars, piano, bass, drums and percussion. Juice sings with feeling, but often horn and string arrangements accompany the music in an attempt to emphasize the ups and downs in her songs of love's pains and pleasures. The music varies in a range from easy listening to country-rock.

Situational Poetry

Slapstick, or Lonesome No More!
by Kurt Vonnegut
243pp. Delacorte Press
by Mark Leccese

"This is the closest I will ever come to writing an autobiography," Vonnegut begins the prologue to Slapstick. "It is about what life feels like to me."

Life cannot feel like too much to a man who calls his autobiography of emotions Slapstick "because it is grotesque situational poetry-like the slapstick film comedies." Vonnegut seems to see life as one unbearably long slapstick, so situationally absurd that one's only reaction can be to laugh.

His main character is a seven-foot-tall neandertholoid, Wilbur Daffodil-11 Swain, a former best-selling pediatrician author, Senator from Vermont, and the last President of the now defunct United States. A hundred years old and living in the lobby of the Empire State Building amidst the ruins of Manhattan, made a ghost-town by "The GreenDeath", Wilbur sits down and writes, to whom it may concern, these memoirs.

Wilbur is one half of a genius, the other half being his twin sister Eliza Mallon Swain. They are a single genius only when they are in touching distance of each other. Born twin neadertholoid monsters to very wealthy parents, they were sent away to live as idiots in an ancient Vermont mansion. While for fifteen years they pretend to live as idiots when anyone is near, they secretly read thousands of books, and write essays of such foresight and brilliance that many years later the Chinese, who now are by far the most advanced culture on earth, come and ask Wilbur to read them.

The odd, symbiotic relationship of Eliza and Wilbur allows Vonnegut to develop his theme, which is his feelings on love. Vonnegut deals with love as he deals with life; believing that there is nothing below its surface, and that there is really nothing so great on the surface.

At one point Wilbur decides that since he has read so many books that say that love is the most important thing in the world, he should tell Eliza that he loves her. He tells her, she thinks about it for a minute, and makes up her mind that she doesn't like to be told. "It's as though you were pointing a gun at my head,' she said. 'It's just a way of getting somebody to say something they probably don't mean.' "

Vonnegut tells us in the prologue that love for him has never been anything more than "common decency". He even admits that he cannot distinguish between the love he has for people and the love he has for dogs.

Philosophically, Vonnegut is an absurdist, a person who believes that life has no purpose, no reason, and all one can do is live it. He had resigned himself to life, but this book brings a new twist to this old Vonnegut theme: Now 54, Vonnegut tentatively says that the hundred-year-old Wilbur may be Vonnegut himself, "experimenting with being old." So for Vonnegut, the most important thing in his life is now "bargaining in good faith with destiny."

The themes of the book may be stark and dreary, but this does not make the book difficult reading; Vonnegut is one of the best stylists writing popular fiction. His prose is well-honed and very readable, his symbols are never too obscure (sometimes, in fact, they are clumsily blatant), and his themes are obvious.

Slapstick is a very good read. It is breezy and witty and, because of its autobiographical nature, a must for the true Vonnegut student.

The criteria people use in selecting courses astounds me. Why would anyone lose a night's sleep over the right instructor or that elusive Rhetoric? Instead, more important considerations should be analyzed first, those being: time (just draw a line through 8:00's), pass—failability, and quite importantly, location of lecture. Too many times the room listings in the description guide go unused, and my purpose is to help bring that factor to account. Clip out this critique and when 'Pbh. Aud.' pops up next pre-registration, you'll know to can the course.

GOESSMAN AUDITORIUM
(Climatology Lab)

The place isn't half as bad in early fall, but once they get the steam cranked up, look out. The temperature on any given day can range between 30-98.6'', but is usally found toward the extremes. How can you tell the sauna days from the frigidaires? A simple rule of thumb is as follows: When the air is warm outside, the room will be cold, and should flakes fall for your 9:05, cutoffs just may be appropriate.

As I said before, aside from the weather, Goessman has some class. Not only has it withstood the test of time, but it is quite possibly the world's only hall with a stained glass window. Watch out for falling plaster, though.

MORRILL AUDITORIUM

This fine room has combined lack of leg room and a non-existent center aisle to require perimeter seats for everyone. Forget getting lost in the crowd here. Any attempt to reach the center seats will, if you're lucky, only result in a momentary stoppage of class while you get up from whoever's lap you have fallen in. If you must reach the middle, your best bet may be to start back row center and climb forward.

One plus, is that there is often very worthwhile grafitti to be found on the desks.

SBA 116
(The Amphitheater)

If you've got to take 50 minutes of notes somewhere, this is the place. Not only do the seats swivel, but should you take a gut there, you can always sit back and fantasize that you really did get into medical school. The place is honestly tiered like Harvard Med. Shut your eyes, and there you are, watching a cadaver being sliced on the podium.

HERTER 227
(The Lounge)

If TWA could fit 227 in a 747, they would make a billion. The place is ideal for inactivity. With plenty of leg room, comfortable seats, carpeting and soft lighting, it lacks only champagne and music for perfection. It is especially nice for film or slide courses, such as an Art History. The movie screen is a registered eccentric, and on any given day, may or may not respond to a flick of the switch.

HASBROUK 124
(The Crib)

If the day ever comes that you will flunk Physics 141 unless you 'ace' the coming hourly, disregard your given room assignment and sneak into 124. With a slope rivaling Mt. Fuji, you can easily sleaze a glance over your desk and grab the circled answers from the fellow below. And who knows, if your bifocals are clean, the IBM sheet may just be in range.

Those are the big ones. I have to apologize for neglecting Bartlett, Stockbridge and a few others, but my journeys have yet to lead to those places. Anyway, You've got the scoop and you can use it to plan for your future. Or else you can just rip it up for gerbil litter and go on suffering through 'core C's' in some tomb. Hey, it's your education.

Cloud Busters of 1908

CLOUD BUSTERS OF 1908 OR LUDDITES ARE BIG BUSINESS

November 30, 1908. A small figure in a whaleskin slicker walks up the slick slopes of Mt. Warner in Hadley. A torrential freezing rain beats down on the figure as it struggles against the high wind and cold. He carries a coil of cable, a pack full of electrical equipment and a long metal pole.

A branch blows off a tree with a loud crack and lands behind him. He ignores it. The unbound clasps of his galoshes click as he climbs. He imagines that they are clicking in Morse code. Out on Cape Cod, a single light burning in its gondola, a dark dirigible is tethered to a light house, the tip of its elliptical form points into the gale. Night.

Fifty eight bottles of beer on the wall, fifty eight bottles of beer, sing the galoshes.

SHRINNNG-G-G ARRIBGIT?!

Hooper House is old even in 1908, a large wooden dorm at Mass Aggie. The rain threw itself with singleminded force against the dark panes, the ageless seige of earth by sky, while inside the ageless students mostly slept. But Billy Jones and Ernest Hare sat up in the storm with a towel over the light, drinking gin from coffee cups and holding watch with friendships warmth against the night. They were also waiting..

Billy flipped open his watch fob and squinted at the dial in mock concern. "Whattaya say we're not gonna make chapel again tomorrow."

"So what. We've only gone to four this year anyhow. What time is it, anyway?"

"Two thirty."

"Loomis should be about up there by now."

"If it wasn't for him buying us this firewater I'd've told him to take a walk instead of waitin' up. Take a walk! Hahahaha..."

"You're slipping, ace," said Ernest Hare. Billy promptly fell out of his chair.

If one of those bottles should happen to fall...

Captain Xeno Phobotnik fiddled impatiently with the knobs on the wireless. His eyes looked like they were about to pop out of his head and he stroked his beard like he wanted to pull it out. Like somehow it was bothering him. There was only white noise from the bull-steer antler of a cornucopia of a loud-speaker."Vis iss nacht gut, Biswold," muttered the Balto-Prussian aviator.

Biswold, a shrunken man with grey gums, blueveined forehead and palsy, looked up at the Captain through his monocle and omnipresent smog of a Gaulois and rubbed a sore along his leg through his ill-fitting pressed black trousers.

He said, "Ja."

The captain paced the gondola, pausing at the windows to stare out balefully into the grey sleet, while Biswold lapsed into trances and visions induced by the bleached static from the wireless.

Mahlon Loomis got to the top of Mount Warner and rested for a minute in the shelter of a rock thrust up from the earth. Pulling out a hipflask he took a quick swig of gin and recapped it, grimacing and beating his arms about in the cold soak. He tall, angular, ravaged form stood with blue eyes staring into the sky, scanning the faint horizon, judging the clouds, focused always elsewhere, never in front of him, never in the present, focused always on the shadow of a mad dream that was dangerous even if it never came true. Measuring his moment carefully he picked up the metal rod and tensed, and as he plunged it into the earth, he screamed.

What over 2500 people experienced at last weeks' presentation was a shrewd compromise. The Fine Arts Center production is one of a kind in the Pioneer Valley as the production uses four professional actors for the leads and fills the remaining parts with local talent.

Fritz Steinway, director of the Fine Arts Center and producer of 1776 said it simply, "We have some great talent in the area...here was a chance for our local talent to work with and learn with the professionals. The talent comes from all areas of the university, students, faculty, administrators and townspeople...we gave them the opportunity and they took it, and made the best of it."

Steinway is correct with that statement, as members of the cast frequently comment of the total experience of working with the Broadway people. They are pros and handle themselves with the class, style and flair one would expect from a professional in any field.

It has been a two way street of learning experience. The local cast has gleaned from the professionals and the pros have learned from the cast.

Stubby Kaye feels the experience has been good for him. On the WMUA radio show "Off The Hook" Kaye informed the audience that "after doing 1776 twice 'in the round', the chance to work here at UMass in this hall has been good for me...you can't put a finger on exactly what one learns when it happens, but I'll tell you, working with this cast has been a good experience for me."

It has been a good experience for all involved. The professors and students of the production gave up their evenings for seven weeks, five weeks in preparation of the Broadway people. The madness referred to as a 'Broadway musical production' seemed to have some strange magic which kepted these people working, learning and growing together. Night after night, weekends lost never to be regained, the rehearsal schedule absorbed free time like the government man looking for your taxes.

Five nights a week, every week and then on weekends, all with the idea of presenting a production never before attempted at this university, the fusion of professional and local talent.

Those who attended the first three shows, or read the Collegian know of the stars, Stubby Kaye, Darrell Sandeen, William Linton, Barry Busse. Another writer in this issue (Kevin Turcotte) comments on these people. They are the stars from New York and Hollywood. There are other stars. They were the talent who devoted their time without any financial reward, they worked and grew; is it for the smell of the greasepaint, the roar of the crowd, or the satisfaction of being able to perform to their friends, relatives, to you?

Yes, there are many productions at UMass where the local talent can display their wares, but not with the support of the talent, or the direction, or the choreography, the stage crew, etc., etc., etc., so strongly offered in this production.

Steve Scheerer, the proud and musical Virginia learned from the stars. His show stopping song allowed for individual interpretations and style possible in '1776' but unlikely with a local production. The same with Peter Cox, a vocalist with Reconstruction. Peter has performed in night clubs and cabarets for years now, but the opportunity to solo in the concert hall with the direction of Alan Light, the expertise of Fred Tillis, music director and the helpful comments of Barry Busse were more than what is offered in his daily classes at UMass or any other institute of learning.

Russ Mann as John Hancock is new to the stage. '1776' was his second show. To observe Russ at day one of rehearsals and then to have the pleasure of watching him as he reminds the audience via John Adams that he would not forget his responsibility with his tie breaking vote is pure pleasure. For Russ it was an experience that he has enjoyed and most likely will continue to expand effort in this crazed world often known as show business.

Peter Tolan as Reverend Witherspoon hopes to be a comedian someday. The chance to work alongside with Stubby Kaye, the man of many one-liners was ideal for him.

Right down the line it has been a good experience for the cast. Conrad Bergschneider, Jim Coelho, Bill McManus, Ed Christie, James Mead, they all offered something individual to the production and then with the experience gleaned from '1776' took something from it.

For Dee Greaze it was a break of five years of nightclub acts as a rock and roll screamer onto the translucent image of the straight role. For d greaze and the entire cast it was a discipline. Glenn Cohen, a UMass theatre major lived his dream. "I eat, sleep, listen to and read '1776'...it is my favorite musical." Performing as the gasping cancerous congressman from Delaware, Glenn had the audience pushing themselves backward into their seats with his quick believable fainting spell.

Little Richard once noted that 'stars are made not born." It is possible that some astrological happenings occurred within the last seven weeks.

For the professors, instructors and administrators the production offered an opportunity to express creativity, to work with their students in an informal basis, and as the students, to work with the stars.

John d'Armand, as John Dickinson, the only real visual villain of the production achieved the actors level of nirvana as he left the stage. Whenever the audience cheers the villain's exit, or offered obscenities towards the stage that actor has successfully played his role. If at any time, anywhere, an actor can evoke in the audience a feeling so strong to make the audience cheer his demise, that actor has succeeded in his role. John, a voice instructor at UMass reached that level in '1776'.

Eric James, a Fine Arts Center employee, played his role as a delightful Scottish drawing pleasant smiles from the audience. The same with Clarence Boyer who sang so softly, apt for a music instructor, and the same to Richard DuBois who not only performed as Livingston, but also offered his time, effort and voice as associate music director. Stas Rodish and Fritz Farrington added their distinctive style to the production with their acting.

Although the production of '1776' appears on the cover value as a monument to the male ego, the casting would fail if not for the superb acting of the women portrayed in '1776'. The roles of Martha and Abigail were both double casted.

Madonna Meager and Marcy Benoit shared the part of Abigail Adams; Madonna performing to a warm ovation last week with Marcy scheduled for this weekend's productions. The same applies to Susan McCarthy who sang and danced so smoothly to the delight of the cast and audience. This week Peggy Louraine will play the loving wife of Thomas Jefferson, Darrell Sandeen.

Fred Tillis is the musical director of '1776'. He formed an orchestra of UMass for this production. Robin Mac Rostie, an employee of the Fine Arts Center, offered numerous hours to teaching nine men to dance the minuet. That performance, with and without music, is a credit to her patience and professionalism.

The quarterback of the entire production was Lewis Louraine, stage manager. Lewis not only spent the entire time in rehearsals as the cast did, but in the 'hours off' he with the tech crew under the direction of Jim Mac Rostie set the stage and prepared the Fine Arts Center Concert hall; laying out close to two miles of cable for lights and sound. The crew installed 124 lights, eight microphones and speakers and rebuilt the sets for the UMass stage. They also procured an oversized Liberty bell for the production and every other large or little task involved with the show.

It is almost over. Three shows down with two remaining on Homecoming Weekend. All the hours of rehearsals and time spent outside learning lines, songs, and dances. For all involved it has been one very large undertaking, and when the final curtain sets most will probably be happy that the experience is theirs.

"1776"
AT FAC
by Kevin Turcotte

"1776", a musical comedy showing at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Saturday, October 23, and Sunday the 24th, is enjoyable and entertaining even if it misses being a "great" play.

The play is directed by Alan Light, who also functions as the coordinator of entertainment activities for both the Fine Arts Center and the Fine Arts Council.

The action in the play takes place in Philadelphia in the overwarm chambers of the Continental Congress between May 8 and July 4, 1776, and relates the conception and signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Contrary to the impression received from posters advertising the play, William Linton, not Stubby Kaye, stars in the production. Linton plays a fiery John Adams, considered "obnoxious and disliked" by the rest of the Congress. He is a man with a dream — independence for the colonies — and won't rest until all of Congress takes up his dream as well.

He is faced with a largely apathetic Congress at the outset of the play and in his opening lines he says: "I have come to the conclusion that one useless man is called a disgrace, two are called a law firm...and three or more are called a Congress." Little wonder they considered him obnoxious.

Benjamin Franklin as portrayed by Stubby Kaye is Adams' ally in this Congressional split. Kaye played Franklin strictly for laughs. When not quoting himself, Franklin is taking bows as "the inventor of the stove." Where Franklin was a wit, Kaye is a joker; but no matter, he is funny and he keeps the audience laughing.

Both Kaye and Linton have played their respective roles in other shows and the polish is evident in their performances.

Darrell Sandeen, perhaps most widely known for his role as the talking statue in the Sentry Insurance commercials, puts in an excellent performance as the reticent Thomas Jefferson. Described by Franklin as a "red-headed tombstone," Jefferson is the man Adams ultimately coerces into writing the Declaration during a satirical, bureaucratic buck-passing, song entitled, "But, Mr. Adams."

Barry Busse is a very convincing racist as the Congressman from South Carolina. As Edward Rutledge, Busse sings "Molasses to Rum," a scathing attack on Northern hypocrisy towards slavery.

One of the most unique aspects of the play is its use of professionals for the key roles and non-professionals for all others.

Deserving of special notice among the non-professionals were: Steve R. Scheerer, A UMass drama student who turned in an especial-"Lee" exuberant performance in his song, "The Lees of Old Virginia"; John d'Armand, a UMass professor, who played the staunch anti-independence Congressman from Pennsylvania; and Peter David Cox, another UMass student, also lead singer in the Rhythm and Blues band, "Reconstruction" who as Washington's rag-tag courier sang the single best song in the play, "Momma, Look Sharp", a souful retelling of the death of one of his friends, shot at Lexington.

The idea for using non-professionals came from Director Light, David Letters, who worked on Publicity for the play, said, "It is the first time anything like that ever happened here."

The songs are catchy type show tunes and another song worthy of mention is "Cool, Cool, Considerate Men," an artful satire of politicians led by John d'Armand as John Dickinson from Pennsylvania. The Congressmen who aren't willing to stick their necks out for independence perform a dainty minuet as the Congressional Secretary, played by UMass student, Dee Greaze, reads a message from George Washington, describing the advance of the British troops in New York. The choreography by Robin MacRostie is the perfect political metaphor as the Congressmen deliberately sidestep and revolve while Greaze reads on about the desperate odds and the inadequate Continental Army facing the enemy.

My overall impression is that the actors worked very hard and well on what is basically just a good play. The material itself seemed to lack the excellence the actors were striving for.

At one part in the play, John Adams worries about his image and Franklin tells him, "Oh, don't worry about it — the history books will clean it up." This, it seems, is the main focus of the play; reversing what the history books cleaned up. The musical humanizes a fixed conception of our forefathers as genital-less thinking machines. Jefferson can't write the Declaration until he is reunited with his wife, and spends a day and a half in bed with her. Franklin doesn't want to inspect troops until he finds out there is "whoring and drinking" to be had also. Adams brags that at 40, he still has his virility.

One of the faults with this type of humanizing with such a large cast (23 actors on stage at times) is that any identifying characteristics have to be treated as "handles" on the roles. Thus, the large majority of actors on stage have undeveloped characters. This is not a fault of the actors but a requirement of the script.

In spite of these faults, the play is entertaining even though it doesn't take the extra step to achieve excellence.

From the Orchestra Pit
by James A. Nollet

There is a song in 1776 entitled "The Egg", wherein Ben Franklin, John Adams, and Thomas Jefferson compare the birth of the United States to a bird emerging from its shell. They wonder what kind of bird it will be (turkey (!), dove, or eagle), and finally decide on the latter.

Speaking from the vantage point of being a member of the orchestra, I feel as though this musical is like the bird described in the song — a show which emerged from hesitant rehearsals into a very, very fine production.

Both the student singers and the orchestra have been preparing for weeks. Passersby going to and from the main library could attest to the singers' almost nightly rehearsals in Old Chapel, occuring since mid-September. The orchestra has likewise been rehearsing since mid-September, every Monday night in the FAC.

The tempo, if you will, increased sharply last week when everybody rehearsed nightly from Monday night onward until Opening Night, last Friday night. Wednesday night was the occasion of the first dress rehearsal, and the first time we tried to run the show straight through without repeating any numbers or correcting any mistakes. It did not go very well. Several times, lines had to be prompted from offstage; the orchestra itself was still absorbing new members unfamiliar with their parts, and the co-ordination between singers and orchestra at times broke down. After the rehearsal, one of the actors, a member of the music faculty, said that he thought off-stage prompting would continue for the duration of the show.

However, on the next night, the final rehearsal, few of the above awkward moments occured, save that the string section was still weak (They were largely to solve their problems by Opening Night.). Nobody forgot a line, and the singers blended well with the orchestra. At one point, Ben Franklin accidentally interrupted John Adams, and without pause in his flow of speech, apologized to Adams as they walked off the stage together. The style with which he did it caused hysterical laughter in the orchestra pit. Indeed throughout the rehearsals, Stubby Kaye and John Linton, who play Ben Franklin and John Adams respectively, excelled not only in acting but in spreading a joyous enthusiasm to everybody involved in the production.

And then there were the performances before live audiences. As well as the final rehearsal went, it did not compare to Opening Night, because the actors lacked a live audience. When they had their audience, the acting altered subtlely in order to derive the maximum dramatic effect from the audience and to derive from them a maximum response.

It's already an excellent show. With the anticipated capacity crowds expected next week, I expect the actors to rise to even greater heights. People fortunate to have seats for this weekend's shows are in for a totally entertaining evening.

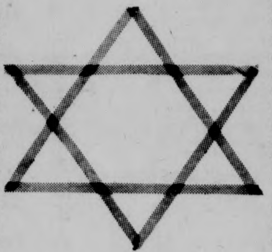
Jewish Art

by Hanna Harris

Despite the contentions of many art historians and critics, Jewish art is alive and well and has been living for as many millenia as the Jewish people.

Ellen Saltman received her masters degree in religion at Smith College and is presently working on a book on Jewish art. In a stimulating and engrossing lecture on the subject she spoke vigorously and enthusiastically on the development of Jewish art and on the problems inherent in preserving and defining the art of a persecuted people.



There has been little if any recognition of the existence and influence of Jewish art on the history of art. However, much of the doubt of art critics concerning the existence of Jewish art is based on misconceptions. One such misconception stems from a misinterpretation of the second commandment which forbids the making of graven images. This, however, relates to idolatry and does not prohibit the making of art. The fact that there is no Jewish art style and that Jewish art cannot be categorized or placed in a particular school of art has also created misconceptions. Thus, it has been the fate of most Jewish art to be tossed into and lost within the larger art historical categories. Nonetheless, there is an established reality of the existence of an ancient Jewish art tradition. The question of Jewish art however, was not even taken seriously until the discovery in 1935 of an early third century synagogue, Dura Europus in eastern Syria. The walls of the synagogue were covered with wall paintings of Biblical subjects such as Moses crossing the Red Sea, and the Purim story.

In defining Jewish art, Mrs. Saltman states that Jewish art may be divided into two types. The first is art which has served the Jewish people through ritual and ceremony and art that adorns the Jewish environment. The second type is modern Jewish art created after the 19th century. The art created prior to the 19th century is very different from modern Jewish art. The key to the difference is the amount of emotional input and impact created by the object.

The questions of the problems of authorship and of whether the religion of the artist is an essential element in defining a work as Jewish art were raised. Jewish art prior to the 19th century was a non-subjective art and rarely reflected any personal sense of Jewish identification, thus the religious background of the artist was irrelevant. However, art after the 19th century reflects a strong subjective Jewish statement therefore the Jewish background of the artist is a significant factor in the definition of modern Jewish art.

Although this first talk in a series of three basically served as a survey covering broad areas and touching only lightly upon different aspects of the art of Jewish people, some fascinating questions were raised. The tradition of Jewish art in antiquity and the consequential influence of this on Early Christian art is an exciting area which is presently being researched. For there are reflections in early Christian art of Jewish histories and legends indicating that the Christian artist was aware of an antecedent Jewish art. The use of symbolism in Jewish art both ancient and modern and the development of synagogue architecture were other areas briefly touched upon.

The field is an open one and those interested may attend the third lecture (the date is of yet undetermined) or contact Mrs. Saltman at (1)539-9382. Also recommended is the book Jewish Art by Cecil Roth.

Tracy Nelson
Time Is On My Side
(MCA)

Tracy Nelson paints pictures of a tough woman who's been through some tough times. Singing in a style reminiscent of Bonnie Raitt, with a tinge of Janis Joplin, Nelson has a low, resonant voice somewhere between Joan Baez and Bessie Smith. On Time Is On My Side, she sings original tunes (except the title cut) in a style that crosses R&B, C&W, and folk genres, with strong conviction steeped in the gospel tradition.

Nelson gets hefty support from a plethora of excellent west coast musicians including Jim Gordon, and Crosby & Nash's recent rhythm section.

Tracy Nelson has been kicking around for years, and this album shows that she is well worthy of a great deal more attention than she has received to date.

FIREBALLET
Two, Too
(Passport)

Fireballet is one of the few progressive American bands, if you like labels. Their first album, released last year and produced by Ian McDonald, was a decent album that was marked by excellent instrumentation despite weak vocals. Two, Too also has some really superb musical interludes. However, the vocals are pretentious, offensive, and downright unlistenably awful at times. Another weakness of the album is over-orchestration. Although not as outrageous as the vocals, throughout, the music becomes cluttered with strings and over-elaborate arrangements.

Side one kicks off on the wrong foot with a commercial number, "Great Expectations," which unfortunately showcases vocals. The second song, "Chinatown Boulevards" is the best on the album. There is so much going on, it makes your head spin. "It's About Time" is also a pretty good cut with great melodic lines running throughout. The second side follows a similar pattern. "Desireee" is basically another mushy commercial tune. "Flash" shows that the vocals don't have to be awful. Here they are reminiscent of Jon Anderson and help make this one of the album's best songs. "Carrollon" gets a little tedious despite strong instrumental work once again. "Montage en Filigree," a nice mellow number, closes the album out.

Throughout, riffs and melodies seem stolen from somewhere or another. This album would be really good just the same, except for these shitty vocals. These musicians can get it together, but you've got to force yourself to listen. Like their first album, this one is destined for the cut-out bins soon. (C).

HARRY CHAPIN
On The Road To Kingdom Come
(Elektra)

Hot on the heels of his spectacularly triumphant live double album, Greatest Stories, Harry Chapin hits the mark again with his newest, On The Road To Kingdom Come. Weaving his works of social commentary ("The Mayor of Candor Lied" and the Phil Ochs inspired "The Parade's Still Passing By" are best) and ironical levity ("Roll Down The River" and the title track), Harry proves once again that he is one of America's foremost folk singers. Another of this album's better tunes is the buoyant "Laugh Man," in which Harry, playing the role of a frustrated two bit comic, intones, "I'm caught inside a bubble that I realize just broke. Alone with a microphone, my real life's a joke."

Unveiled on this album is Harry's new cellist, Ron Evanuik. He replaces Mike Masters, whose virtuosic performances were a grand highlight of the live album. Evanuik is not quite as capable as the masterly Masters, but he's more than adequate; he acceptably fills the bill. Being worthy of special mention for his work here is Harry's bassist, Big John Wallace.

Taking it all in, On The Road To Kingdom Come should appeal to all of Harry's steady fans as well as earning him a parcel of new ones. Even though a few of his melodies sometimes seem to be a bit repetitious and suspiciously similar to past works, his main strength — the ability to express the feelings of human emotions via his splendid lyrics — shines through like a beacon in the night. This effort earns a "Harry don't tarry around". AB.

MANN'S
MANFRED EARTH BAND
The Roaring Silence
(Warners)

Familiar from out of a 13 year connection in music, Manfred Mann and his Earth Band (Chris Thompson, vocals and guitar; Dave Fleet, lead guitar; Chris Slade, drums; and Colin Pattenden, bass) greet us this year with a most impressive album. The cover is among the most original of the year, and the music within is a far cry from the simplicity of 1963's "Diddy Wah Diddy."

Opening with a refreshing, non-cover treatment of Springsteen's "Blinded By the Light", the Earth Band is clearly out to get your attention. The second Springsteen tune they've done, it becomes their own, transcending the New Jersey idiom it was first cast in.

All tunes except "Blinded" and the Incredible String Band's "Singing the Dolphin Through" are by group members. They display a wide range of current musical influences and directions, falling somewhere between what might pass for electric folk-rock of the Seventies, ("The Road to Babylon") and some sub-stellar, earthy jazz synthesizer ("Starbird"). Sort of a cosmic connection to life on earth. Manfred Mann is still making good music.

I hear a lot of rock and roll these days, most of it in the hands of people and personalities out of control. The result is frustrating. Those who tried to make rock an 'art' killed it at its roots, and those who claim to rock today are most often mimicking style not generating the energy.

This is good rock and roll. The band borrows influences but not style. Manfred Mann knew how to rock in 1963. He came back with "Pretty Flamingo" (covered by Rod Stewart this summer) in 1966. He came out with Bob Dylan's "Mighty Quinn" in '69. Now he's got the sounds of Roaring Silence. Does he know something you should?

Time and ... Timelessness

JONGKIND AND THE PRE-IMPRESSIONISTS

by Stacy Belkind

Smith College Museum of Art in conjunction with the Sterling and Francis Clark Institute is presenting the exhibition, "Jongkind and the Pre-Impressionists: Painters of the Ecole Saint-Simeon" through December 5 at Smith College. The amassing of this rich collection of mid to late 19th century French paintings was made possible through the cooperation of various museums, universities and private collections.

The exhibition is composed of 110 paintings, watercolors, prints and drawings by the artists of the Ecole Saint-Simeon; a name derived from the coastal area of Normandy in which these artists painted. The collection at the Smith Museum includes such masters as Boudin, Corot, Courbet, Daughbigny, Jongkind, Millet and Monet.

Johan Barthold Jongkind is represented by 34 of his works, thus making this the first major exhibition to honor him since 1939. Born 1819 in Holland, Jongkind ventured to France as a young man where he settled and spent most of his life. It was Jongkind who helped to shape the palette of the Impressionist artists to follow. Jongkind and his contemporaries were already experimenting with outdoor light sources and approached their paintings with a freshness of observation. Although Jongkind painted his oils indoors, his sketches and watercolors were executed outside the studio. Claude Monet, the symbolic leader of the Impressionists wrote that he owed much of his development and perceptual growth to Jongkind. This exhibition is most informative in helping the viewer to understand how one school of artists (Pre-Impressionists) influence another (Impressionists.) One has only to look at Jongkind's handling of light, color, brushstroke and subject matter to understand his influence on Monet and the Impressionists.

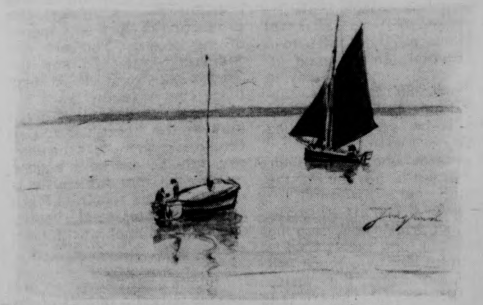
Frigates
by Johan Barthold Jongkind c. 1852

Alexandre Thiollet's painting of the "Fish Auction" (n.d.), depicts a fish market on a beach in which the customers and sellers have been transformed into active dabs of color. There is a three dimensional quality to the painting inviting the viewer to participate in the action.

In Louis Alexandre Dubourg's painting of "Jetty at Honfleur" (1870-75), the viewer can share in the quiet Sunday stroll along the boardwalk. We watch the ships and wonderful expanse of sky that they sail against as if we were there. There is a quiet elegance in the conversations of these people that doesn't seem to exist anymore.

The watercolor "Fishing Boats" (1862), by Eugene Isabey is a gem. It is filled with luminous clarity; the slendor verticality of the masts contrasts subtly with the horizontality of the sea and shore. Isabey's choice of pastel colors is exquisite.



Two Fishing Boats on Calm Water
Jongkind

The majority of paintings on display are marine related. We witness different aspects of life along the coast of Normandy in the second half of the 19th century; the strength of the tall ships, the intimacy of the markets that dot the harbors, the quiet Sunday promenade along the wharf, and the fullness of sky that can only be witnessed against the sea. From the various sea and landscapes, we are able to catch an historical glimpse of another century's; lifestyle.

Almost every painting in this collection is worthy of mention. It is difficult to select a choice few paintings for discussion, however, I feel that the works I have chosen to discuss convey the spirit that unites this exhibition.

Monet's painting "Two Men Fishing" (1880), was done with black crayon on scratchboard on gesso-like paper. It reveals the artists sense of humor in his placing the two boats so close together and the sleepy posture that the fishermen assume. It seems as if the two fishermen have been at sea for centuries.

Timelessness is in essence, the unifying element of this collection. The sea is forever active, and artists still find it to be a most challenging subject to portray.

BLUE OYSTER CULT
Agents of Fortune
(Columbia)

This album must be something special. Finally, although probably unfortunately, Blue Oyster Cult has become an acceptable commercial item. With this album, the Cult is currently making itself known on FM as well as AM airwaves across America. Why this sudden popularity? Well it was bound to come. Agents of Fortune is the fifth release from B.O.C. Their last was an incredible double live album which although it made some waves failed to establish them as the true kings of heavy metal that they are. But is it heavy metal?

Although it is not their best album, or even their second or third best, it carries with it that mysterious quality of commercial acceptability. Anyone who hears B.O.C. cannot deny that Buck Dharma is one of the most amazing rock guitarists around today. Anyone who listens to the Cult knows that they produce some of the most original, electrifying, sometimes rowdy, sometimes very intriguing music now available at your plastic waffle dealer.

Side one opens with a short and nasty rocker, "This Ain't the Summer of Love." "True Confessions" has a definite AM feel to it, and like almost every song on the album sticks in your brain. The most extreme case of this is "(Don't Fear) The Reaper." Although severely overplayed by radio stations, (who never even owned B.O.C. albums before this), it is still a great song with as solid a riff as you'll find. "E.T.I." grabs you by the balls in the same manner as "Hot Rails to Hell" or "Cities on Flame" as Buck Dharma melts the vinyl with his searing solo. "The Revenge of Vera Gemini", with the aid of Patti Smith's backing vocal closes out this side.

The second side opens with "Sinful Love," a song in the finest B.O.C. traditions. Eric Bloom laments, "I love you like sin, but I won't be your pigeon." Can you help but love it? "Tattoo Vampire" which is almost as devastating is next. These two songs by themselves are worth the price of the album. The next three songs, "Morning Final," "Tenderloin" and "Debbie Denise" are relatively mild tunes which sound more and more complex with every listen. There are no weak songs. Although commercially geared, this album is the same or of higher quality than the previous three studio albums. If you're already a devoted follower, you'll love this album, if not, chances are that there will still be something here for you. Excellent, but heavy metal?

MINGO LEWIS
Flight Never Ending
(Columbia)

Mingo, the debut album of Mingo Lewis, is a combination of jazz, Latin and progressive jazz. Mingo, before forming his new band Lingo, was into a wide spectrum of musical styles, ranging from his days of the club circuit with his father to his stint with Chick Corea and Return to Forever. He also played a few years in between with the James Brown Band and Carlos Santana (though I have failed to find his name on the back of any of my Santana albums).

"Aba Cua", the first cut on the album, is a fresh new approach to Latin music. The rest of the tunes flow on endlessly with some truly great synthesizer, guitar, bass, and conga lines. They rise, fall, intertwine, and do the irregular beat justice. One of the cuts, "Heartsong", composed by the synthesizer player, shows interesting rhythm patterns that make for easy listening. All of the musicians on this album are top-notch. If you are a progressive jazz afficiando you should definitely look into Mingo.

—Jeff Bruell

Earth, Wind and Fire
SPIRIT
(Columbia)

This album is dedicated to the departed member of the group, Charles Stepney, who interestingly enough wrote the 27 second instrumental "Departure." It is a sad lead in to "Biyou," an uptempo instrumental cut with a driving but pleasing backbeat supported by good horn and flute with some very interesting breaks.

Everyone who breathes air on the earth has heard the "star" cut off the LP "Getaway." The LP version is no longer or different from the 45 but the song shows EWF's wonderful ability to teach you something using the dance floor as its "classroom." The song has not only disco appeal but it is also the song that makes you turn the radio up. It's the kind of song everyone likes.

"Saturday Nite" is the good time cut on the LP with a laughin', smokin', jokin' ending. "On your face" also carries the bouncing ball right along. They aren't really typical EWF, but they're good EWF just the same. All the slow cuts are excellent and definitely of EWF class. "Earth, Wind and Fire" (the song not the group) and "Imagination" are the ballad type and I know a lot of beautiful people are going to fall in love (or get real close anyway) to "Burnin' Bush." And if that doesn't work, put on the title cut "Spirit." It's sure to help you get next to that special lady or that certain fella. Check it out!

BOB DYLAN
Hard Rain

I don't find much to like about this album. It is rough, the songs are all given a quickened run through, the recording itself is unprofessional, and the band, the Rolling Thunder Revue, is out of tune and time more often than not.

None of which really matters. If you saw the Revue and—or are a person deep into the mystique of Bob Dylan, this record will probably delight you. This is more of a document, a recording of a moment in time, when Dylan and compatriots took off on a dare and threw the mystique aside. And so, even though the Dylan on the cover is elfin, in white-face make up and eye liner, he became more accesible through Rolling Thunder.

I place this album in the group with Self-Portrait and Pat Garret. Perhaps the release is out only to coincide with the Dylan TV special, and is then a marketing move. Whatever, Hard Rain is a second-rate effort from a first rate artist, and if it were any one other than Dylan doing it, the album would never get any attention.

Craig Roche

Aquarian Dream
AQUARIAN DREAM
(Buddah)

"Aquarian Dream" is brought to us under the production of Norman Connors of the recent "You are My Starship" fame. To say the least it is a strong LP. At least three cuts have the disco appeal and will do well if given play in the discos. D.J.'s in Philly and New York already say that it's not only a good mover, but that the music is just plain beautiful. The LP is a rare combination of beauty and the beat that works very well.

All cuts are well written and exhibit fully the talents of the artists. There's "Phoenix" and "I'll Always Love You 'T' " to move the feet, (and the mind and soul if you listen carefully) and on the slow side, a remake of the old standard "Let Me Be the One" is very sweet. "Once Again" is also a nice little ballad which is more in the Norman Connors vein.

Connors doesn't play on the album, he leaves the drumming chores in the able hands of Jimmy Morrison, but you know when you listen to it that Connors was very active in the production of the LP.

If you want to lend a little class to your collection, pick up "Aquarian Dream." With its beautiful cover and beautiful music, you'll be proud to display it and play it. Come around to it, it's a "serious" LP.

Steeleye Spans the Ocean

STEELEYE SPAN
Berkeley Performance Center
Boston — October 15th
by David P. Santos

All the ingredients were there: a small, intimate hall, a sold-out performance, and a 100 per cent partisan Steeleye Span following in attendance. Yet something went wrong. Whether it was the no-name folkie who opened up the show or the insufferable delays "due to technical problems," we'll never know what blew the wind out of this concert's sails. One thing seems certain though. It wasn't all of Steeleye Span's fault — a less-than enthusiastic crowd saw to that.

The last time I saw Steeleye Span was in June of 1974 supporting King Crimson at the now defunct Palace Theatre in Providence, Rhode Island. The Spans', showing some true grit, bravely trooped out before a hostile Crimson gathering and won 'em over within four or five songs. Quite impressive to say the least. In a situation like that, Steeleye Span had to really work to get an audience. (Which proceeded to get them bumped off Procol Harum and Jethro Tull tours for obvious reasons). Tonight was different though, these were the real fans and so you take chances. Perhaps because it was their fans, Steeleye saw fit to play the majority of their new album, Rocket Cottage (Chrysalis). The first three songs of the evening were from Cottage and caught everyone off guard. Not that they were bad songs — in fact, they were great — but it has been two years since they last hit New England, so a little familiarity wouldn't have hurt. This wasn't more in evidence when the band charged into the first oldie of the night — "Come O'er Frae France" — from Parcel of Rogues. As far as the audience was concerned, it certainly moved them and Steeleye pulled off a chilling version with Maddy Prior gorgeously vocalizing over the band's spirited ensemble playing.

"AT CRISTEMASSE WEL MYRIE MAY YE DAUNCE"

Among the old material offered were "All Around My Hat," "Hard Times Of Old England," "Royal Forester," "House Of Ushers Well" and "Black Jack Davy." Of notable absence was anything off of Steeleye's best album, the import-only Commoner's Crown. They played five - six numbers from the new disk, plus a hilarious all vocal rave-up of "Forever Blowing Bubbles." Predictably there were lotsa instrumental jigs and, of course, the evening wouldn't have been complete without the still enthralling, captivating — well what else can I say about it? — "Gaudette." This tune still amazes me, all five vocalists — especially Maddy — were right on the mark. They weren't the slightest bit off: stunning!

As a performing group, they were as tight as ever. Bob Johnson is an under-rated guitarist — his efforts tonight went shamefully unnoticed. Some of the biggest surprises of the evening came from Peter Knight, Steeleye's master violinist—mandolinist. He seems to be, with Johnson, the main instrumental focus of the band now. The pair noteably coupled-up for some dazzling exchanges during "Hard Times Of Old England." During some spots of the concert, various members of the audience were wiped-out by Knight's superior violin work. And then there's Maddy Prior — I guess I don't have to tell you about this gal!

While tonight's concert had its low points, it still turned out to be a slightly less than spectacular success. The night's motely crew apparently didn't fully realize how good this band really is. Their lack of contributing energy to Steeleye (yes kids, it's a two-way thing you know) put a little damper on what could have been a mind blowing evening. The Span's had to constantly rely on jigs (Peter Knight again on fiddle!) to liven ourselves up. Towards the end of the show, a frustrated Knight indicated that we should dance if we wanted to — and we did. We clapped, danced in the aisles and watched the world's number one folk-rock band go crazy.

Needless-to-say, I enjoyed myself. I always believed that Steeleye Span was a great band. Unfortunately, they weren't given a chance to prove it adequately. Sure they may have made a tactical error in playing unfamiliar material at the start, but do they have to hit us over the head to get recognition? It would be a damn shame if Steeleye Span were allowed to die the way Fairport Convention did. As Richard Thompson once replied to a heckler asking Fairport to play rock and roll; "This is English rock and roll." Nothing more needs to be said. Thank you very much Maddy, Tim, Rick, Bob, Peter and Nigel.

(A review of Rocket Cottage will be forthcoming. Steeleye Span will be playing at the Bottom Line in NYC soon and I would also like to thank Chrysalis for all the help, contest & concert wise.).

Heavy Black Death

BLACK SABBATH
Technical Ecstasy
(Warner Brothers)

Here a heavy metal riff, there a heavy metal riff, everywhere a heavy metal riff; ol' Black Sabbath had a new heavy metal album; oh no, oh no, oh no! And on this album they had some tunes... Anyhow, it's the honest to goodness truth. The Sabs return with their inimitable brand of bone jarring, eardrum scarring rock. The group continues to milk their basic formula of pile drivin', shit kickin', never to be forgotten—remembered (pick one, depending on your gut reaction to Sabbath) whacko-ness for all that it's worth; millions and millions of bucks.

But seriously, folks, if you've heard one Black Sabbath album you've heard them all. Technical Ecstasy is no exception to the rule. The most memorable tunes are the first cuts on each side; "Back Street Kids" on side one and "All Moving Parts (Stand Still)" on side two. As usual, there is one ballad, "She's Gone," on which our childhood hero, Ozzy Osbourne, just barely succeeds in distinguishing himself from a castrated bull moose. Drummer Bill Ward gets a chance to sing on "It's Alright," a semi-melodic effort, at least in comparison to Ozzy's inane warblings. "Rock 'n' Roll Doctor" could almost be termed as danceable; a simply amazing thing to be able to say about any Sabbath song.

So, if you wanna get ahead in life, just repeat these magical lines from "All Moving Parts (Stand Still)"; "I like choking toys. You've got to see me before you meet the boys. Teacher's burnt the school, he's had enough of sticking to the rules. People stop and see, he's got to be more decadent than me." Right on, no? Yes? Maybe? Could be, so give Ozzy and the boys in the band a "you get what you deserve when you buy this disc." BC.

Wood, Bromery address faculty financial woes

Sex discrimination in salaries, the process of collective bargaining said faculty merit increases were discussed yesterday by UMass President Robert C. Wood and other campus officials before the faculty senate.

"Sex discrimination is not only limited to this campus," Wood told the senate in response to the recent complaint filed by the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), concerning inequity in faculty salary based on sex.

"The collegial system of governance works better on this campus than an employer-employe adversary system which unionization would instigate," said Wood when asked about establishing a collective bargaining unit for faculty here.

"The legislature is concerned with major disturbances that will occur by the differences between bargaining agencies," said Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

The Massachusetts State Labor Relations Commission announced which faculty members would be included in the bargaining unit. Today the commission will decide on an election day when the faculty will decide whether to establish a collective bargaining unit and if so, which of the two competing organizations will represent them.

MSP and the American Association of University Professors are the two competing organizations.

Bromery estimated that 2,000 persons between the Boston and Amherst campuses will be eligible to vote.

Bromery pointed to an article that appeared in Thursday's Boston Globe which described how collective bargaining for state employes had almost been killed in a legislative session last week.

A motion that would allocate $12 million for funding of collective bargaining and to eliminate merit increases will be decided on by a legislative committee, he said. Once an agreement is met, the legislature will convene in special session.

Wood, who also discussed merit salary increases, said, "I'm convinced that the University needs a new package." He said that he had to decide budgetary priorities three years ago when Massachusetts was entering fiscal crisis and had decided, along with the presidents of other state colleges and universities, to discontinue merit increases.

A faculty senate committee had also agreed that faculties could do without merit salary increases, he said.

Wood said that "for the current fiscal year we are operating with $108 million, which is an increase of more than 85 per cent over the budget of fiscal year 1971

He has given Dukakis a preliminary proposal of $124.3 million for fiscal year 1978. Wood said a "standstill" budget for UMass, keeping present programs and enrollments at their 1977 levels, would be $115 million.

Election '76 candidates attacked by debaters

By ROB THAYER
Collegian Staff

A national leader of the Revolutionary Student Brigade (RSB) said, in a debate last night at Mahar Auditorium, that he was "sick and tired of electing the lesser of two evils" in the presidential race.

Cliff Kornfield, national spokesperson of the RSB, said "I think the biggest question for people is not who to vote for but whether or not to vote."

"Election '76 — Which Way Forward?" was the topic of the debate held before an audience of 100 and carried live over radio station WMUA.

The UMass Democrats were represented in the forum by former speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, Jonathan Hite, while Glenn Marston represented the College Republicans.

"Our vote does count," said Hite, "and Jimmy Carter is our best option."

Although Hite conceded that Carter "is not the perfect candidate," he cited the "progressive tradition" of the Democratic Party.

"It has been the role of the Democratic Party to seek out the problems of the nation and act on them," said Hite.

Marston referred to Carter as "a southern-fried version of the slick spending Democrat." He also praised Ford's atmosphere of candor and proposals in the areas of energy and law and order.

Kornfield drew a burst of laughter from the audience when he quoted television personality Johnny Carson, who likened the voter's choice to "fear of the unknown and fear of the known."

Marston criticized the "fiscal irresponsibility," he added.

While Kornfield called on people to demonstrate in Boston on Election Day, Hite and Marston lauded the records of their respective candidates.

Following the debate the participants fielded general questions about their candidates from the audience.

The debate was monitored by Joseph Manhoney, executive editor of the Collegian.

Hite and Marston directed most of their attacks at each other.

Dukakis critical of UMass budget

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis yesterday called the 1978 UMass budget request of $124.3 million "ridiculous and irresponsible" and said UMass President Robert C. Wood had not joined the heads of other state organizations in facing Massachusetts' fiscal crisis.

Dukakis made the statements at the Colonial Hilton in Northampton where he was signing two pieces of legislation.

The University is currently operating under a budget of $108 million.

Wood, at a regular meeting of the Faculty Senate, said yesterday he would need an allottment of $115 million next year to maintain programs and enrollments at their current level.

He said he requested the $124.3 million because there is "clear evidence" that the Commonwealth is beginning to feel an economic recovery.

Dukakis said that Wood was the only state official not to prepare a contingency plan for the current fiscal year, which would cut the present budget by five per cent, in the event that funding shortages occur later on.

President Wood was not available for comment on this point.

At a trustee meeting earlier this year, Education Secretary Paul Parks said the Dukakis administration would support the legislature's attempts to cut down the budget request.

NEAG to form committee to hire assistant head

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

The Northeast Area Government (NEAG) announced last night that a committee will be formed for the selection of a new Northeast Sylvan area assistant director.

Also discussed at the NEAG meeting was the equipping of an area weight an exercise room in Johnson House, and a representative from the Northeast Women's Center informed the NEAG group of the resources available in the Center.

Selection committee composition has been set as the following: four heads of residence, with at least one from Northeast or one from Sylvan, two Sylvan area students, to be appointed by the area government of Sylvan, and two students from Northeast, to be appointed by the NEAG.

Of the total members on the selection committee, no less than four are to be female and no less than three are to be representative of the Third World community.

John Weisse, president of the NEAG, pointed out that this would be "an excellent opportunity for women and Third World students to have a say in the selection process of an important office of the area."

If there are any interested residents of the Northeast area interested in serving on this selection committee, they are asked to contact their dorm representative or Weisse, he said.

The NEAG voted unanimously on a motion to put out for bid the requested equipment for the area weight and exercise room.

The body also voted that the weight room will not be opened to area residents until security measures for the room have been determined.

Northeast Women's Center spokesperson Mary Elizabeth LeBlonde announced to the body the resources that are available through the Center.

A women's studies library, and counseling service to women with problems concerning social issues and legal rights, are some of the services offered, she said.

Auto workshop saves you bucks

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

Joe College starts his car and waits for the sound of a smoothly purring engine. What was that? What had once been a smooth purr has degenerated into a knock, rattle and a clunk. Clutching the steering wheel he contemplates his alternatives...

Does this sound familiar? One alternative for repairs all car-owning students should be aware of is the Student Auto Workshop.

The Student Auto Workshop, located on the first floor of the Campus Center garage, offers students an alternative to expensive gas station services. The Workshop provides the space, tools, advice and assistance to people who enjoy doing their own auto maintenance and repairs.

Bill Molloy, who has been running the shop for three years, said it is primarily for students who know what they are doing, or who want to learn how to do what to do.

A rate charge of $2.50 for the first hour and $1.50 for every additional hour is charged for every car. This charge pays for broken or lost tools. There is also a small inventory of parts, oil and other auto supplies for sale on the premises.

Malloy said, "I hope we can get a phone soon, so we can order parts."

We've done everything from pulling out an entire engine to a simple oil change," said Molloy. Repair manuals are available to beginners in the auto repair game.

Recently the shop has been busier than usual with people 'winterizing' their cars. "We've done a lot of mufflers lately because of the Massachusetts inspection," Malloy said.

The shop is open to all students from 3 p.m. to 10 p.m. on weekdays and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays.

Valley Health Plan gets Dukakis boost

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Governor Michael S. Dukakis signed legislation yesterday making maintenance of the Valley Health Plan easier, as well as other prepaid health plans established in the state.

Predicting "far-reaching and beneficial effects on health care in the Commonwealth," Dukakis also signed legislation making it easier to establish prepaid health plans, known as health maintenance organizations (HMO), in the Commonwealth.

HMO's provide a wide range of medical care to subscribers for a predetermined fee, with an emphasis on preventive medicine. Three plans are currently operating in Massachusetts, including the Valley Health Plan which is a cooperative venture of UMass Health Service and Amherst Medical Associates, a public-private partnership.

The measure, House Bill 5274, gives legal stature to HMO's, enables them to qualify for federal loans, empowers the Insurance Commissioner to regulate them, provides consumer safeguards, and allows HMO's to contract directly with members rather than using insurance companies as intermediaries.

Dukakis said this bill will "make it easier for existing HMO's to improve services, expand coverage and contain costs, and it eliminates the numerous legal barriers which discouraged the start of new HMO's.."

Barry W. Averill, UMass Health Services Director, said last night that the legislation was needed as official state policy supporting HMO's as providing quality health care at low costs.

"We're pleased to be state pioneers in providing this type of service. I believe the University is a forerunner in its involvement with the Valley Health Plan, and the faculty and staff here are involved in it." said Averill.

"With health costs and insurance premiums soaring," Dukakis said, "HMO's are an increasingly attractive way for families to receive excellent and economical health care".

He noted that nationwide, prepaid plans provide services for approximately 20 per cent less money than normal health insurance. A large part of the savings, Dukakis noted, is attributable to the lower hospitalization rate for HMO members.

Dukakis said the hospitalization for Harvard Community Health Plan, the largest HMO in the state, is 350 days per year for each 1000 members out of a total of 60,000 members, compared with 850 for Blue Cross subscribers.

The Valley Health Plan has forecast a similarly low hospital utilization rate for its members.

Dukakis added that HMO's should save the Commonwealth substantial health care dollars for state employes and Medicaid patients. The bulk of the Valley Plan's 2400 members are state employes as well, principally from UMass, Northampton State Hospital and Belchertown State School.

The bill also permits HMO's to apply for certification as a federal HMO, a designation which carries with it at least two big benefits. First, the plans can receive low cost federal loans. Second, the federal government can require employers of more than 25 persons in the region served by the HMO to offer membership as an alternative to traditional health insurance.

Averill said the Valley Health Plan will definitely apply for certification as a federal HMO in the near future.

Averill said that the program, which began Oct. 1, is working well and both students and staff here are providing services for patients.

The two other established health plans besides the Valley Health Plan here and the Harvard Community Plan in Boston are the North Quabbin Health Plan in Athol and Fallon Community Health Plan which is scheduled to begin enrolling members next year.

Seabrook faces anti-nuke rally

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

An anti-nuclear rally and alternative energy fair will take place tomorrow and Sunday at Hampton Beach State Park, in Hampton, N.H., at 1 p.m. Hampton is seven miles from Seabrook, nuclear power plant construction site, according to J. Kevin Crocker, member of the Clamshell Alliance and Alternative Energy Coalition.

The Clamshell Alliance, an organization made up of anti-nuke groups from all over New England, is sponsoring the rally.

It has been just two months since the Seabrook nuclear power plant occupation. Crocker said, "The occupation lasted about one hour before everyone was arrested.

"Of the 180 people who occupied, 178 had been through non-violent training including instructions on what to do in case of an arrest," said Crocker.

There is a spring occupation planned for April 30 at Seabrook, N.H., May Day Weekend, by the Clamshell Alliance. "We're going to close it down ... this will be the victory weekend," he added.

Between now and then there will be a number of educational workshops conducted by local anti-nuke groups, including training for the May Day Weekend, said Crocker. "And we're not just going after Seabrook ... we're going to shut down all the nuclear power plants," said Crocker.

"The fair will be Sunday too, including a couple of good plays. That's a good day to meet members of the Clamshell Alliance and learn more about what's going on," said Crocker.

The UMass Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) is organizing students from the Five College area and citizens from western Massachusetts to form a motor vehicle caravan to the rally on Saturday.

Drivers are needed for the rally tomorrow, said Diane Woolf, member of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group. The caravan is leaving from parking lot 33, across from Whitmore Administration Building, at 9:00 a.m., tomorrow morning.

Riders will be assigned to drivers with available space on a first-come, first-served basis, and will be asked to share transportation expenses. There will be a bus travelling round-trip at a cost of $5 per person, said Crocker.

Crocker said that if one wants to attend the rally, and have a car or need a ride, submit your name to the CEQ office, in room 306 of the Student Union, or call 5-0618 as soon as possible.

Everyone should wear heavy fall clothing and bring water, as there is no water supply there, stressed Crocker.

DC alternative in danger

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Ask students what they dislike about Dining Commons food, and they usually have a long list of complaints. Participants of the Kosher meal plan not only enjoy their food; they are trying to save their special meal plan from extinction.

The 43 students who eat on the kosher meal plan were recently informed by Marie Cappadona that if next semester's enrollment was not increased to 80, the plan would be abolished.

The kosher meal plan differs from others by allowing students to eat breakfast or lunch at any dining commons but only at Hampden for dinner where kosher meals are served Monday through Friday.

The kitchen was started in the Spring of 1975 by Marie V. Cappadona of the Food Services Program due to urgings by students who followed kosher diets. Cappadona set up the plan and developed menus.

Cappadona said she feels that with its present enrollment the kitchen doesn't provide a real service to the student community.

"When you have two full time people making meals for 40 people it is an injustice. If we had twice as many people it would be worthwhile," she said.

The kosher kitchen now employs a full time cook, serving woman and several work study students to serve, prepare meals and wash dishes.

Handgun question tackled by referendum

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

This is the fifth in a nine-part series presenting the pros and cons of each of the nine referendum items that will appear on the Massachusetts ballot Nov. 2.

Referendum No. 5 will decide if privately owned handguns will continue to be allowed in Massachusetts. The actual question on the ballot will read: "Do you approve of a law, summarized below, which was disapproved by the House of Representatives on May 3, 1976, by a vote of 197-35, and on which no vote was taken by the Senate before May 5, 1976?"

A Yes vote is a vote to prohibit the private possession and sale of handguns.

A No vote is a vote to continue to allow licensed individuals to possess and sell handguns.

Question five is a law proposed by an initiative petition by a group of citizens who have obtained the required number of signatures from Massachusetts voters to place the question on the ballot for direct approval or disapproval by the voters.

As summarized in the Massachusetts Information for Voters 1976, "the proposed legislation would prohibit the possession, ownership or sale of any weapons from which a shot or bullet can be discharged and has a barrel length of less than sixteen inches."

The law would not apply to military personnel, law enforcement officers, federally licensed manufacturers and wholesalers, common carriers in the ordinary course of transport, or to historical societies or museums.

The law does not affect rifles or shotguns or certain antiques and replicas.

The proposal does not change the existing statutory penalties for unlawful possession, ownership or sale of handguns, including provisions imposing mandatory sentences.

Handgun owners would have to surrender their weapons to any law enforcement agency in the state within six months of the effective date. Owners will be compensated at a rate determined by the Commissioner of Public Safety.

The majority of the Joint Legislative Committee on Public Safety has recommended that the bill not be passed. Their reasons were as follows:

1.) The number of registered firearms that are involved in homicides is negligible. The criminal element will still be able to obtain handguns either from the black market or other states.

2.) The petition would create a fiscal problem. The report has estimated that proper compensation for gun owners would cost $125 million. The confiscation would require a "massive layer of additional bureaucracy" in the Department of Public Safety. This would create a further burden on the tax payer.

The majority report recommends continued experimentation with the Bartley-Fox law that imposes a mandatory sentence of one year in prison for possession of illegal firearms.

The minority report, which recommends passage of the bill, gives a set of figures much lower than the majority report for costs of implementation. For instance, it estimates that the cost of compensation will only be about $50 million.

It also asserts that under the Massachusetts Constitution and the Constitution of the United States a private citizen does not have a right to personally bear arms. The constitution does guarantee the general public the right to organize a militia and within the rights of the militia a citizen may bear arms. The report claims that the United States Supreme Court has upheld this interpretation four times.

The report also claims that ninety-nine per cent of all house breaks occur in unoccupied homes, therefore refuting the need of citizens to protect their homes through the use of handguns.

The minority report's key point is that seventy-two per cent of all homocides in this country occur among relatives or acquaintances, not criminals in the normal sense. Of the homocides, fifty-three per cent are by handguns.

There is a confusing element to Question Five. Originally it was to be divided into two parts, 5A and 5B, only one of which could become law. 5B was a legislative substitute to the initiative petition that stated that "any person who is convicted of committing a violent crime while armed with any firearm, rifle or shotgun, loaded or unloaded, shall serve the minimum sentence imposed by the judge without suspension, probation, parole, deduction for good conduct."

Question 5B will not appear on the ballot.

Further information on referendum 5 can be obtained from either one of the following organizations: People vs. Handguns, Box 229, Newton, Mass. 02160 or Gun Owners Action League, Box 272, Southboro, Mass 01772.

Which direction sister?

By NASSER EGA

"Now where the hell is this Whitmore Building?" I asked myself for the umpteenth time. I felt like shouting for help, but I didn't. "You have to preserve your integrity. Be cool man," I keep on repeating to myself.

The moment I saw this Black woman walking in my direction, the integrity and "be cool" bull collapsed all around me. I needed help real bad. Maybe she can help me? "Hi, how are you doing", she said, and being a gentleman, and a gentleman who needed help at that, turned on all my African charm and replied "All right, thank-you." Before I could finish the "You" she had walked three yards past me. I never even got the chance to ask for help. Why did she walk past me? After all, it was she who spoke to me first.

Oh well, back to square one. Then I noticed this blonde, blue eyed woman giving me the eye (or I thought I did). "Why not ask her if she knows where Whitmore is?", I asked myself and the next moment there I was pouring my problems out to her. "Yeah, sure, I'll show you where Whitmore is, she replied, giving me a smile and a squeeze on the arm. (I came to find out later that the smile and squeeze on the arm might have meant ("See I can get along with Blacks"). She then pulled me towards a direction, presumably, Whitmore, and while we walked she was practically leaning on me. "Why was she leaning on me?" I asked myself over and over again "Was it an American custom?" Or.....? "No," I told myself, "It can't be that. She doesn't even know you."

"Hey I don't believe it!" It's that Black lady again. I'll beat her to the 'HOW ARE YOU DOING' stuf. "How do you do" I said. No response. Must be my accent. Let me try my American accent. "What's Up." No response. Maybe she got a whiff of my African shave lotion? It must be that. I have to get an American shave lotion now. Hold it, there is something forming on her face. (Its' got to be a smile). Why is she frowning and shaking her head? I can read the disgust written all over her face. But why? One time she treats me like a human being and the next time it was like I was the scum of the earth. I just don't understand the sudden change of character. "To Hell with it," I told myself. But deep down it hurt and bothered me. Why is there a look of anxiety (or is it worry?) on the blondes' face? Did she notice the 'friendly greeting' I got? But why should it concern her? She's even stopped leaning on me and acting as if she just can't wait to drop me off at Whitmore. "Theres' Whitmore". I could detect the tone of relief in her voice and with a hurriedly "see you around" she disappeared.

That didn't bother me. What did was the way the Black woman acted. Did I do something wrong? Did I hurt her? But the only thing I did was ask directions. O' God! Now I know. It was because of that blonde. But doesn't she understand that Iam a new student who didn't know where Whitmore is and appreciated the help I got. Was she hurt because she feels I don't identify with my race? Did she think that I was ashamed of being Black? Does what happened mean that I want to white? Does it mean that I entertain the illusion that the white color deserves my respect and appreciation and that my race and color does not.

Doesn't she see that I am possessed by the love I have for the brothers and sisters of my race? Does she think I won't acknowledge the fact that she's my sister because I'm with a white woman?

But I don't blame her. I only wish we could have worked out this misconception. These misconceptions hurt the foundation of Black unity at UMass and everywhere else. Any unity in the Black race has been a result of the efforts of the Black women rather than the illustrations of the Black man. When the Black man leaves the family because of sociological factors and pride, negatively balancing with economics, it is the Black woman who remains the roots of the family. The family is the basic unit in any culture. It is her character that remains to shine as the strength and integrity necessary to hold the family together. Her roots are the foundation, and I LOVE HER FOR IT! I only wish we were better equipped to work at the misconceptions. They are a direct result of institutionalized racism in the minds of Third World people. The emotional hatred she has for the situation should not create an indifference for her to communicate with the Black man. The emotional hatred the Black man has for a similar situation should not create an indifference for him to communicate with the Black woman.

I want to go to that sister and break down that misconception and communicate with her with a real love and a true understanding of the whole situation. If she doesn't want anything to do with me, then I will be hurt and afraid of approaching another Black woman for fear of being hurt again.

The role of the person that breaks down the misconceptions is the person who works to get the facts of the situation before jumping to conclusions. This has to be a mutual cooperation within the Third World community in order for there to be a Third World unity.

I plead to the brothers & sisters to accept and expound on this solution.

Basketball begins Black Homecoming

By KATHE SANDLER
Black Affairs Editor

Black homecoming has arrived, and began with a bounce for those in Boyden Gym last night, as the student faculty basketball game got underway.

The quarter of the game was led by the faculty team by a score of 17-12. As three varsity players and one j.v. joined the Students in the second quarter, the court was their's with Mike Pyatt and Derek Claiburne scoring like a demons. Faculty player Stan Kinard caught fire sinking balls in the third quarter, but with players like Brad Johnson and Mike and Derek back in the game during the fourth, the score shiften again, faculty moving up close toward the ending with a student victory of 99-95.

This is only the first in a series of events organized and sponsored through the collective efforts of the Black Cultural Center, the Afro-Am Society and Malcolm X Center. Whether your preference is sports, variety talent, disco partying or balls elegante, there's something cooking for everyone.

The grand finale begins with the welcoming back of UMass graduate and superstar in concert, Ms. Natalie Cole. Check the schedule for your entertainment pleasure and we'll see you there.

Monday, October 25 is showtime for the fabulous Gil Scott-Heron, Brian Jackson and the Midnight Band. The turn-out for the 8:00 concert is expected to be great. Fans of the poet-lyricist-singer Gil Scott-Heron, are tuned in to the politically conscious messages in all of Gil's works, whether it is the theme of despair in his monster "The Bottle" or the biting wit of "The H20 Blues." The title to his latest album "South Africa To South Caroline" is self explanatory. "...What's the word? JOHANNESBURG'."

A protest to Eldridge Cleaver

By IRMA McCLAURIN

It is a regressive step for the black community that Eldridge Cleaver has been asked by the Distinguished Visitors Program to speak on the campus of UMass next week. By extending their invitation, DVP has put itself into the historic racist role which assumes that white folks know what's good for black folks.

Since his return to the U.S., Mr. Cleaver's purpose has been extremely clear. He is intent upon collaborating with the police in order to preserve his life for capitalist prosperity. His recent counterrevolutionary role parallels that of the police infiltrators who were key in helping the police and F.B.I. disrupt, divide and, at times, totally eliminate Black Nationalists' Organizations and groups.

To have Cleaver speak on this campus is a slap in the face to all Third World, progressive and left struggles in this country.

Internationally, Cleaver has made himself an undesirable element in the socialist country of Cuba. His actions in Cuba and later in Algiers undoubtedly lead one to conclude that Cleaver may have been acting as an agent of this government during his stay in those countries.

For those of us who are organizing around South Africa, Mr. Cleaver's attitude about Cuba should be of real concern. There has never been any doubt or confusion about the role Cuba has played in the liberation struggles of Mozambique, Guinea Bissau, and recently Angola. Yet such confusion does exist, along with unquestionable doubt, about Mr. Cleaver's role.

The following letter was written by Lennox Hinds, Director of the National Conference of Black Lawyers in response to an article Cleaver wrote. The article appeared in the May 3rd issue of Newsweek Magazine and denounces Cuba's support of the African liberation struggles as a "dumping ground" policy — a policy of "exporting (Cuba's) fighting men to Africa" in order to quell domestic unrest. Although the article was refused by Newsweek, Mr. Hinds has still been able to find a forum for those interested in hearing the truth. We must analyze carefully what it means for Cleaver to have a forum.

In addition we must decide on a course of action to prevent such slaps in the face from occurring again.

Irma McClaurin of the Western Massachusetts Regional of the Venceremos Brigade is a guest commentator for Black Affairs.

(Mr. Hinds letter appears courtesy of the Venceremos Newsletter, Vol. 3, No. 7, May, 1976).

The May 3rd issue of Newsweek carries a piece by Eldridge Cleaver which purports to analyze Cuban motives regarding Africa. Basing his argument on two interviews, one conducted in 1969 and another in 1973, Mr. Cleaver argues that Cuban policy is motivated by racism and the requirements of domestic control.

I personally find his alleged sources unconvincing. One would suppose that if Mr. Cleaver's informants held such strong opinions, they and Mr. Cleaver would have disseminated their views to a larger audience long before now. Moreover, our credulity regarding Mr. Cleaver is further strained by his willful ignorance of Cuba and its history. For example, does anyone really think Fidel Castro was the choice of Cuba's traditional ruling class?

In discussing Cuban motives, Mr. Cleaver largely avoids the consequences of Cuban policy itself. The important question is, has Cuba's role in Africa contributed to the freedom of black African nations from colonial rule? In fact, Cuba has an impressive record of support for African movements opposing colonialism and working for national independence.

Even Mr. Cleaver must admit this. He refers to Cuba's support of Sounds in Motion at FAC

Sounds in Motion, a dynamic company of Black dancers and musicians will be in residence at University of Massachusetts-Amherst Oct. 28-30 through the National Endowment for the Arts Dance Residency Touring Program.

The company will be seen in a single performance on Saturday evening, Oct. 30 at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. The residency program, under the direction of Peter Cox, student intern at the UMass Arts Council, will include two master classes by members of the company on Oct. 28 at 4 p.m. in the North Physical Education Building. Enrollment will be limited and those wishing to participate shoull call the dance department (545-2413). Classes in Congolese dancing will follow the master classes.

The schedule for Sounds in Motion Friday, Oct. 29, will include two lecture — demonstrations, one at 10 a.m. and one at 2 p.m., in the New North School, Springfield. Members of the ensemble will give a free lecture demonstration open to the University community Friday, Oct. 29, at 7 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Founded in 1972 and directed by dancer-choreographer Diane McIntyre, Sounds in Motion is based in Harlem. Performances unite dance, music, design and the spoken word to explore new avenues of Black experience.

McIntyre, a native of Cleveland, received her B.A. in dance from Ohio State University, where she also did graduate work in dance. She has served on the dance faculty of Ohio State, the University of Wisconsin in Milwaukee, the Dance Theatre of Harlem, and New York's High School of Performing Arts.

Included in her most recent choreographic work is "Deep South Suite," with music by Duke Ellington. The piece was choreographed on the Alvin Ailey Repertory Workshop and premiered at Lincoln Center in August, 1976. Called by critics one of the most exciting young choreographers of the day, McIntyre uses the experience as a Black woman as the thrust of her dances, but deals in subjects in such a way that they effect all people, no matter what their background.

Tickets are now on sale at $5, $4 and $3, with special prices for students and senior citizens. The Fine Arts center box office is open 9 to 4 Monday through Friday, telephone 545-2511.

New figures show inflation rate easing

WASHINGTON [AP] — Inflation eased slightly in September but the average wage earner continued to lose ground as purchasing power declined for the second consecutive month.

President Ford and his Democratic challenger, Jimmy Carter, were quick to offer different interpretations yesterday of reports by the Labor Department, the final major economic statistics to be released before the election.

Retail prices rose four-tenths of a per cent last month, compared with increases of five-tenths in each of the preceding three months.

Another report, on purchasing power, was less favorable. It showed the buying power of the average workers' paycheck declined five-tenths of 1 per cent.

In September, price increases were generally smaller across the board than in recent months.

Grocery prices declined one-tenth of a per cent, the first drop since March. Non-food commodities rose four-tenths of a per cent following increases of about six-tenths since May, while the cost of services increased five-tenths, a rate slightly smaller than during the summer months.

Presidential Press Secretary Ron Nessen said the White House was pleased with the consumer price figures because "this is further evidence of a reduction in inflation."

Nessen noted the September increase was the smallest monthly rise since April. He brushed off questions about earnings, saying they were based "I'm told on a very slight reduction in the work week."

Carter accused the administration of making workers the hostages in the fight against inflation.

"For the second month in a row, the paycheck of the average worker has declined," he said in a statement issued by his campaign headquarters.

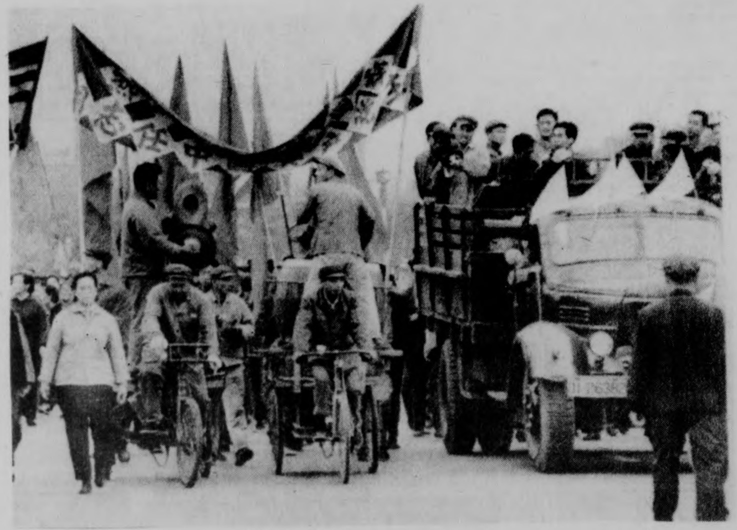
"The Republicans claim the economy is just in a pause but the average worker is actually losing ground every month."

Carter noted that real weekly earnings are now 2 per cent below what they were when Ford took office and called that "the bottom line of the disastrous economic policies," followed by the Republican administration.

September's four-tenths per cent increase in the consumer price index, adjusted to remove seasonal influences, would add up to a compound annual rate of 4.9 per cent. That is near the 5 to 6 per cent rate most economists regard as the underlying rate of inflation in the economy.

Ford has cited progress in reducing inflation as resulting from his economic policies.

Consumer prices rose 12.2 per cent in 1974 and 7 per cent in 1975.



PEKING: Demonstrators on tricycles and a truck are beating gongs and drums hold a rally at Tien An Men square, here yesterday in support of new communist party leader Hua Kuo-feng and the purge of radical leaders in the party. (UPI Telephoto)

Hua named Mao's successor

HONG KONG [UPI] — China last night announced the appointment of Hua Kuo-feng as Chairman of the Chinese Communist party, succeeding Mao Tse-Tung, and confirmed the purge of Mao's widow and three other radical party leaders.

The first official confirmation came in a radiophoto caption transmitted by the New China News Agency. This was followed by an NCNA news report which confirmed the appointment and purge.

The news report was a description of a rally held by more than 1.5 million persons in Peking Thursday. It said the rally was held to "fervently celebrate the appointment of Comrade Hua Kuo-feng as the Chinese Communist party Chairman and Chairman of the Central Military Commission."

The NCNA report also said the demonstration throughout the capital and in Tien An Men Gate of Heavenly Peace Square celebrated the crushing of the "conspiracy of the anti-party clique of Chiang Ching Madame Mao, Wang Hungwen, Chang Chunchao and Yao Wen-yuan who plotted to usurp party and state power."

There was no indication whether Hua had retained his position as premier. There also was no indication who had been chosen to replace the purged radicals, all of whom were members of the party's powerful political bureau politburo. In addition to being a politburo member, Wang was a party vice chairman and Chang was chief political commissioner of the armed forces.

Details of their alleged plot still are not clear. There have been many conflicting reports, including several appearing in wall posters that they plotted the assassination of Hua and the murder of Mao even as he lay on his death bed.

The only charges inofficial reports, which did not name them specifically until Friday's NCNA report, were that they had "betrayed" Mao's thought, tampered with his directives and engaged in plots and conspiracies to seize power.

The demonstrators, NCNA said, carried banners and placards which "fervently hail Comrade Hua Kuo-feng's appointment as Chinese Communist Party Chairman and Central Military Commission Chairman" and "fervently hail the great victory in smashing the conspiracy of the four anti-party clique to usurp party and state power."

Divers find 22 bodies in ferry disaster

DESTREHAN, La. [UPI] — A floating crane lifted the wreckage of a commuter ferry boat from the Mississippi River Thursday while divers searched for victims among autos toppled into the water in a collision with a 22,000-ton tanker.

Twenty-two bodies had been recovered from the scene of Wednesday's accident. At least 56 more passengers were missing. There were only 18 known survivors.

A rescue coordinator said recovery of additional victims along the river or entombed in the submerged cars could push the death toll to 100.

Coast Guard investigators scheduled a formal inquiry into the accident Friday in New Orleans.

The ferry boat George Prince, carrying oil and chemical workers, was rammed broadside by the 664-foot Norwegian tanker Frosta. The 120-foot gray and white ferry boat rolled over on impact and sank within 15 minutes.

Commuters who had stayed in their cars and the cabin of the ferryboat to avoid the predawn cold were trapped or swept to their death in the chilly river.

"It's my feeling the death toll is going to be over 100," said St. Charles Parish Sheriff John O. St. Amant. "There's a good possibility all of the victims will never be found."

That would make the disaster the worst on Mark Twain's river since 1,000 persons died in an explosion aboard the steamboat Sultana near Memphis, Tenn., in 1865.

Former passenger counts rarely are kept on the ferry, which shuttles workers from Destrehan across the river to Luling, 30 miles upstream from New Orleans. President Ford departed from the Destrehan landing on his river boat campaign three weeks ago.

Divers spent the day Wednesday pulling bodies from the ferryboat, which sank at an angle in 90 feet of water, leaving only 20 feet of its bow above the murky surface. Windows and doors were found smashed in the passenger compartment.

"We went through the whole thing," diver Fred Hurt said. "There was no air space anywhere."

Thirty-one cars and four motorcycles slid from the deck of the ferryboat and some drifted downstream at least a half mile. Sonar was used to locate cars which then were marked by bouys for divers.

"We also have officers all along the river within the area," said rescue coordinator Wallace Friloux. "Sheriff's deputies are searching the levee on horseback looking for bodies."

Saul Bellow

Novelist wins Nobel Prize

STOCKHOLM, Sweden [AP] — Novelist Saul Bellow won the Nobel Prize for Literature on Thursday for his books portraying modern man as frightened and alienated but still striving "to find a foothold in a tottering world."

He was the seventh American to win the coveted award and completed an unprecedented sweep of the 1976 prizes by the United States.

Bellow, 61, had been prominently mentioned as a possible winner last year but the 1975 prize went to Italian poet Eugenio Montale.

Bellow, known for caustic comment about writers' awards, continued in the same vein, telling reporters at a Chicago news conference: "The child in me is delighted. The adult is skeptical."

He said the Nobel prize given his friend John Steinbeck in 1962 "made him wretched. I hope it isn't going to make me wretched."

Bellow is due in Stockhold Dec. 10 to collect his $160,000 prize money from Swedish King Karl XVI Gustaf.

Since last week, Americans have also won the 1976 Nobel Prizes in economics, physics, chemistry and medicine, also worth $160,000 each. The awards began in 1901 and are financed from the estate of the late Alfred B. Nobel, the Swedish inventor of dynamite. The Nobel Peace Prize will not be given this year.

Smith threatens to walk out

GENEVA, Switzerland [AP] — Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith threatened yesterday to walk out on Geneva talks on the future of his country if black nationalists "undermine" the U.S.-British package deal he accepted last month.

With both sides testing their strength, Smith talked of a walkout after arriving for informal talks preceding the start on Oct. 28 of the conference called by Britain to work out an interim government. This would guide Rhodesia toward full rule by its 6.4 million blacks in two years.

Ruling out black demands that the 270,000 whites surrender key defense and security positions in the proposed biracial interim government, Smith insisted that white control of these posts was promised him by U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger in securing Smith's agreement to confer. Smith added he has an unsigned document given him by the U.S. secretary to prove it.

"I don't easily get up and walk out," said Smith, who has taken part in a series of fruitless attempts to negotiate a Rhodesian settlement in the 11 years since he declared independence from Britain on Nov. 11, 1965.

But the gap between hard-line positions taken by Smith and black leaders appears wide as new deaths were reported in continued guerrilla raids inside Rhodesia. Security chiefs announced that black nationalist guerrillas had killed three young African policemen, blown up a section of railroad track and attacked a remote farmstead.

Hays avoids prosecution

WASHINGTON [AP] — Justice Department attorneys have recommended against prosecuting former Rep. Wayne L. Hays for allegedly misusing government funds by keeping a mistress on a congressional committee payroll, a knowledgable source said Thursday.

The lawyers reached that decision because they lacked evidence corroborating Elizabeth Ray's account of her relationship with Hays and they felt that she alone would not be a believable witness, the source said.

The two Washington Post reporters who broke the Hays story might have been able to provide the necessary corroborating evidence but they have refused to cooperate with investigators, said the source, a department attorney who discussed the case on condition he not be identified by name.

Hays has acknowledged having an affair with Miss Ray but said he kept her on his Administration Committee payroll at $14,000 a year for doing regular committee work.

Boston food prices up

BOSTON [AP] — Retail food prices fell 0.6 per cent in the Boston area during September the U.S. Labor Department reported yesterday.

The Boston area is the only one in New England the department surveys.

The index for food prices for the area stood 3.6 per cent above the comparable figure for September, 1975.

The department said the cost of food bought in grocery stores fell 0.8 per cent in September, more than offsetting an increase of 0.3 per cent for restaurant meals and snacks.

In grocery stores, fruits and vegetables fell 5.0 per cent; meats, poultry and fish fell 1.3 per cent and cereals and bakery products fell 1.0 per cent.

But dairy products rose 1.6 per cent and other foods rose 2.0 per cent.

Publishers deny discrimination

BOSTON [AP] — Two Boston area book publishers have strongly denied accusations they discriminated against women and minorities.

They are among three publishing companies named in a civil suit brought in U.S. District Court by state Atty. Gen. Francis X. Bellotti. The suit asks back pay for hundreds of past and present workers.

Bellotti said Houghton Mifflin Co., Massachusetts' largest book publisher, discriminated in salary, hiring, promoting and training policies for both women and minorities.

Harold Miller, president of Houghton Mifflin, replied Wednesday: "We deny the allegation of discrimination. We plan to resist the action vigorously."

The other two publishers — Allyn and Bacon, Inc., of Boston and Addison-Wesley Publishing Co. of Reading — were accused of discriminating against women but not other minorities.

Gov. Longley endorses Ford

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — Maine Gov. James B. Longley, the only independent governor in the nation, endorsed Republican President Ford.

Longley, who disclosed Oct. 6 that Ford had telephoned him to request his endorsement, called the President "honest and straightforward." He said Americans want and need those qualities in their chief executive.

The Maine governor said he will vote for Ford on Nov. 2 because the President is a known quantity. "I do not feel this is the time to change a known for an unknown," he said.

Longley likened Ford to former President Harry Truman.

"They both succeeded to the presidency under very difficult conditions and both performed superbly. America gave Harry Truman a chance on his own. I hope America will also give President Ford a chance on his own as he also has earned that right."

A Democrat who turned independent to run for governor in 1974, Longley had refused until Thursday to announce his preference for the Nov. 2 election.

However, he had backed Ford for the GOP nomination.

Carter ahead in campus poll

NEW HAVEN, Conn. [AP] — Jimmy Carter came out ahead of President Ford in polls made by campus newspapers at five large East Coast colleges.

Yale and Harvard students favored Carter 2-1. The margin was less at Princeton, the University of Pennsylvania and Rutgers.

Overall Carter got 54.1 per cent and Ford, 36.2 per cent. The poll included a total of 1,738 students at the five colleges.

Results of the survey were published Thursday in newspapers of the five colleges. At Yale Carter got 61.2 per cent of the votes among students polled, compared to Ford's 27.2 per cent.

At Harvard 60 per cent of the students polled favored Carter, and 31.7 per cent were for Ford.

The closest race was at Princeton, where 48.7 per cent were for Carter and 41.6 were for Ford.

At Pennsylvania 52.4 per cent favored Carter and 41.5 per cent were for Ford.

The Rutgers sample showed 50.8 per cent backing Carter and 37.3 per cent were for Ford.

"It's about what I expected," said Russell Pearce, coordinator of the Yale Carter campaign.

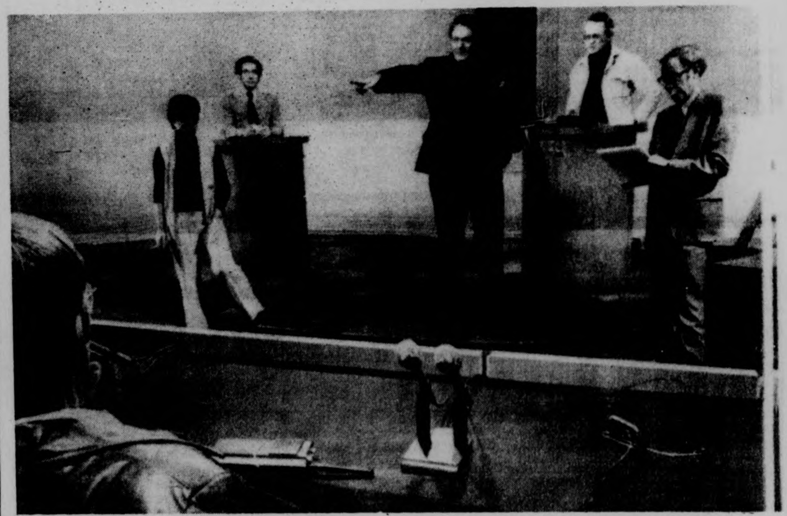
"While many issues may be clouded there is still a clear liberal-conservative split between Carter and President Ford. College students have a traditional concern for the underprivileged, and students at Yale and Harvard will pick the man more concerned with the underprivileged," Pearce said.

"I am really surprised at the Yale turnout," said Victor Perez, Ford campaign coordinator at Yale. "We've done a lot of campaigning around here. But only 15 per cent of the students here are Republican. People are much more liberal at Harvard and Yale than they are elsewhere," he said.

In the same poll 56 per cent of those Yale students surveyed considered themselves left of center or far left.

About half the students at each of the "big three" — Harvard, Yale and Princeton — consider themselves smarter than both Ford and Carter. At the University of Pennsylvania, one in three students feels this way, while at Rutgers, the state university of New Jersey, one in five students believes he is more intelligent than the two presidential candidates.

At Yale, 21 per cent of the students believe they are smarter than Ford but less intelligent than Carter, while 29.2 per cent believe hey are less intelligent than both andidates.



WILLIAMSBURG, Va.: Officials of the TV network pool and the League of Women Voters make light and sound checks on the set of the final Presidential debate at Phi Beta Kappa Hall at the College of William & William yesterday. The debate is scheduled for 9:30 PM EDT tonight.

Good ratings hoped for debates

LOS ANGELES [AP] — The third, final debate between President Ford and Democratic challenger Jimmy Carter starts at 9:30 p.m. EDT tonight with at least one person assuming the ratings will be way up there.

"I assume the ratings will be enormous," says Jim Karayn, director of the debates project for the League of Women Voters, sponsors of the nationally televised pow-wows.

He's optimistic despite the fact that A. C. Nielssen Co. estimates show a slight ratings drop for the second presidential debate and a big drop by comparison for last Friday's sole vice-presidential debate.

Presidential debate No. 1, held Sept. 23 in Philadelphia, was seen in more than 38 million homes. The Nielsen figures only are for the three networks carrying the debate and don't include public TV.

Presidential debate No. 2, held Oct. 6 in San Francisco, was seen in about 700,000 fewer homes than the first.

But last Friday's vice presidential clash in Houston between Sens. Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Walter Mondale, D-Minn., only was seen in about 25.2 million homes, according to Nielsen figures provided by NBC.

Guinea Bissau in these words: "When Castro first embarked upon his African wars, it was a 'safe' thing to do. Nothing could have been more irrelevant back in the early 1960's than fighting the Portuguese in Guinea Bissau." Perhaps it was "irrelevant" to Mr. Cleaver, but certainly not to those in Guinea Bissau who were fighting for and finally won the independence of their country.

Cuba's support of African independence was most recently expressed when Cubans were invited by the People's Republic of Angola to help repulse an onslaught by the racist government of South Africa.

South African regular troops first entered Angola in early August of 1975. On October 23rd, the army of South Africa launched a full-scale invasion across Angola in November, to fight under the command of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA).

An important fact which Mr. Cleaver omits is that Cuban soldiers in Angola are volunteers. Angolans themselves challenge Mr. Cleaver's assertion that Angola is a "dumping grounds" for young black Cubans. Commander Dibala of the People's Republic of Angola's Eastern Front stated at a recent press conference: "The Angolan population was somewhat surprised when they saw Cubans of all colors arrive. Now our people know that Cuba is black, brown and white."

At the same time that Mr. Cleaver condemns Cuban assistance to Angola, he criticizes the Cubans, charging that they failed to bring sufficient assistance to rebel forces in the Congo (now Zaire) in 1961. Mr. Cleaver's acrobatic logic and distorted presentation have but one point of consistency: his attempt to discredit Cuba's anti-colonial and anti-racist position in the world today.

I take particular issue with Mr. Cleaver's vitriolic charge that Cuba is "more dangerous for Black people than is the white racist regime of South Africa." What I observed in Cuba was just the opposite. I personally saw a country where racism has been defeated.

In order to understand Mr. Cleaver's commentary, we should keep in mind that he voluntarily surrendered to federal authorities last November, and is now in a California prison awaiting trial. It is also relevant that Mr. Cleaver will soon appear before Senate hearings on international terrorism. Under such circumstances, we would hardly expect a critical analysis of United States policy in Africa.

Cuba's relations with Africa and the world is an important issue, but one which the U.S. public has had little real opportunity to examine. Until the day when our government lifts its blockade against Cuba, we will unfortunately have to contend with unreliable and self-serving sources such as Eldridge Cleaver.

Kornfield claimed that less thai 50 per cent of the voting populatioi is expected to turn out at the poll: on Nov. 2.

"People who don't vote ar depriving themselves of their righ to participate in the electora system," said Marston.

Hite said he expects more tha 50 per cent of the electorate to cas a ballot in the election.

★ Kosher plan hurting

All meals served there must be certified kosher under Jewish dietary laws by a rabbi who makes a weekly inspection for cleanliness. Meat must be 100 per cent pure beef, bloodless and pass rigorous inspection.

The 10 meal kosher plan costs the same as a regular 14 meal plan. The 14 meal kosher costs $40 more than a regular 14 meal plan.

Cappadona said that there was still a considerable amount of research to be done and definite conclusions haven't been made.

Saul Perlmutter of Hillel, a Jewish cultural organization, said that one reason the plan is failing is that it has not been developed to its full potential. He said he would like to see the students take a more active interest in the plan and make the kitchen a more congenial place to eat.

A meeting of concerned students was held at the kitchen Wednesday night to discuss methods to save the plan, said Cappadona.

"We've decided that next Wednesday night, when the kitchen will be serving turkey, it is the best night to introduce someone to eating kosher," said Robert Spelfogal, a spokesman for the group.

"We are inviting everyone on campus with a meal ticket to try us out," Spelfogal said. A dorm to dorm campaign has been activated to bring out students for next Wednesday's meal, said Spelfogel.

When asked for reasons why the kitchen should be retained besides religious reasons, several students in the Dining Commons cited good food, no lines to wait in and a cook who knows you by name and knows what you want to eat.

Wendy P. Stearns, one of the committee members, summed it up best, "I preferred the food and the atmosphere. When I eat in here people know I'm here. If I dropped dead in the other commons, nobody would notice," she said.

★ Wood meets FacSen

"It is clear that the Commonwealth is making good progress toward fiscal recovery," he said. "The Board of Trustees has formally approved a budget request of $124.3 million for fiscal year 1978."

Wood raised the question of how to keep UMass the primary university in Massachusetts. He said, "one clear answer is that we are the only statewide institution and that is a strength which I am convinced we must continue to build."

He said the Boston campus has the potential to become a major cultural resource for greater Boston in the next several years. "The University at Boston is making important academic progress," said Wood.

"At Worcester, the opening of the University Hospital to inpatients has marked the maturing of the campus into a genuine university medical center as well as a regional resource for health care, and for continuing education for physicians," Wood added.

Wood pointed out that work by UMass faculty has continued to attract outside interest in the form of grants and contracts supporting research.

In the first three months of the current University fiscal year, 99 contract awards have been made for a total of $4.5 million, said Wood.

Wood introduced Paul L. Puryear, the new vice chancellor for academic affairs and provost.

The ultimate high

Last Friday, an ultimate high was reached by a number of area students. Amherst College and UMass Frisbee players met on the field of collective enjoyment and collectively enjoyed a beautiful Fall Friday afternoon beside the Campus Center pond.

I would venture a guess that at least 90 per cent of the UMass players and a majority of the Amherst College players did not know the score of the Ultimate Frisbee game that was played either during the game or after it was completed.

While many throwers participated in the Ultimate game, a large number just threw around the field with others, and spectators wandered by all during the game — some stopping for extended periods of time to watch the soaring discs.

What was important to the UMass players was the rating. After each of our games we gather together after thanking the team we have just played with and everyone gives the game a rating from one to one hundred based on how much fun each had playing. The average of all the ratings taken was a 97.3. It was the highest rating ever given to an ultimate game played by the UMass team. Though some veteran players expressed the opinion afterwards that some of hhe newer players overrated the game because of their innocent enthusiasm, many other veterans were firm in their belief that the game was 100 per cent enjoyable.

I believe the rating is entirely valid and may even be too low. The Amherst players expressed the opinion that we should get together more often considering the closeness of the two schools. During the game, there was never an argument about the validity of a foul call and though everyone was determined to play their best, there were more grinning teeth than grinding teeth. Players congratulated each other on their play and not one temper flared. A conscious effort toward gracious play was made by all participants.

And the best part of the game was the people who weren't even playing, and, instead, were throwing or watching or talking on the sidelines. It evidenced that the game is not something that should be the central focus of players minds, but that the socializing and friendship exhibited are the primary reason Frisbee players gather together.

I was as thrilled about having the people on the sidelines as I was about having the people play Ultimate on the field. I tended to be concerned with the play on the field only when I was on the field. When I was off the field I was concerned with the people on the sidelines and just throwing with someone. The beauty of play and the beauty of people playing cooperatively was a steady beauty that didn't have to be watched constantly to be appreciated as a process. It was a continuum as refreshing as a pool; one could enjoy it whenever one wanted to and didn't even have to think twice about it.

It was something that could be experienced and viewed as beautiful and then be left, and it would still be there when you returned. It was something that could be relied on because the ingredients could be relied on — the people and the attitudes and the weather. The three may not always be evident together, but the potential is always there. That's something to strive for.

That game has made my semester. Even if we don't have another like it, I can continue playing and striving for it secure in the knowledge that other people are also working towards that attainment. The Ultimate high — what a rush!

Some observations

Our attention was attracted recently by certain observations made by two young women in a letter to the editor, complaining that UMass men were not all that they might be. Predictably, a number of aroused males responded rather petulantly that the ladies might have erred in their judgments.

We cannot agree with the former. Indeed, we find that the young lasses, while not completely accurate in their assessment (some UMass males are both sex maniacs and inexperienced), made a rather trenchant observation about the state of things in general. There are indeed "two basic categories" of anything in this world. And, there are only two. This is a difficult point to grasp, so a few words of explication follow.

Now, when discussing dissimilar issues and putting them into their proper basic category, it is useful to have a common denominator. One system widely accepted by philosophers is that one which ascribes to statements, ideas, political positions, and the like either Truth or Falsehood.

The fantastic thing about this system is that its assignments of truth and falsehood are made entirely objectively! In this way, every issue can be quickly and satisfactorily settled by simply assigning the correct side of the issue to the True category and consigning the other to the False group. (It should be noted that certain radical logicians believe that there is more than just truth or falsehood involved; these, however, will not get tenure.)

The problem is that some cretins will not accept the elegant simplicity of the above schema, particularly with respect to political or religious issues. Some will go even so far as to deny that there are two sides to an issue. (our basic premise). For example, Fundamentalists (NOT to be confused with Feminists) are often known to insist that there is only one side to an issue, namely their own. While this approach has much to recommend it, it is so rarely employed by anyone that we need not further consider it.

A greater obstacle to the universal acceptance of the schema is presently by the so-called liberals, who gain their deserved reputation for being "wishy-washy" precisely because they insist that there are MORE than two sides to an issue. This position can, of course, be easily disproven. Imagine that there is an issue which in fact has three sides to it! Assign True to any one of the sides; assign False to either of the others; and then what? There is NOTHING left to assign to the third side! Therefore, there can be no more than two sides to any issue. Simple, isn't it? (This is what is known as a "reductio ad absurdum" proof.)

So we have established that there are two and only two sides to any one issue. A few examples should dispel any lingering doubts as to the efficacy of the schema in settling controversies. In random order:

a. Pornography should be allowed on campus — FALSE
b. Censorship should not be allowed — TRUE
c. Women should not be oppressed — TRUE
d. Women belong in the kitchen after getting home from work — TRUE
e. Poland is Communist — TRUE
f. Communism is oppressive — TRUE
g. Poland is oppressed — FALSE

Clear now?

Again our thanks to the two young women who shared their keen reflections with the campus community, and may we strongly urge them to become Philosophy majors.

A PASSING CAMPAIGN THOUGHT: With Mr. Dole's reputation as a hatchetman now firmly established, we suggest that he tell the American people that "if elected, I shall go to Korea."

The time has come for a change

To the Editor:

Why I am going on a school strike! I want to protest the system they are perpetuating. Has anyone ever stopped to think someone had to teach those folks out there running our lives all those nasty habits? Teaching all kinds of ways to destroy our homes, friends, brothers and sisters, grandparents and lovers too. I demand to be heard, I got a case of G.I. blues. After fighting for this cause and that cause I see myself in no better shape than any other member of the human race. Slow down this isn't a race to the grave.

Take a long good look around. What the hell are we learning? Just think we all believe we knew what we were testing. Fruits from the tree of Knowledge. So this is why I came to college? To learn all of your beautiful ways. "He said I come to destroy the wisdom of the scholars" and no one dare to holler cause they were victims of his evil scheme. I propose a moratorium for those who know that sharing should be the first in our day. For those who don't know what I'm saying close your eyes it's about to begin and start praying. Cause we can't kill the spirit of 76. WISE-GUYS.

From the way I express myself, people find it hard to relate. Just think any person that had economics can relate to why people are starving but can't do a thing about it. People can relate to all the injustices but do little to change them. Remember "In God We Trust" is on our money. Try and separate Church and State, they'll lock you up so fast for conspiracy it would make your head spin.

I have a game for the American people it's called pick your own president. I really don't think the electoral college would allow for such a show of independence. Someone taught America its bad habits. If one was to look at a baby, the child learns all of its bad habits, they don't inherit them.

What I am trying to say there is a new disease going around, it's called an altered state of awareness. To tell if you have this dreaded disease all you have to do is be able to justify what you are doing 100 per cent. If you can do it you are suffering from that disease. A cure is being researched at UMass this fall. I feel this is very important we have parents, friends and loved ones who will directly be affected by next year's graduates.

In the sixties all of the big show stoppers came from the college campuses. All over the world the college plays an important part in the development in the attitude of the people. China, Japan, Germany and the United States just to name a few have showed changes starting with students. We at UMass can do it again. Why should we wait to be followers. The time has come for change. A change in mental development.

Denouncing the death penalty

To the Editor:

On October 26, 1976 the first execution under the reinstated death penalty will take place in the state of Georgia. The death of Anthony Manchetti will probably go unnoticed throughout most of the country for he is only one of the many prisoners, men and women, who have waited on Death Row while the Supreme Court decided their fate. This death heralds the return of the racist and arbitrary death penalty and will begin again the legalized murder of hundreds of U.S. citizens.

Inmate composition of the Death Rows in the nation's prisons is a microcosm of the larger prison population — largely nationally oppressed minorities and poor people, unable to afford adequate counsel, the victims of a racist and economically oppressive criminal justice system. The arbitrarily applied death penalty is the final stage of this unjust system.

We cannot let the outrage we first felt when we heard of the Supreme Court's decision turn to complacency on the eve of this first execution. We urge all concerned residents of this state to make their outrage known by writing or wiring Gov. Busby, State Capital, Atlanta, Ga. 30303, denouncing this murder and entering a plea for the life of Anthony Machetti and the lives of those who are to follow him.

A faulty verdict

The jury in the Susan Saxe trial made for political drama last week when they forced Suffolk Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin — through their inability in settling on a verdict — to declare a mistrial in the case.

That the self-admitted revolutionary had cleared the first hurdle of a judicial process she had once sought to destroy was indeed ironic. The jury, after five days of deliberation, and the subsequent statement from jury foreman Dennis Lee Milford that they were "numb" from discussion, simply proved themselves bitterly divided on the guilt and innocence of the former Brandeis honors graduate.

Her alleged complicity in the crime was well established; she being charged with two counts of armed robbery and one count of murder in connection with the 1970 robbery of the Brighton branch of the State Street Bank and Trust Company in which Boston patrolman Walter A. Schroeder was killed.

Her case is not unlike that of others who had once fought the establishment in the hey-day of the anti-war movement — the only difference being that she was involved in a murder. But this was the single most important point of the prosecution's case; that the patrolman had been killed trying to prevent a robbery and that she had been involved. The prosecution felt assured that a guilty verdict could be the only reasonable conclusion forthcoming from the jury. It was not!

The intricacies of the case have been buried by a rather low-key attitude that the press has been taking. But the subsequent mistrial announcement shred the self-assuredness of the prosecution. It brought a tinge of doubt as to Saxe's alleged criminality; only the juror's knowing full well the ramifications of her involvement.

A second trial is forthcoming, a humbled Garret Byrne, Suffolk County District Attorney, resoundingly answering "yes", when questioned if he would seek a retrial on all three indictments. Saxe's attorney's took an expected opposite attitude when questioned, Chief Defense Attorney Nancy Gertner saying, "We had wanted an acquittal." But a second trial is all but assured, and the lines of defense used by Saxe's attorney's in the first case will be the expected defense in the second.

The question of the mistrial brings about the possibility that the prosecution's case may have been surprisingly weak, the only face-saving attribute being that a woman who had been on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted List had been finally captured after five years of running. It is interesting in that Saxe, who's involvement and placement at the scene, has yet to bring about a constant and stable defense as to her actions. Yet, the prosecution's inability in nailing Saxe as being one of the perpetrator's of the robbery has cast an unusual attitude over the juror's failure to convict.

Obviously Saxe knew where their venture was taking them on the fateful day of Patrolman Schroeder's death. She obviously knew that the guns in her cohorts possession were intended for violence should their robbery attempt be disrupted. And she knew full well, when the aborted robbery was met by Patrolman Shcroeder's intervention, that the subsequent firing of those weapons was intended to kill Schroeder.

Yet, the jury declared they would not agree on a verdict. And that brings about doubt as to what the jury exactly saw in a case that a majority of Massachusetts citizens definitely saw differently. If Susan Saxe was involved, there can be but one verdict. That she did not pull the trigger does not mean she was ignorant of their intentions.

To say that Susan Saxe, because she had only helped in the bank robbery, and had not intended to hurt anyone, should be found innocent, is a subversion of justice. She was there, she knew that was taking place, and she knew that the bringing of guns into a robbery attempt might bring about someone's death. There is no excuse for her guilt. A man died because of her, and that alone should determine the verdict. Justice failed the first time out. I would hope that, given a second chance, justice — and her guilt — will prevail!

The RSO addiction

Writer's note: This column is dedicated to all those Student Union Building and Campus Center crazies involved in RSO groups, deeply involved. Yes, it's nice to pull all-nighters and day-dream in classes, if you go at all. But once in a while, you wonder if you're sane and if it's all worth it... but, once you start, you can't stop.

Rampaging down the hall into the bathroom, out of the bathroom, down the hall again, into your room, tripping over two week's of Globe's and Time's you haven't been able to read, tripping into your clothes... well, I'll make my bed later... (but, you know you never will). You're an RSO freak. You started something, being active, and now you can't stop.

"Why am I wasting my time here?" you ask sitting in your RSO group office. "I could be drinking, getting high — but why am I here?"

"I want to go home," you say, staying and staying.

And, why do you stay? It's the only time you'll be able to control a "city", the city of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. And you know what? No matter what you do or how, you can never affect the future.

You know, I never bought under-eye stick until I joined the Senate, Collegian, DVP, whatever. And I used to take a shower everyday, yes everyday in the morning. Yeh, I still take it in the morning, only much earlier — 2 or 3 or 4 o'clock.

Blonde hair flying in the wind, tying my shoes, tripping over every crevice in the ground, maybe it is an ego trip, maybe it's just for something to do — something different besides classes and dorm dullness, and soap operas, and old movies, and popcorn in bed while studying, and not worrying about time to get everything done — god, I wish I were a normal UMie. What makes me so strange?

I was a strong case — joined my RSO group after being here only three days. A freshperson, quiet, conciliate, reserved — but once I started, I was stuck. What about you?

Getting candy at the candy corner (should I get gum or candy?) one peaks up at the forbidden balcony, beyond the forbidden balcony where all these students stand gawking, gawking down at you... some are the student rads, others are the student moderates, all involved in all this political-ia, political-ia which no one else knows, which no one else cares about, which no one else will feel any affects from.

And why do I work so hard? Why do I spend so much of my time? Why do I care so much? Is it all craziness? Or is it just a premature desire to create good in the world (or a premature desire to rule the world?)

And I know it will make it all the harder to leave, leave this city, this heartthrob metropolis surrounded by farmland and mountains and "nature" scenes. And when I leave, maybe all this will make all the difference, or at least I hope it will — that blessed resume, that blessed first job.

And I tear myself to shreds, burn myself. Why? Am I proving to myself that I'm a leader, that I'll make it, that I'm better than anyone else?

Or am I doing it for people I care about: all those people working just as hard as I in creating utopias. Bending over typewriters, reading stacks of information (while books for classes remain unopened until the day before the final), analyzing the UMass world, taking the time to care when you needn't.

You know? I love them, I love them and want to help to make utopias, make and destroy dreams and make utopias for them and dreams for them. That's why I do it. That's why I stop doing homework and get involved. (And is that really a reason for being crazy?)

Cities and the new ugliness

By THOMAS MAJOR

One of the few substantial benefits provided by the Bicentennial celebration was the attention given to the restoration of historic buildings into places where people can work, shop, and relax. The comeback of the old building comes at a time in the history of the American city when the new buildings are uglier than those buildings it replaced.

Examples of this abound. In New York, the World Trade Center towers over lower Manhattan, 110 stories of monolithic aluminum. Montreal inflicted upon itself several incredibly foolish-looking stadiums and apartment buildings during the 1976 Summer Olympics. Perhaps the saddest example is San Francisco, whose skyline was raped by the 1960's building boom that culminated in the obscenity of the Trans-America Pyramid, a 790-foot tall pyramid-shaped tower and America's most ridiculous-looking building.

The rise of the new ugliness climaxed in the 1960's. It became fashionable to tear down the old to build the new, regardless of the architectural, aesthetic, and economic benefits the old might have possessed. Urban renewal was one crime in particular, flattening whole blocks of land in cities and starting projects that ran out of money later, or ran far over its projected budget, or had its low-income rental rates driven upward by inflation, or started to decay immediately after its completion. Southwest Residential Area is an on-campus example of the "architecture" that spread like an infectious disease across the country through government-funded urban renewal projects and privately-funded construction booms.

There were three problems with the new building boom. First, it tended to slow as inflation rose and money got tighter. San Francisco thought it could spend hundreds of millions of dollars for a revolutionary computer-operated rapid transit system; the New York Port Authority thought that it had the $600 million dollars to spend for the World Trade Center; and Montreal believed that it could be the rare example of a city actually making money from hosting the Olympic Games.

San Francisco did build its Bay Area Rapid Transit System (BART), New York its World Trade Center, and Montreal did host the Olympics. But in all three cases the finished product was far more expensive and far less productive than had been anticipated. BART's computers didn't work properly, the World Trade Center couldn't rent its office space, and Montreal lost hundreds of millions of dollars because of the expenses of the Olympics. In all three cases, the public will be paying for years to come for mistakes made years earlier by government and private business.

The second problem came after completion. Beauty is a highly relative word and, true to the cliche, is in the eye of the beholder. But the building boom of the 1960's spread a monotonous layer of steel-aluminum-glass-plastic, waffle-sided towers across the country's cities. Boston's State Street began to resemble New York's Wall Street, which looked like downtown San Francisco or downtown Atlanta or downtown Chicago or any one of a dozen other American cities. The individual flavor of a city, its character, its look, was diluted by the new ugliness that obliterated and obstructed so much and gave so little to a city. There was never any planning, serious consideration of aesthetics, or effort to coordinate the building's architecture to blend in with its surroundings.

The case of the Faneuil Hall area is the alternative to the new ugliness. The Faneuil Hall building and the area surrounding it was renovated so that the beauty of the original architecture remained while giving business and retailers a prime location and new space without resorting to the construction of yet another shopping mall.

The third and the most serious consequence of the new ugliness was that it killed the cites bit by bit as their links with the past were bulldozed away to make way for the next shopping center or office building. It was an incredibly wasteful way to create new business and living space for the cities in a time when businesses and the tax base were moving out of the cities and into the suburbs.

Instead of new construction, repair and preservation of the older buildings should be encouraged whenever possible, especially in the areas of housing and the inner city. Renovating an older house in disrepair is less expensive than the construction of a new house.

New buildings should not be banned, but there should be an effort to improve the architectural quality of the planned construction by making the architecture of a building a factor in the decision by local authorities on whether to permit the building's construction. New construction should be resorted to only when the demand for new space cannot be met by renovation of previously existing buildings.

If this were applied today, by either the government or because of the existing economic situation, there would be many ramifications. The construction industry would shrink since renovation takes less materials and labor than construction from scratch. But the benefit would come from the channeling of the energy of business construction from new construction to renovation of what already exists. It would provide an incentive for businesses to repair the deteriorated builidngs and slum areas that spread like cancer through American cities and to make these areas work and produce again. For every new tower built, ten or twenty older buildings are allowed to slowly decay since they have been replaced by the tower.

This must be stopped if the standardization of American cities, the decaying urban residential areas of cities, and the accelleration of business migration is to be reversed, and our cities saved from becoming economically dead, minority dominated, and crime-riddled scores of the country.

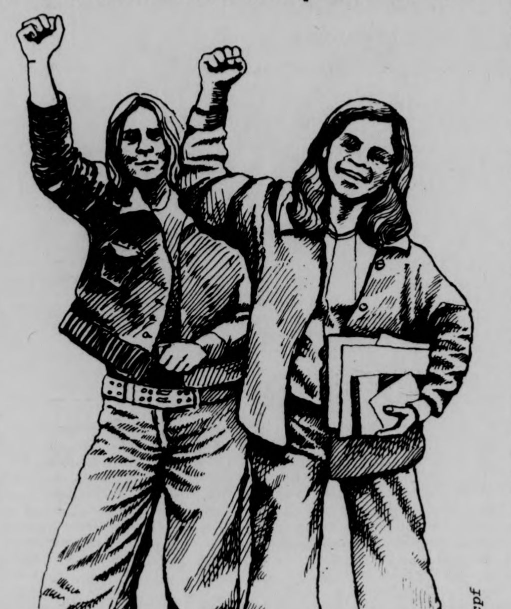
Feminism: A portrait of frustration

By MICHAEL CASELLA



For as long as the earth has been inhabited, woman has been forced to live within the guidelines that society has established for her. It had always been the belief that woman was provided for man to help man pursue whatever goals he might have set for himself. She was supposed to be the main source of moral support for man. She was supposed to be submissive, unintelligent, and at the mercy of her spouse for convenience sake if nothing else. If a man had a goal to achieve, he didn't have the time to worry about an uppity wife who might have had idea about making some sort of life for herself.

It wasn't until the twentieth century that woman realized that half of the society that was oppressing her consisted of women. They then began to find strength in the unity of their sex.

In the past ten years the feminist movement has developed at a rate that can only be described as revolutionary. Women are revealing themselves to the rest of the species as having equal if not superior intelligence to men. In order to dispel the age old habit to viewing women as a commodity, they are establishing their right to self-respect and the respect of others. In their efforts they are creating problems both for themselves and the remainder of the species, namely men.

As history reveals, there has been little legislation in this country which has moved women out of the household and into the job market. Feminists are blaming the male legislators in this country for their problem precisely because the legislators are men. This is much like blaming only women for unwanted pregnancies. Supposedly, legislators merely reflect in their legislation the wants and needs of their constituents, so women have to convince the general public as well as legislators. At the present time the passing of the Equal Rights Amendment seems to be the main objective of feminists. Unfortunately, a number of women are placing the blame on men for the delay in the bill's approval when in fact it is a group led by an Illinois woman who have provided the most opposition.

Women are becoming their own worst enemy especially in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. I think that I can confidently say that I have reached the point at which I can accept womens' equality, but what about those people on the borderline? If a man reads a feminist writer to find out what the feminist movement is all about and finds that the writer has called him and all other white men the "scum of the earth," as described in an editorial of the "Collegian" last year, he might come back with an even more severe obscenity for any liberated women he encounters. Women must stop labeling innocent people with derogatory names and learn to be more specific in their accusations.

Women must also learn the difference between unity and organization. The success of any movement lies in its organization. Social change is one of the most difficult tasks to accomplish as I'm sure women involved in the feminist movement are finding out.

The American public has to be one of the most critical bodies of people in existence. They are not eager to accept social change, because more often than not, it requires a special effort on their part, so they are not about to listen attentively to groups of people who all call themselves feminists, but who all differ in their opinions. Women cannot expect people to place their trust in a movement that is in conflict with itself.

Women cannot hope for equality until they are ready to work within the limits of democracy. People don't have to listen to or believe in anything they don't want to. That's what democracy is all about. Granted it will take them longer, as does everyhitn else in a democracy, but people in this country have seen too much bloodshed for the sake of the system to abandon it now.

If women were to work outside of democracy, they would be labeled noncomformists and noncomformists never seem to gain any power because they are a minority. People tend to dislike minorities because they are a threat to the established political system and way of life. Again, organization comes into play. Women must familiarize themselves with the laws of the political system of which they are a part. People will find it easier to support a movement which works within the law. Outside of the law they put themselves in jeopardy.

Personally, I am tiring of the womens' movement in its present condition. I think it is time for women to re-examine their motives. I can't help thinking at times that women are after revenge instead of equality.

Feminists are constantly blaming me and other individuals for the origin of a social malady with which we had nothing to do. When women do this, they evoke hatred in the people they are trying to persuade. Again they are an enemy of themselves. Blaming men for all the problems women encounter is a generalization that people will not stand for.

Instead of diverting their energy to blaming innocent people, let women prove themselves. I admit that women should not have to be put in this position, but it seems to be the only democratic way to get people to sit up and take notice, and as I said before, women must learn to work within the system. Let women combine their intellectual power to solve some problem that effects society, but let them not wallow in their success. Conceit is another thing that people tend to dislike. If women prove themselves, it should only be a matter of time before they are recognized for what they are. Women must learn to be patient in awaiting this recognition. I tend to be sympathetic towards women because I realize the frustration they are experiencing.

I admit that sexual equality is a gross problem that should be a simple law of nature. I sincerely hope that women do establish their equality in every sense, but only through comprehensive organization will they be able to achieve their goal.

You are what you eat

By KEN FONDA

It has been said "you are what you eat." God knows what this means to those people who eat in the dining commons. But that is beside the point. The body is a wonderfully designed machine. How it can take food and convert it to energy and new cells is simply amazing. A nutritionist would tell you that the statement I made in the beginning is true. The food that you eat is one thing that gives life to the body. If the food we eat is dead or nutritionless our bodies will show it.

Think of this analogy for a moment. An automobile is also an energy converting machine which uses fuel. Everyone knows that that fuel is gasoline. We also know that there are different grades of gasoline which we can use in this machine. From experience most of us know that some gas will make the car run better than others. Just as the car manifest greater energy and life from better fuel so does our bodies when you use better food.

The brain is also a wonderful organ. It takes in information by way of the five senses and sorts this information into usable material and wastes. The mind is really the life of the brain. Just as the body gets its vitality from the food we eat so the mind gets its life from the information that is fed to it.

People are feeding their minds with different things all the time. Because of a poor mental diet people become negative in their attitudes and therefore reap the results. For example the two women who wrote "The UMass Male" have been receiving information via this paper and probably their friends that have been telling them the "UMass men" are either sex maniacs or bores. From the information they gave in their letter it is safe to say they have received the results of their attitudes.

What are you feeding your mind? Are you being selective in your diet or are you just "pigging out" on everything you get. Take time for reading something positive. It will have life to your mind and vitality to your walk. Where can I find something positive, you ask? The Word of God is the Word of life. It is the light that lightens your path. Take time to read God's Word, the Bible. It's the most positive thing you can find in a world which surrounds us with negatives on every side. Then you can be like the prophet Jeremiah who wrote, "Thy words were found and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heard."

The heart is the seat of the personal life and is deep within the mind. Guard your heart with all diligence for out of it are the issues of life.

Why we are voting

To the Editor:

The article in the Collegian October 13, "Socialists urge abstention", is clearly a statement from a sectarian group of "so-called" socialists.

Although the struggle for socialism is not confined to the ballot box, it is however one form that should be utilized given the state of contemporary American society. Although historically socialists and communists in our political process has clearly left its imprint on our society. If, for instance, we examine the 1912 platform of the Socialist Party of America, we must be struck by the fact that so many of the "radical" social and economic propositions advocated by the Socialists are now institutionally incorporated into our national life. More than that, they have received universal acceptance.

Eugene V. Debs, the Socialist candidate for president, received nearly a million votes that year. As the Socialist Party declined, the emerging Communist Party carried on the struggle for what was considered "radical". From within and without the political arena, issues such as racial equility, social security, and unemployment benefits were put forth by the C.P.. Benjamin Davis, a Communist Party member, served as an assemblyman from New York City for many years.

In other elections, both socialists and communists have held offices as mayors etc., and have been very instrumental in bringing about progressive change.

Internationally, Communists and Socialists have won high positions in government. Salvadore Allende, for example, led a marxist coalition government in Chile. In Italy, Communists hold key government offices locally and nationally. Their influence has changed Italian government and the lives of the Italian people.

The article states that "it has been estimated that as much as 60 per cent of the United States electorate may not go to the polls November 2nd". This I agree with. But these statistics also show that the American people are not satisfied with the present system and are looking for an alternative.

Telling people not to vote only encourages ignorance and apathy.

Any socialist should encourage people to take part in the political process, especially when there is an alternative followed by a program.

The Communist program represents the only progressive alternative to the decaying Democrat and Republican parties.

The platform calls for a substantial reduction in a "bloated" military budget and to use that money for pressing social needs. On the labor front, the platform calls for an end to the 40 hour work week with no cut in pay. Detente, that forbidden word of reactionary Republicans, should be enhanced on all levels to prevent a nuclear holocaust. Independence for Puerto Rico, outlawing racism, full equality for women, drastic new job programs for inner-city youth, comprehensive health care touch upon every major problem that faces this country.

The Communist Party is trying to reach people, especially youth, who know that socialism is something that is greatly distorted in the U.S.

This party will not abstain. The Communist vote will not be ignored. It is the party that is challenging the two-party system and all the contradictions within it. Vote Gus Gall and Jarvis Tyner for President and Vice-President. Vote Communist. Join the challenge! Join the future!

The Young Workers Liberation League is a massive youth organization in support of Hall and Tyner. The YWLL meets every Tuesday evening at 8:00 in the Campus Center. All are welcome to attend.

The Brian Turner case

To the Editor:

In response to the letter "Misguided support," I would like to add my opinion. There is nothing misguided about the support the 13th floor of Washington is showing for one of its members, Brian Turner, accused of throwing a bottle from the Tower. Brian has said that he did not do it, and his floor believes him, as do many other people of Washington, myself included. Granted, the staff and police have not been throwing things from the windows, but neither has Brian.

The letter was not meant to criticize the authorities for trying to find out who has been endangering our lives and property, because we also want that person found and dealt with, but rather because the wrong person has been accused and will probably be used as an "example" to those who are guilty. This is what is wrong and is being criticized.

Women's program in assertiveness

The Graduate Women's Program at UMass will offer an Assertiveness Training Workshop for graduate women students. It will meet Wednesdays from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. starting Nov. 3 through Dec. 1.

The workshop will focus on learning how to be more assertive in day to day personal and professional relationships. It is a critical skill for women who are seeking to be in control of their personal and professional lives. The workshop will help participants to identify those areas in which they would like to be more assertive and provide a supportive atmosphere to experiment with new ways of dealing with those situations though role playing, exercises and discussion.

There is a $15.00 fee for the five-week session with a few very limited scholarships available.

For further information and registration call Mary L. O'Neil, Everywoman's Center, UMass at 545-0883.

New Ecology School accepting students

It was recently announced that the Center for Human Ecology Studies will be opening and accepting its first group of students in January, 1977.

Bill Seretta, center president, said the center was established in the spring of 1976 to offer educational and field experiences in human ecology.

He said the center will fulfill its purposes by offering a one-month seminar in January and three 13-week programs in the spring, summer, and fall covering such topics as alternative energy, value systems and lifestyles, land use, appropriate technology, and alternative agriculture. The 13-week programs will include a one-third time internship in one of the many Maine organizations involved in these areas.

A student attending the center is eligible to receive full credit if the program has been approved by the student's home institution.

The staff of the center will be visiting a number of colleges during late October and early November to explain the program to students and faculty.

Students interested in literature on center programs should contact their campus' director of off-campus programs or write to the Center for Human Ecology Studies, PO Box 242, Freeport, Me. 04032.

Dr. Terry Tattar of UMass will hike around Atkins Reservoir in Shutesbury tomorrow — an event co-sponsored by the Hitchcock Center for the Environment and the Amherst Conservation Commission.

Tattar, a plant pathologist at the Shade Tree Laboratory at UMass, will present an introduction to diseases in the forest, pointing out such common problems as chestnut blight and various canker diseases. He will also discuss the impact of disease on the entire forest ecosystem and the economic role of disease.

Leaving from the Larch Hill Carriage House (one mile south of Amherst center on Rt. 116) at 9:30 a.m., the session will continue at the intersection of Pratt Corner Road in Shutesbury, at the beginning of the "M. and M." trail at about 9:45 a.m. All attending are advised to dress warmly in comfortable clothes for a woods ramble. Oxford program applications open

The 12th consecutive year of the Oxford Summer Seminar, sponsored by the English Department, is ready to accept inquiries for 1977. There are 13 courses, all taught by Oxford tutors, and described in their own words in a brochure just published and available in room 378 (or 170) Bartlett Hall. The telephone is 545-2328.

The seminar lives at Trinity College, Oxford, for six weeks during the summer, but students may travel before the study period opens (two weeks) and a few days after. London is one hour away by rail.

Courses are Honors courses, each designed to give students access to material and points of view not available in the USA, at least not easily. Manuscripts, appropriate trips, bookstores, libraries; see how Oxford does it.

Slides and photos of living conditions (and applications) may be picked up in Bartlett 378 every afternoon except Wednesday. Professors Ernest Hofer or Vincent DiMarco can provide additional information. As enrollment is limited and course preferences according to first-come-first-served, early application is wise. Only a maximum of 12 in a course may be accepted.

High risk students can get flu shots

University Health Services, in cooperation with the United States Public Health Service and the Massachusetts Department of Public Health will offer flu vaccination to people over 18 at high risk Monday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

People at high risk are those over age 65, or with chronic diseases: heart disease, diabetes, severe asthma, kidney, respiratory or metabolic disorders.

The vaccine which will be provided is bivalent, protecting against both the A-Victoria and swine strains of flu. Some minor side effects may be experienced (swollen, sore or red arm, low fever). People who have a fever or are allergic to eggs will not be vaccinated.

If anyone has questions, please contact Health Education Division of University Health Services or a member of the clinical or pharmacy staff (Phone: 549-2671).

Music and dancing at Women's night

The UMass Lesbian Union is sponsoring another Women's Night at Farley Lodge from 9:00 to 1:00 tonight. It will be a place for women to gather together, meet, and enjoy themselves. Music and dancing will be provided, but no refreshments. All women welcome. There is a 75 cents donation.

Volunteers needed to care for children

Student volunteers are needed to staff workshop child care services at Skinner Hall for either or both; Saturday, Oct. 30 from noon to 6 p.m., and Saturday, Nov. 6, from 2 to 6 p.m. Students will be working with a core staff and essentially responsible for providing caregiving, both inside and outside, helping with snack and quiet periods, supervising play activities, and helping in both the set-up before the children arrive and in the clean-up afterward.

Please leave name, telephone number where we can reach you, and the day(s) you are volunteering for. You may call Susan or Alex Mackey at 665-2885, or leave a message at 545-2403.

are planned at Hampshire College this fall.

The first is scheduled tomorrow in the college dining commons. Three musicians forming a national touring ensemble called "Air" will perform at 7:45 and 10 p.m.

Saxophonist Henry Threadgill, bassist Fred Hopkins, and drummer Steve McCall will present works drawn from a repertoire of jazz, dance, rag and "new" music. The three will also use ethnic and original instruments during the performance.

The second concert is planned Saturday, Nov. 20, and will feature the Oliver Lake Quartet.

The events are intended to serve as ways to examine racism, artistic oppression of Black people, and the different between art and entertainment, said Hampshire student James R. Pinfold. Both concerts are non-profit programs funded in part by the Hampshire College Community Council.

Admission at the door is $1.75 for Hampshire College students, $3.00 for the general public.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Friday, October 22 – Born today, you have a tendency to take over, to dominate those with whom you are supposed to be peaceably interacting. It is a tendency, however, that others generally find pleasing, for as a rule, it relieves others of the necessity of deciding things for themselves and for being responsible for their own behavior. And therein lies the danger to you of being a person of dominating character: you may well find yourself taking the blame for the ill behavior of other people simply because you have made yourself the party-in-charge and therefore, the party who must in the long run pay the piper should the piper be in need of payment. Make an effort to follow some of the time, rather than to always lead.

Consequences are not often considered by you as you go about the business of shaping other people's lives. They are, however, considered by those who must suffer them and there may be times, therefore, when people turn away from you, when they take back the reins they have handed over to you and begin to insist upon doing things their own way again. When this happens, you must yield gracefully -- though your inclination is to fight against any loss of power, any diminution of yourself as a shaping force.

Excitable, interested in everything that goes on about you, you are seldom at a loss for something to do of an active nature and absolutely never are you bored. You diversify your activities instinctively: never do you have to be reminded not to put all your eggs in one basket, for you intuitively take out insurance against failure in the form of separate endeavors, side projects and so on.

Saturday, October 23

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Make an effort to delegate some of your authority on the home front. Otherwise, you may be in for an emotional battle.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Your great thirst for knowledge may lead you into strange experiences this morning. Don't be too eager to follow another's lead.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – A perceptive mind and a sensitivity of hand: these make it possible for you to gain your ends by nightfall.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – An elderly relative or close friend adds the voice that makes this a day to remember. Quality makes up for lack of quantity.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Physical exercise is vital to your well-being today. Don't expect another to do all the work while you supervise.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Though honors may elude you, another's silent admiration urges you on to greater accomplishment. Morning hours are especially hectic.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Gentleness in combination with power make you a tough competitor today. Disregard notions not backed by facts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – A nervous disorder returns to plague you this morning. Don't allow others to interfere with the direction you know you must take.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Judicial action where a youngster's unacceptable behavior is concerned makes the entire situation on the home front easier to bear.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – A fondness for ease and comfort must not be allowed to keep you from accomplishment today. Take up another's cause with a will.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Success in a literary or musical endeavor may be yours by day's end. Do your best to ration out your favors fairly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Great undertakings must be postponed for another time. This is a day for minor accomplishments -- but great personal satisfaction.

Bluebird forecast

Sun vanishes in Indian Ocean

The astrological weather today is preparatory for the Total Eclipse of the Sun which peaks towards midnite. A total solar eclipse occurs as the Moon lines up directly between the Earth and Sun, thus blocking solar radiation. Such an event only happens once a year and, since the Moon and Sun are the major factors in our mental weather, this is classed as a major turning point of the year. Since it occurs when the luminaries are "below" the Earth, it will only be visible in the Indian Ocean, parts of Australia, and parts of southern Africa. Traditionally, eclipses are said to bring changes of government and earthquakes, etc. And this spring's solar eclipse coincided with both phenomena in Italy, a country which stood directly on its primary path. But we novice forecasters have not had enough experience to say anything about the countries near this eclipse center, except that the physical results are not always exactly coincidental with the eclipse. These things take time to work out and we hope that the countries in the eclipse zone are aware of their faults.

The Moon symbolizes "the people", our emotional-habitual self, filled with desires and fears, as well as hopes and aspirations. The Sun symbolizes "the leader" or "king", our spiritual self, the heart of our soul-ar system. As the Sun is blocked off, all of our energy will tend to focus on the lunar level. If our solar-self is not harmonized with our lunar-self, our emotions may rebel.

The eclipse occurs as both luminaries move thru the last degree of Libra (harmony in relationships) and into the first degree of Scorpio (death and rebirth). So we may expect a last minute consideration of our self's development in partnership (which was the emphasis throughout this Libra season) and an emotional transition to scorpioland in which our partnerships will suffer and-or grow anew – depending upon how well we have developed mutual resources and potentials, as well as our ability to share.

Uranus, the planet of sudden change and truthful inspiration, is at 7 degrees Scorpio, and Mars ("god-of-war") is at 10 degrees – both within the celestial eclipse zone. So we might expect the unexpected and sudden bursts of aggressive energy. The Moon moves into Scorpio to eclipse Uranus and Mars Saturday, at 12:24 p.m. and 5:31 p.m. so these additional tensions to the solar eclipse may linger thru Saturday evening.

Today began as the Moon lined up with Mercury (the thoughtful), giving us a chance to ponder our Libran harmonies or the lack thru the morning. A note of disgruntlement will gradually increase thru the morning; joy and creative release will only come if we exercise conscious will towards harmony; this energy will peak around 1:36 p.m. The rest of the day is spanned by three subtle lunar waves of challenge: minor anger towards 4:46 p.m.; minor disillusionment around 8:48; and an eclipse preview towards 11:09 p.m. The eclipse itself occurs at 1:23 a.m. In all cases, minor negativities can melt with harmony.

Saturday, after the potentials already described, may include minor insights and compassion towards 8:30 p.m. if we stretch, and possible minor tensions building up towards midnite, peaking around 2:13 a.m., Sunday. The "day of rest" will offer thoughtfulness around noon and the opportunity to balance our "act" thru the evening. We may find it hard to smile if we're selfish, especially between 8:30 and 11:30 p.m. Joyful thoughts and communication will be available at 11:52 p.m. to those who keep their third eye open. Monday may be fairly mellow and Tuesday looks happy. The waves of time go up and down – Enjoy The Eclipse!

Ed. School film – a television special to get our fifth and sixth in before their fifth runner."

Running on their home course the women will try to take advantage of that fact as much as possible.

"We've got to make sure we run a strong first mile, not a suicide pace, so that by the time we start the uphill climb to the orchard we've established good position in relation to where our kids want to be and where the competition is," said O'Brien. "Then it's a matter of being aggressive in the orchard, working up and down the hills, then running the last half mile on emotion." The women have expressed a lot of emotion regarding this, their second New England Championship meet.

"I think everyone's psyched because they kind of think we might get it," said Welzel about UMass' possibilities for the title.

"We've got a good mixture of confidence that we're going to win and knowing we're not going to run away with it," said Chapman. "We're ready to work."

"We want it so bad right now, if anyone from Middlebury's in front of us, we'll give it all we've got," said Crowley.

Last year the women were at an emotional peak for this race and expended their best efforts here. O'Brien doesn't think it will happen that way again.

"They've gained some maturity," he said. "Last year was emotional for a couple of reasons. It was the meet of the year we thought we'd shoot for and it was the first New Englands — we never had the opportunity to see everyone run. With this doubt, the kids were keyed up to go out and make sure things came out well. We know everybody now with the exception of Middlebury, who we know is good, but we know we can run with them and certainly run better than anyone else. At the same time, we've got something to look ahead to, whereas last year we didn't know how good we were.

"A common feeling among this group is one of excitement. That's been the story all year. They've looked forward to it and I've looked forward to it and now it's here."

Woodpersons excel in N.Y.

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

An understaffed, under-funded, and almost forgotten UMass woodspersons club travelled to Paul Smith's College in upper N.Y. state on the week-end of October 7th and left having gained the respect of fellow frontierspeople.

Chilling rains greeted the three team squad from UMass, as well as teams from 23 other New England, and Canadian schools upon arrival on Friday.

Last year the newly formed club was represented by one men's team, and not surprisingly ended up in last place after a tiring weekend of events.

However the more competitive club fared much better the second time around, as its men's "A" squad placed 11th, and the newly formed "B" team finishing 12th among the field. The women's team, competing for the first time, provided the biggest upset, as it outclassed a more experienced Fingerlakes, N.Y. team, in overall competition.

The weekend schedule featured many outdoor events such as canoeing, axe throwing, and fire building. UMass did well in the canoeing events, and its "A" team almost defeated host Paul Smith, in the pole felling event.

With snow falling overhead, the weekend of events came to an end as a barn dance featuring the blue grass sounds of "Pine Island" wined into the crisp October night.

"We had a great time, and all of us gained very valuable experience seeing first hand how all of the events are run," explained club president Chris Casey. "We'll be looking forward to the winter meet at MacDonnel College in Canada, it should be even more of a challenge."

The woodsperson club is looking for new members both male and female, should this type of activity excite you.

Poloists top Harvard as Lomas scores six

By ROBERT CORB

The UMass men's waterpolo team handily defeated Harvard in a recent match 20-7 at Boyden pool with Duncan Lomas and Russ Yarworth leading the way with six goals apiece.

Bill Tharion, UMass goalie played his best game of the year stopping 18 Harvard shots. Ben Crooker, the senior long distance swimmer, and Barry Eisenber, a durable transfer swimmer helped out Tharion with extremely tight defense, forcing Harvard to turn over the ball continuously.

Aiding Lomas in the scoring were Rick Mansfield and Bob Corb with four equalizers each.

The men's record now stands at 1-1 in the league and 3-2 overall. The men play two key league games this weekend at Harvard against M.I.T. and Yale. The next men's home game will be Boyden Pool Tuesday against Dartmouth.

Rugby

Injured ruggers meet Hub club

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass rugby club attempts to arrest an alarming three game losing skein this Sunday afternoon when it plays host to the Boston Firsts Rugby Club. A perennial power in Hub rugby circles, the Boston Club is suffering one of its most dismal campaigns. Nevertheless, even in an off year, they are a formidable adversary and pose a substantial challenge to Minutemen rugby fortunes. Much of the same personnel which powered the visitors to last years New England Championship has returned — most notably its impressive forward line.

Reverend mentor Robert "Doc" Laurence, appeared optimistic as he evaluated his club's prospects, "We should have our strongest side since the Yankee Conference Tournament. Once again, the critical factor will be the ability of our forwards to gain possession of the ball. If we can win one third of the total ball (rugby lingo), then we should win because, although their pack is certainly sound, the strength of their backs remains suspect. Hopefully we can capitalize on this weakness."

The injury riddled ruggers expect stalwarts Dan Giorgiana (thigh), Hugh Chester-Jones (ankle), Frank Kenney (ankle), Tom Callaghan (facial lacerations-concussion), and Matt Tirrell (academic sabattical) to be available for action. Laurence announced at a press conference earlier this week that the services of hard-nosed second row man Andy Sirica have been lost indefinitely. Sirica reportedly is contemplating extensive surgery on his olfactory organ for cosmetic purposes. The morose chieftan added that captain Rick Lopes and acting captain and president Rick Fioravanti are out for the duration with ripped hamstring and reoccuring head injuries respectively. They will be sorely missed. Lopes, an All-New England performer two years ago has been hobbled with injuries ever since and has not played in any games this season.

The pristine field general panegyrized the perseverance and intestinal fortitude of Chuck "Hawkman" Trippi, a native of scenic Worcester, whose punishing open field tackling proved instrumental in preserving the "C" squad's imposing 23-6 conquest of the rabid Mystic River Rats last Saturday. Forrest McCluer, Doug Bayford, Henry Brown, and Jeff "Ginzo" Stefani also received rave reviews from the bearded mentor.

Weather conditions should have a very definite effect on the games outcome. Monsoon rains such as those which flooded the Amherst area Wednesday night would favor the stronger pack of the visitors whereas a dry field would undoubtedly benefit Laurence's backfield troops. Firm footing would enable the home forces to employ a more wide open style of play thereby hoping to outmaneuver and negate the opposition's conceded superiority in the trenches.

Field Hockey

Stickers battle UNH

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team hopes to extend its winning streak to three games when they meet the Wildcats from UNH tomorrow at 11:00 at NOPE field.

The Minutewomen upped their record to six wins and four losses by defeating Southern Connecticut 3-0 on Tuesday afternoon. They did it with a combination of heads-up, hustling hockey in the first half and good goaltending in the second.

Coach Judith Davidson feels that the last two wins have served to ignite the team and build mementum for the rest of the season. "The team has always been good. The unusual thing was that we had been losing when we should have been winning. We've now finally clicked together and the momentum should keep up."

High scoring left inner Cheryl Meliones (5 goals in 2 games), has been one of the reasons the Minutewomen have won handily the last two games. In the words of her coach, Meliones is "a hustler and super-aggressive." Some of the reason she's been scoring are Sue Kibling and Ginger Bulman, two of her linemates who've assisted on all those goals. They're the ones who get the ball to Cheryl. Another standout has been goalie Kathy Gipps, who "gets stronger every game."

She made 15 saves in Tuesday's game.

A problem with the team has been the tendency to fall off during the second half after a good first half, due to lack of conditioning. Coach Davidson has had conditioning practices this week and feels that the team is better prepared for the game tomorrow.

The fact that it's Homecoming weekend doesn't make the game any more important than it is. The Minutewomen are psyched enough already for a third shutout.

The defensive abilities of the field hockey team will be of significance as the women host New Hampshire tomorrow morning. (Staff photo by Laurie Traub)

Hoop team ends first practice week anxiously awaiting season

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

The UMass Minutemen, eagerly awaiting the challenge of the new Eastern Independent Collegiate Basketball League (EICBL), round out their initial week of practice for the 1976-77 campaign with the fifth annual Homecoming intrasquad game tomorrow following the UMass-UConn football game. Starting time is expected to be between 4:45 and 5:00 p.m.

The Minutemen, fresh off a 21-6 season and a fourth straight Yankee Conference championship, will be one of eight teams in the first year league. UMass, along with Rutgers, Villanova, and George Washington will comprise the east division of the league, while Duquesne, Penn State, Pittsburgh, and West Virginia make up the west division.

The Minutemen received a scare earlier in the week when it was announced that starting center and co-captain Mark Donoghue would be out indefinitely due to an irregular heart beat. The transfer from Dartmouth will be examined in 10 days to detect the cause. Donoghue's beat is now normal, but he cannot practice until doctors give him the go.

Donoghue will be leading an experienced cast of returnees for the hoop team, as all five starters are back from last year. Joining Donoghue will be New England Player - of - the - Year Jim Town, and Yankee Conference All Star Mike Pyatt, while sophomores Alex Eldridge and Derick Claiborne will once again team in the backcourt.

Substitutes Steve Mayfield, a senior, Chuck Stevesky, a junior, and sophomores Eric Williams, Len Kohlhaas, and Brad Johnson should provide adequate depth for UMass. Newcomer Bill Morrison, a 6-3 guard recruited from the same high school as Al Skinner, and with a similar style to the UMass grad, is also expected to aid the varsity squad.

Head coach Jac Leaman has been disappointed with the week's practice, saying, "We really haven't worked that hard the first five or six days. I don't think our players fully realize the step up in competition we will be taking this year, and it worries me."

"I'm disappointed with the play of our upperclassmen," continued the coach. "I'm not happy with the seniors and the only junior who has been impressive is Claiborne. The most pleasant surprise this year so far has been the play of our sophomores, Kohlhaas, Williams, and Johnson."

Tomorrow's intrasquad game with be a "regular game" according to Leaman, but the coach has yet to determine the sides. "I won't try to balance them, though," he said. "I'll try to form a best team, but with Donoghue not being here, that kind of fuzzes things up."

The game will be just the beginning of a long and difficult season for UMass. The Minutemen open up their regular season with the annual Hall of Fame Tournament in Springfield, Mass. on November 26-27.

From there, they will have 25 more games before the league playoffs at the Spectrum in Philadelphia, Pa. on March 3-5 to decide who will represent the EICBL in the NCAA playoffs.

So until the opener, Leaman and assistants, Fan Gaudette, and Ray Ricketts, a newcomer to the staff with Ray Wilson's departure, will concentrate on a list of goals for the month. Among these will be to play much more physically and aggressively, better team defense, better team discipline, and a more effective fast break.

"We just have to get tougher now," Leaman said. "Physically we're good enough to play with these teams. We just have to get tougher mentally and go at them. This is a very physical basketball league."

'Other' UConn team brings trouble

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

Connecticut brings its high-flying soccer machine to Amherst Saturday morning in hopes of destroying the Minutemen's Homecoming day. UConn is coming off an incredible overtime victory over nationally fourth-ranked Brown, while UMass is hoping to rebound from another frustrating one-goal loss.

How will the Minutemen combat undefeated UConn, the top team in New England, a team which displays outstanding balance and depth in all positions?

"There are going to be some surprises Saturday," said head coach Russ Kidd. "We've been doing some experimenting in practice this week," he explained. "I'm not sure what the line-up will be, but there will be some changes."

Coach Kidd went on to express his dissatisfaction with the team's performance against WPI Tuesday. "The Worcester game was definitely a letdown. We were flat. There's no way we can play like that against UConn."

One advantage the Minutemen will enjoy Saturday is a healthy squad. "We're at a hundred per cent for the first time all season," commented Kidd. "With Ed Niemiec back on defense, we have a lot more to work with." The only questionable position this weekend is in goal, which has ironically been the only injury-free position so far. Mark Hanks has had a touch of the flu while Mark Hodgdon is still sore from an ankle injury sustained in the WPI game, but both should be ready Saturday.

The Minutemen will certainly need everyone to hold back the Huskies. After Wednesday's dramatic victory over Brown UConn is 9-0-2 and the number one team in New England. The Huskies were previously ranked ninth in the nation, but could move up to as high as fifth or sixth if they defeat UMass. They are currently tied with Rhode Island for the Yankee Conference lead.

It is difficult to single out any one player for UConn, which has incidentally, outscored its opponents 33-6. One performer whose statistics speak for his play, however, is goalie Bob Ross. Ross has been in goal for every one of the Huskies' games. At one point he had a string of five consecutive shutouts. He has probably been the most consistent goaltender in New England this fall.

UConn relies on a balanced attack, which is shown in that fifteen different players have already scored for the Huskies. It relies on its excellent depth in the front line to keep the pressure on the opposition. The two leading scorers for UConn so far have been junior wing Tom Nevers and co-captain forward Jim Evans. The Minutemen can also expect pressure from the Huskie halfbacks and fullbacks, as they have been strong offensively as well.

John Kwolek, sports editor for the Connecticut Daily Campus, summed up the Huskies. "There are no real stars on this team. You'll rarely see the same guy as hero two games in a row. Coach Joe Moroney uses as many as twenty-five players in a game, so there's plenty of depth."

When asked about the possibility of a letdown after the Brown game, Kwolek responded, "We're always up for UMass. We can't afford to lose any conference games. The UConn-UMass rivalry always produces close games and, of course, it's also you're homecoming game, so there will be a good crowd."

Russ Kidd responded to the possibility of a UConn letdown with a smile. "Wouldn't it be great to knock them off?" he said. "It seems like we haven't had a break all year. Let's hope we've saved something for UConn."

BOOTER BANTER: The last two UMass-UConn games have both been one goal games.... UConn's two ties this year were with Bridgeport and Adelphi.... Saturday's game is at 11:00 at the field across from Boyden.... The Minutemen will battle the Alumni Sunday afternoon... The UMass JV's will be home against UConn's JV's, Saturday at 11:00 a.m.

that this is more of a revenge game for me. That one point loss made a big difference in our season."

Jessamy, incidentally, and safety Ron Harris are each moving in on all-time records. Jessamy needs just 44 yards to become the all-time leading rusher at UMass, while Harris needs 79 yards to set the all-time New England record for punt return yardage in a career. Both could conceivably surpass the current leaders tomorrow.

MacPherson feels that Homecoming, after being away so long, should help the UMass cause.

"It should be to our advantage," MacPherson said, "being home after such a long time. I'll tell you, thank God for the band and the cheerleaders in those away games."

Offensively, UConn is led by a senior backfield of quarterback Bernie Palmer and running backs Nick Giaquinto and Darryl Schwartz. Palmer leads the Yankee Conference in passing with 677 yards, but has tossed just one TD aerial and suffered 10 interceptions. Giaquinto has rushed for 310 yards and 4.5 average, and was the ECAC player of the week against Maine with 144 yards. Schwartz has aided the ground game with 173 yards.

The Huskie offense, which has tallied just 54 points in the six games, has been plagued by a young and inexperienced line. The interior line consists of four sophomores and a freshman, who may find themselves overmatched against the experienced UMass defensive front.

Defensively, senior linebacker Kirk Ferentz leads the way for the Huskies, along with defensive tackle Paul Mariano, a transfer from Pittsburgh.

The Minutemen, striving for a consistent offensive performance, will go with its regular starting lineup, which includes Brian McNally at quarterback, and Jessamy and Bill Coleman behind him.

Steve Telander is extremely doubtful for the tilt, as his knee still bothers him.

Volleyball

Matches await women up north

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

A long ride and a long day of matches are in store for the Women's volleyball team as the spikers travel to UMaine-Orono to compete against several Maine teams tomorrow starting at 10:45 a.m.

While most of us are sleeping off Friday night's homecoming activities, the UMass spikers will be starting a rigorous day of volleyball with a match against UMaine-Orono.

UMass will then play UMaine-Presque Island. The outcome of these two matches will determine whether the Minutewomen play UMaine-Farmington, UMaine-Machias, or Bates College in the next sequence of matches. Exactly how this works is still a mystery to me, but apparently the spikers will play three matches.

Coach Diane Thompson doesn't know what to expect from tomorrow's opponents, but she does expect a tough time from the referees.

"They have strict officiating up there," Thompson said. "This could hurt the spikers."

Thompson also said the centers will probably be called for carrying frequently. "We'll have to play the officials game," she added.

The team is hampered by injuries, Thompson said. Heidi Dickson has a sprained finger on her spiking hand and Deb Kuzdeba has muscle problems in her right leg. However, Shelley Soules, who sprained her ankle last Friday, should be fully recovered for tomorrow's matches.

The spikers have gained confidence from the past two outings, according to Thompson who described herself as "optimistic."

"We've played good ball games, even though we haven't won them all."

UM finally home, face rival UConn

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

The long-awaited Homecoming game will finally be upon us tomorrow when the UMass football team, on the road since its opening game with Toledo five weeks ago, hosts rival UConn tomorrow at 1:00 (12:50 WMUA) at Alumni Stadium.

The Minutemen, who have won three of four on the road since their victory against Toledo, will be seeking their fourth straight Yankee Conference win against a somewhat weak and demoralized Huskie outfit. Coach Larry Naviaux's forces have dropped all six of their games, the most recent at 24-13 verdict to Maine. The other Huskie losses have come at the hands of very formidable foes; Colgate, Navy, Yale, New Hampshire, and Rutgers.

"All we have to worry about is what the University of Connecticut will do on Saturday, October 23rd," UMass coach Dick MacPherson said concerning the UConn record. "We've seen the New Hampshire and Rutgers films," MacPherson added, "and we know what those two teams are like."

UConn lost that game to UNH in the final seconds, 24-21, on a Wildcat field goal. New Hampshire fumbled on the last play of the game, and the Huskies recovered, but a penalty prior to the play gave UNH one more down and ultimately the victory.

Rutgers, possessor of the longest winning streak in the nation at 13 games, routed UConn 38-0. The Scarlet Nights, UMass' foe in two weeks, are ranked in the top 30 in the country.

The UConn season reached the pits last week when the Huskies held a 13-10 halftime lead, only to lose to Maine going away. The men from Storrs will desperately try to climb out of their hole tomorrow, and a win at UMass would give them a giant boost.

Connecticut met the Minutemen two years ago on UMass' Homecoming weekend, and with a final goal line stand and a blocked punt in the waning seconds, UConn spoiled the UMass Homecoming with a 10-9 win.

"The only thing I can say this Homecoming means to me," said UMass halfback Rich Jessamy, "is

Women host N.E.'s in defense of crown

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

A growth of 200 per cent a year is hardly desirable as far as the national birth rate is concerned, but for the MAIAW, the women's New England Cross Country Championships, this figure proudly represents the tremendous growth the sport has enjoyed over the past year.

Last year, when UMass also hosted the meet, 50 athletes competed, representing 12 schools and four complete teams. Tomorrow afternoon at two, 146 runners will take the gun on the field above NOPE. They will be representing 23 schools and 14 teams.

The UMass women will be the defending champs in the meet, as they defeated Williams, Vermont and Brandeis last year by totaling 36 points. Jane Welzel was second in that race, with Julie Lafreniere and Johara Chapman also finishing in the top ten, in fourth and seventh, respectively. Cathy Whitcomb of Tufts was the individual titlist. She will also return to defend her crown.

Apart from the UMass women, her chief competition will probably come from Marina Buckley of Amherst. She has won most of her races this season, usually by wide margins. Other top individuals will be Mary Hakala of Williams, who gave the Minutewomen a scare in a dual meet; Donna Randell of Brandeis, the Greater Boston Champ; Mo Thorpe of Middlebury; and Michelle Cutsforth, also of Williams.

The team which is expected to give UMass the most trouble is Middlebury. Led by Thorpe, they have gone undefeated over the last two seasons, and won the Amherst Invitational this year in the absence of the UMass team.

"They have a team that's identical to us," said Coach Ken O'Brien. "They have two very good front runners, and third and fourth runners who are, I'm sure, as good as ours. If we hold an edge, our fifth, sixth and seventh runners are better than their fifth."

Jane Welzel expressed the confidence of the UMass team when she said, "The only people we're worried about is Middlebury, but we figure we should be able to take 'em. The thing is, we have seven good runners, and they only have four."

Although the whole squad can run, O'Brien must designate seven runners who will make up the team's scorers. Right now six people are definite in O'Brien's mind. Welzel, Chapman, Lafreniere, Sue Swartz, Maggie Crowley and Anne Bradshaw are already certain. The other spot is up for grabs between Debbie Farmer, Diane Perry and Barb Callanan, who have been injured, and Monica Scott.

The small gap that the women have kept between the first five runners on the team has served them in good stead all year, and should continue to do so.

"That'll win a lot of dual meets for you," said O'Brien. "But it's even more important in the big meets because a lot of places can be accumulated on a team if they have a fourth or fifth runner who is weak."

Chapman cited this strategy in regards to Middlebury. "We want

Bench leads Reds' sweep

NEW YORK [UPI] — A rejuvenated Johnny Bench, a broken down part of the "Big Red Machine" during the season, helped the Cincinnati Reds become the first National League Team in 54 years to win consecutive World Series Thursday night by crashing a pair of homers and driving in five runs to spark a 7-2 triumph over the New York Yankees that completed a four-game sweep.

It marked the first four-game sweep in the World Series since 1966 when the Baltimore Orioles took the Los Angeles Dodgers, and in winning back-to-back World championships the Reds became the first NFL team since the 1921-22 New York Giants to achieve that distinction.

It was somehow fitting that Bench would emerge as the hero of the final game, since he struggled through the worst season of his big league career. Bothered by injuries, he batted only .234 and hit just 16 home runs with 74 RBI's. But throughout his career he has always had the reputation of coming through in the big games and once again he responded to the challenge.

Bench's first big moment came in the fourth inning. The Reds trailed 1-0 but quickly tied the score when Joe Morgan walked, stole second and scored on a two-out single by George Foster. Bench, batting seventh in the Reds' powerful lineup, then unloaded a drive off Ed Figueroa that hit off the left field foul pole for his fourth World Series homer.

It was the second clutch home run for Bench in post-season competition this year. He hit a dramatic two-out homer in the ninth inning of the third game of the NL playoffs against Philadelphia and the Reds went on to win that game.

Bench wasn't through, however. In the ninth, after walks to Tony Perez and Dan Driessen, he lined a shot into the left field seats off reliever Dick Tidrow to trigger a four-run inning that wrapped up the contest. The Reds then rubbed salt into the Yankee wounds by adding a run on successive doubles by Cesar Geronimo and Dave Concepion.

Bench finished the series with eight hits in 15 at bats and received Sport Magazine's award as Most Valuable Player.

Gary Nolan also figured prominently for the Reds in the final game. Nolan, a disappointment in three previous World Series, won his first series game by allowing eight hits in 6 2-3 innings.

Grid picks—who?

This week's guest prognosticator is Herbert Hoover, renowned Presidential economist.

The only reason I have agreed to author this travesty is to clear my good name of any responsibility whatsoever connected with the stock market crash of 1929 and subsequent Great Depression.

The obvious culprit for the '29 depression was the Democratic Congress of 1930. I mean there we were, the 1929 Republican Congress and I, steering the country on a steady course — a nation at peace, and then it happened. E. F. Hutton predicted a 1930 opposition majority and everybody sold their stocks; the economy just went kaput. We even tried to squelch the rumors of a Democratic takeover, but it was no use. When E. F. Hutton talked, people listened.

The '29 Congress and I, though, still had faith in the fiscal stability of the United States, even if those perverse Democrats didn't. We decided to let the economy bottom out and, well, the rest is history.

You'll have to excuse me now, but my products haven't been selling too well. Either I've picked the wrong street corner or people just aren't ready to use No. 5 pencils.

What is homecoming

By JO STEWART

Homecoming is to Greeks what a class reunion is to a class of the fifties. It is a very special event in which nostalgia plays an important role.

Homecoming gives the alumni a special chance to come back to the University, but it is also much more. It is a rare chance to see old friends and renew old friendships. It is a time to reminisce about the past and talk about plans for the future. It is a time for enjoyment.

Steven Macauley, President of Green Council and a member of Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity, looks at Homecoming as, "a chance for us (Greeks) to improve fraternity-sorority relations, graduate-undergraduate relations, and University-Greek area relations."

Sadly enough, Homecoming isn't what it used to be. According to Joseph Barboza, undergraduate assistant to Greek Affairs and an alumnus of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity, in the past most of the University was involved in Homecoming activities and it was a much bigger event concerning the entire campus.

Edward Bowe, Director of Greek Affairs, reflects upon Homecoming nostalgically, and hopes there will be a campus-wide involvement once again. Bowe said that in the past, most dorms and campus organizations had budgets for Homecoming activities.

Bowe remembers that when he was an undergrad, students would steal toilet paper throughout the campus to make their floats. For the week after Homecoming, a roll of toilet paper was not to be on Haigis Mall. All events are open to the University community.

The float parade is an age old tradition and sets the mood for the weekend. Hours of careful planning and work go into the making of these floats for all to appreciate at the parade on Friday night the eve of Homecoming.

Appearing in the Homecoming parade along with nine or ten floats will be the Amherst and UMass police, the Amherst Fire Department, the Air Force, ROTC Color Guard, the Mahar Regional High School Band of Orange complete with majorettes, the Pioneer Jugglers, and of course, the UMass cheerleaders. The Greek area has also donated 50 to 60 of their pledges who will be dressed as clowns to march as a finer point of entertainment.

Jerry Jolly, the owner and manager of The Pub is very excited about the Homecoming weekend. He, along with 34 employees are making a thirty-four foot by eight foot waterproof float, complete ith "Happy Hour" music. Jolly s iad, since this was their first float, that he went to Springfield to see the MacDonald's float to get an idea of what a professional float is like. They have tried to make it as professional as possible and he laughs saying, "We're probably trying to make it a Rose Bowl float. We don't know what we're getting into."

He and his wife Dolly said they are planning on continuing the spirit of Homecoming through next Tuesday night by trying to get Natalie Cole to stop in after her concert at the Fine Arts Center. The Pub is where Ms. Cole got her start.

When speaking of the involvement on the construction of the float, Jolly said he had, "lots of good participation and response in making the float. It's a big thing for me. It's going to be a found at the University of Massachusetts.

In 1971 there was no Homecoming parade. Bowe said "traditions weren't embraced then because they were thought of as establishment."

In the following few years however, the Greek alumni gently pressured the Greek area to rejuvinate Homecoming activities. In 1972 Paul Marchand and Ron Palenius of Beta Kappa Phi fraternity re-instituted the float parade with a grand total of three entries, and it has since been re-developing into a larger tradition.

"Undergraduates should think a lot more about alumni," Bowe explains "because they do receive scholarships from them and one day they will be alumni and, may like to come back for Homecoming."

In summation on Homecoming Bowe added, "I think it's great. It's the one opportunity I have in a year to rekindle old friendships. It's a little sad to think you can't go back to the good old college days."

According to Randy McIntyre, President of Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity, things are looking up. McIntypre said, "Alumni relations are beginning to be re-emphasized after a period of virtually no communication between alumni and undergraduates. This is an important factor in the success of any Homecoming weekend because without our alumni there would be no Homecoming."

The Greeks plan numerous events for the alumni and the UMass community to make Homecoming the gala event that it should be for everyone.

Homecoming starts for many Greeks at The Pub for Happy Hour the night is culminated by the float parade followed by a pep rally great time."

Saturday is kicked off with the Homecoming football game, after which most fraternities and sororities entertain their alumni in various ways for the remainder of the weekend. Many Greeks hold receptions to honor their alumni and to illustrate to them that they are an important part of the University.

Kathy Moore, of Alpha Chi Omega sorority and activities chairperson for Greek Council, has been working very hard with her committee trying to bring back some of the last glory of Homecoming on this campus. She has tried to get more on and off campus groups involved in any way possible. One of the main achievements of her committee is the participation of The Pub in the Homecoming parade.

At any rate, Homecoming is something that shouldn't be missed. It is one of the finest traditions this University has, and the more people involved, the more enjoyable it will be for everyone.

UMass band kicks off homecoming

By ROBERT DAVIDSON

With music from Scott Joplin to Peter Townshend, the second annual Multiband Pops promises to provide a night of lively foot-stompin' tunes and vibrant rock tonight.

According to Dr. John A. Jenkins, director of the UMass Bands, the concert was a smashing success last year and has every indication of being an even greater event this year.

"Everything that we tried to do to entertain the audience last year, we're trying to do a little more of this year. The concert is designed to be a Pops — plus and the plus means everything from saxophone virtuosity and Sousa marches to dancing the 'Hustle' on stage," said Jenkins.

The concert, which will kick off the homecoming weekend at UMass, was scheduled as a result of strong alumni demand and will display a large assortment of musical talent.

The Jazz Workshop "Big Band" will start the concert playing a variety of Glenn Miller and Duke Ellington favorites. The group will be followed by the Symphony Band which will accompany Lynn Klock on a saxophone solo. Klock, a well known soloist in this area, received a standing ovation from the capacity crowd last year for his amazing performance.

The Symphony Band will also accompany John and Gretchen d'Armand, two well known opera soloists who enjoy singing show music. The d'Armnds will sing a medley of songs from Rodgers and Hammersteins' Oklahoma and will conclude their act with a medley of songs that will capture the nostalgic patriotism of George M. Cohan's Yankee Doodle Dandy.

A guest appearance will be made by the Spirit of '76 Ancient Fife and Drums, an authentic Revolutionary — period ensemble whose performances have thrilled many audiences including Queen Elizabeth II of England.

The progression of 200 years of marching bands may be witnessed by the concert — goers when the UMass Marching Band concludes the festivities with a selection of music from its previous 1976 appearances. This selection will include special arrangements of the theme from 2001: A Space Odyssey and a medley of tunes from Peter Townshend's rock opera Tommy. The Marching Band will also present a special preview of its homecoming halftime show entitled "Disco".

The highlight of the Marching Band's appearance will be the performance of it's feature twirler, Diane Luciani. The concert will be one of Luciani's last performances at UMass.

Luciani was one of the main reasons that last year's concert was such a success. According to Jenkins, "One of the biggest hits of the concert last year was the twirling of Diane Luciani. Diane is finishing a four year stint with the Marching Band this year before which she was the world champion twirler in 1972.

"This year, Diane will have even more of an opportunity in the show to demonstrate the talents that she has in twirling, dancing, and charm which have earned for her a secure place among the band members as the "sweetheart of the Marching Band", said Jenkins.

Jenkins said last week that anyone who enjoys music will certainly not want to miss this concert. The Multiband Pops promises to be one the biggest musical events on campus this year.

Jessamy, Coleman give opposition a run for its money

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

They both crouch down in their three-point stances behind quarterback Brian McNally anxiously awaiting the snap of the ball. The eagerly awaiting defense looms just beyond the offensive line, thinking run. But where?... Off guard?.... off tackle?.... around end? And more importantly, who? Rich Jessamy?... or Bill Coleman?

For opposing defenses the choice is not an easy one to make, and with the running of UMass' dynamic duo of Jessamy and Coleman, the outcome for the "Big D" against the Minutemen ground attack is seldom a cause for celebration. For throughout this season the balanced running tandem of Rich Jessamy and Bill Coleman has given opposing clubs nightmares. All these senior backs have done is rush for 356 and 354 yards, respectively, with Jessamy averaging 6.8 yards per carry and Coleman 4.7 yards.

Although each has enjoyed the common ingredient of success this season, their outlooks had to be viewed from two different perspectives at the outset of the year. Jessamy was the seasoned veteran, a three year starter from Yonkers, New York, with a highly regarded reputation as a breakaway back. Meanwhile, for Coleman, it was the chance to prove himself as he was thrust into the starting role after the graduation of Jim Torrance.

"I set some individual goals before the season," Jessamy said. "Yardage-wise I hoped for 1,000 and that keeps me going."

"I just looked at this year as my chance," Coleman explained. "I had a chance during my sophomore year but I had a bad year. This year I just wanted to come out and play the way I should play."

Each has indeed done that. From the opening game with Toledo when Coleman gained 54 yards in 10 carries, to the Maine game when Jessamy and Coleman each rushed for better than 100 yards, to last week in Rhode Island when Coleman cruised for 85 yards, the pair has been brilliantly consistent.

Through these first five games, Jessamy has inched closer and closer to a very prestigious record. The senior now needs just 44 yards to break Paul Metallo's record to become the all-time leading rusher at UMass. Jessamy has gained 1635 yards in his four years here for a sparkling 5.9 average, whereas Metallo averaged 4.6 yards per carry on his way to 1678 yards. Tomorrow's Homecoming game with Connecticut should be the game Jessamy earns the honor.

"I kind of... well... not planned it," Jessamy said, "but I'm glad it's gonna happen this weekend in front of my family and everyone. I'm really confident. I know it's gonna happen. I hope to break it on the first couple of plays."

This confidence, which Jessamy so openly displays, was an important trait that Coleman lacked according to coach Dick MacPherson.

"He now has finally gained the confidence we had in him all the time," MacPherson said. "Kickoffs hurt his confidence in 1974 when he had trouble with fumbles, so now we don't use him. Not because he isn't a good kickoff return man, but now that added pressure just isn't on him."

For any two running backs to have success, they need to depend on each other — for blocking, for communication, and for confidence. These two guys have it all.

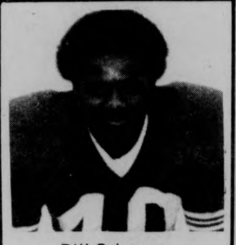
"There are times when we go right up to the line talking to each other," Coleman said. "Even in our stances we sometimes talk. Rich tells me something if I forget, and since I used to be a halfback, I can remind him of things."

"Billy and I came here together our freshman year, and since then it's been my dream to work with him," Jessamy said. "Even last year, though I spent a lot of time in the backfield with Jim Torrance, me and Bill still worked together.

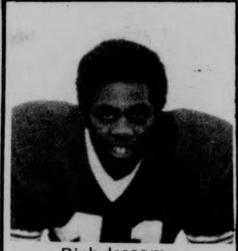
"Bill's more my type of person than Torrance was," Jessamy continued. We have a good close relationship. I can really relate to him on the field, our styles are really the same."

Their combination of personality and talent, which have relate to him on the field, our styles are really the same."

Their combination of personality and talent, which have blended together so well, has been a significant key in the opening of the ground game. With this success has come the ability of leadership, a necessity considering they were running behind a young and relatively inexperience line.



Bill Coleman



Rich Jessamy

"They (the offensive line) see me and Billy get going and it gets them going," Jessamy explained. "The more we break the more they block. We give everything and get them started and they help us."

Coleman agreed. "If we don't do anything," he said, "the line sees this and gets down if we get down. We have to pick each other up."

Both Jessamy and Coleman offer unlimited credit to the offensive line; players such as seniors Dennis Barbato, Fred Willis, and Jeff Lauder, and underclassmen Jim Penta, Gerry Green, and Bruce Kimball. "Super" says Coleman. "They really believe in us," adds Jessamy.

Another important aspect in the running game has been depth. With players of the calibre of Keith Lang, John Romboli, and Dennis Dent to spell the starters, it becomes that much easier. "We can put out every play and have nothing to worry about because of the depth," Coleman said.

Tomorrow's game will be the final Homecoming for Jessamy and Coleman, and each has set his sights. Both still remember two years ago when the Huskies spoiled the UMass homecoming with a 10-9 win, and both seek revenge, even two years after.

"This Homecoming means a lot to me," Coleman said. Last time (1974) I started against UConn and I feel I might have lost the game. I fumbled on the first play and they scored. So this is really big for me to get back."

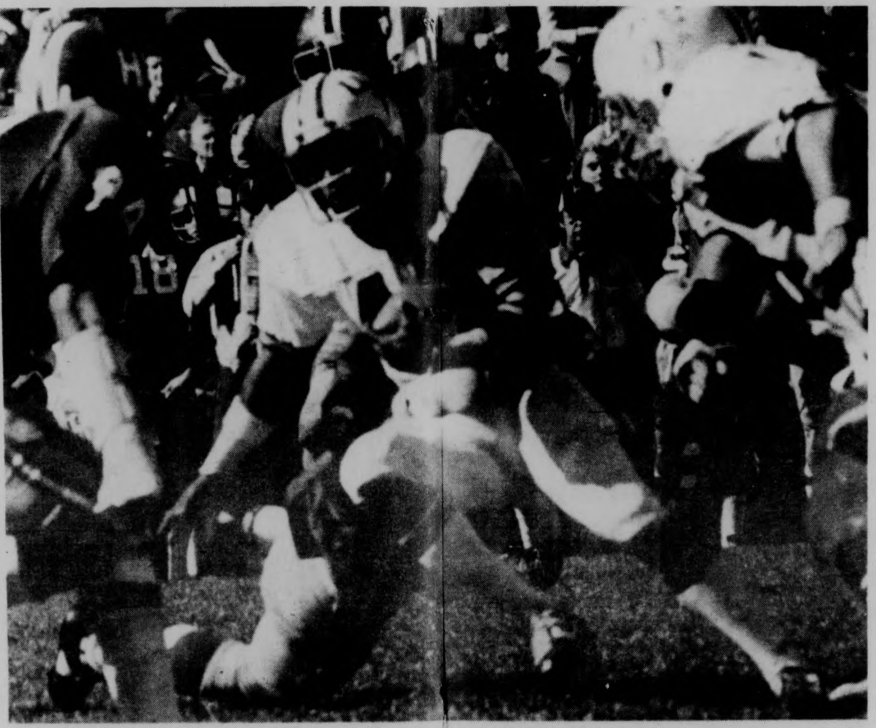
"The only thing I can say Homecoming means to me," Jessamy said, "is that this is more of a revenge game for me. That one point loss made a big difference in our season. My family will be here," he continued, "and I foresee a really good Homecoming."

Despite the proud accomplishments each has achieved, Jessamy with his rushing-record-to-be, and Coleman with a solid senior year, they strive for more. Perhaps Jessamy said it best.

"I want to do everything, really put it all together," he said. I want to catch the ball, show I can be a power back, to run, to block, to pick up the blitz, I want to excel at these. I strive for a consistent effort.

"I feel inside that I'm getting closer. I'm not satisfied though," he added. I don't think anyone's ever satisfied. Even when I leave here, there'll be things I wished I'd done."

Perhaps so. But what these two players have done this year will be enough to remember. From that run up the middle to the jaunt around end, this duo has been a pleasing sight to watch, even though that sight is often just a blur racing downfield.



UMass senior halfback Rich Jessamy rambles through a hole with the quickness that has him on the brink of becoming the leading all-time rusher at UMass. Jessamy needs just 44 yards and feels confident that tomorrow's Homecoming game will be the record-setting day. He, along with Bill Coleman, has given the Minutemen one of the most potent 1-2 running attacks in New England. (Staff photo by Jim Higgins)

The season's half over .... and UMass is 4-1

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

OK, the season's half over. Five out of ten games are history now — and the 1976 UMass football team has won four of them.

So here we are, at the crossroads, ready to pass judgment on this team. After five games, that shouldn't be hard, right?

Wrong.

Sure, 4-1 is a record that shouldn't be put down. But anyone would be foolish to suggest that the success up to this point guarantees a final mark of 10-2.

Yes, the passing game has looked good. And the running game, of course. Defense, great. But all at the same time? Not that often.

Which hasn't really mattered all that much thus far. Maine, Boston University, and even Rhode Island, who put up a helluva fight, weren't serious enough tests to really show us the strength, and weaknesses, of this UMass team.

Make no mistake about it, this is a strong team. The defense, despite some tough injuries, is superb. The offensive attack, particularly the running game, is powerful, a switch from past teams.

But things are gonna start getting tough for the Minutemen. The days of the Seattle Seahawks and New York Giants are gone — the second half of the season will be strictly Dallas Cowboy and Oakland Raider opposition.

Of course, there is Boston College at the end, the team we sort of block out of our minds. There is also New Hampshire, with one Yankee Conference loss but a very tough opponent. And stuck in the middle of that is a little surprise named Rutgers, with the longest current winning streak in NCAA Division I football, and a 6-0 record. Only an optimist could take those three contests and see UMass coming out with more than one win.

Offensively, the Minutemen have been both explosive and impotent, consistent and inconsistent. Big plays have been the trademark of this team — an 80-yard TD catch by Kevin Cummings against Toledo, a 67-yard run by Rich Jessamy against Maine, and a 77-yard Jessamy slosh through the water at BU.

Other times, there was consistency. The running game has averaged close to 200 yards per game, thanks to a big offensive line and the running of Jessamy and Bill Coleman.

The passing game has shown sporadic bursts, but little consistency. Cummings has come on to lead the squad in receiving, and brought some strength where it was sorely needed. John Gladchuk, Bob Zawada, and Moses' Williams have not shown the consistent ability to get open, so Cummings has filled a big gap.

Quarterback Brian McNally has done what was expected of him — provide leadership and consistency. He has also shown that he can throw better than many believed — completing 46 per cent of his aerials.

Defense was never a question with this team, but injuries to John Toner, Todd Holt, and Steve Telander have hurt. Toner is back now, although John McDonald filled in remarkably for him. Holt is gone for the year, and nobody knows when we'll see Telander back in action. And in the tough games to come, that could really hurt.

The rest of the defense has been excellent. Defensive end Dennis Fenton, who was given the game ball against BU, is finally receiving the attention he has worked so hard for. Linebacker Peter McCarty was voted Yan Con player of the week for his efforts against URI, and safety Ron Harris was voted the same honor earlier.

But there seem to be weaknesses too. The defensive backfield, has been hurt by the loss of Holt, although it has not been beaten often.

Offensively, there has been the lack of consistency particularly in the passing game, which hasn't been too damaging thus far but could prove to be later.

The key, of course, is the schedule. It opened with Toledo, a small, fast team which was trampled 28-14. Then came a 24-3 roll over a Maine team that was tougher than that of years' past.

The only loss thus far came at the hands of Harvard, on regional ABC-TV, on a Saturday when YanCon teams were losing to Ivy Leaguers all over New England (Yale over UConn, Brown over URI, Dartmouth over UNH). On that day, the UMass defense was simply unable to stop Harvard quarterback Jim Kubacki's running and passing off the option play, and lost 24-13.

A week later came a 33-6 romp over BU, followed by last week's last-second 14-7 thriller over URI. The only team that should have been a real test for the Minutemen thus far, beat them.

The rest of the schedule will be quite different. UConn, tomorrow's opponent, is 0-6 but the Huskies have lost to a lot of tough teams.

One of those teams is Rutgers, and if that game isn't tough enough for UMass, it will be followed one week later by what might decide the YanCon championship, the UNH contest.

The Minutemen will have a breather after that, playing a Holy Cross team that just won its first game a week ago (over BU).

And then, at the end, just to make sure no season could have a real happy ending (barring a minor miracle, which BC would seem to have the monopoly on), are the Eagles of Boston College. They're no longer in the Top 20, but they are some kind of tough.

What should UMass fans hope for in the coming weeks? First, some signs of consistency from all parts of the team. Second, the ability to move the ball without depending on the big play. Third, some inspired and tough play, plus some breaks, that might allow an upset of (dare I say it?) Rutgers or BC. And, of course, a solid game against UNH to bring the Beanpot back to Amherst.

How well the Minutemen do these things will mean the difference between a good and an outstanding season.

The ups and downs of past homecomings

This year's homecoming opponent for UMass varsity football team is the University of Connecticut.

In a manner of speaking, the Huskies are not having one of their banner seasons. The team from the Constitution State is 0-6 on the year, including an 0-2 Yankee Conference mark.

The Minutemen, who beat the Huskies easily last year, lead the series, which began in 1897, 25-18. There have been two ties.

So, to be totally honest with you, the game should be no contest. But games aren't won on paper, they're won on the football field and there's nothing better than a large homecoming crowd to get a team psyched for a game.

Now for a look at how the Minutemen have done in past homecoming games.

1969: Before a crowd of over 16,000, the then Redmen defeated Rhode Island, 21-9. The win gave UMass a 3-2 record at the time.

1970: UMass missed a 42-yard field goal with 27 seconds left in the game and had to settle for a 21-21 tie with UConn. The going into the final quarter of play, but the Huskies marched 80-yards in nine plays to tie the game.

1971: Rhode Island scored 21 points in the second quarter to beat UMass, 31-3 before a homecoming crowd of 13,000.

1972: 17,500 saw UMass quarterback Piel Pennington at his peak as he threw touchdown passes of 66, 42, 39 and nine yards and scored a TD on the ground to lead the Redmen to a 49-16 win over UConn. It was the sixth straight victory for UMass. It was also the last year the team was known as the "Redmen," as its nickname was changed to what it is today.

1973: Rhode Island edged the Minutemen, 41-35 in a wild game. URI had a 34-14 lead in the second half, but UMass staged a comeback as it took a 35-34 lead, but URI scored on a long running play to take a 41-35 lead. UMass tried to come back in the last 59 seconds, but the Rams held on for the win.

1974: UConn squeezed by UMass 10-9, in a heartbreaker. It was also a quarterback breaker as three UMass signal callers, Mark Tripucka, Petzr Colton and Brian McNally had bad days. McNally was also injured in the game. The trio attempted 15 passes and completed only two.

1975: The Minutemen, on their way to an 8-2 season, downed Rhode Island 23-7.

1976:? My good friend Herbert Hoover tells me UMass is going to win, just as he told me not to worry after the stock market crashed. I told him now what I told him back in 1929; that is to just wait and see what happens.

Whenever the University of Massachusetts is mentioned one may think of many things. The world's tallest library, endless lines in Whitmore, add-drop forms, or the Bluewall. All are familiar things to anyone that has ever attended or visited UMass.

However, if UMass were mentioned to anyone that had attended the UMass-Harvard football game, something else would come to mind: it is the home of one of the finest marching bands in the east. Just ask anyone that was in Harvard Stadium that day.

The Harvard fans are not known for their polite reception of opponents or visiting bands. This well earned reputation was upheld on September 25; that is until the UMass Marching Band took the field at halftime. It was then that the phenomenon occurred. People at Harvard can actually be polite at times, In fact, they even give standing ovations.

Although such an ovation is a rarity at Harvard Stadium, is not a novelty to the UMass Marching Band. Why? Because the never ending strive for perfection is an individual commitment from each band member.

The stirring ovation received at Harvard has had an inspiring effect on the UMass Marching Band. The band has continued to strive toward perfection as it has in the past. Anyone present at Alumni Stadium for the band's return appearance tomorrow will be witness to this fact.

Date set for bargaining elections

By LISA MELILLI
and BILL PARENT
Collegian Staff

Collective bargaining elections will be held Dec. 1 and 2 for faculty and staff both here and at the UMass Boston-campus.

On these two dates, faculty, including department heads and chairpersons, librarians, part-time teaching staff and staff whose jobs relate to teaching, will be voting on whether to engage a collective bargaining unit, and if so, whether the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) or the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) will represent them, according to a Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission ruling last Friday.

The faculty has been waiting almost two months for the Commission's decision. Frederick V. Casselman, council for the state Commission said the December date was "ligistically the first time to do it."

According to Casselman, Dec. 1 and 2 are the earliest times the Commission staff could work the polls and that it will take three weeks for absentee ballots to be sent and received by faculty on sabbatical and leave of absence.

In a random Collegian poll most faculty members here feel that the faculty will decide on collective bargaining and that the choice is now between AAUP and MSP.

AAUP, the older, more traditional of the two bargaining organizations, is a national organization with chapters here and in Boston. Currently AAUP has 8,000 members in 1365 chapters, 35 of which have won bargaining rights. According to local President Joseph S. Larson, the local AAUP chapter has a stable dues paying membership of 200.

MSP is the Massachusetts chapter of the National Education Association (NEA) which has 54,000 college and university members in 354 locals, 149 of which are bargaining agents. On the Amherst campus MSP now has 350 members, according to President Larry S. Roberts.

However many faculty members are currently paying dues to both organizations.

MSP is also recognized as the more activist of the two groups. Last week the Women's Caucus of MSP filed complaints against the University charging sex discrimination in faculty pay rates.

In the next month both the MSP and AAUP will be campaigning extensively in departments here for the right to represent faculty. Workshops, speakers and debates are being scheduled between the two groups.

The faculty here will have the opportunity of choosing either date to vote while the Boston faculty will be voting one day at the Harbor campus and one day at the Arlington Street campus.

Four years ago, MSP and AAUP formed a coalition for collective bargaining but lost 3-2 as faculty chose not to engage in collective bargaining.

Poll shows Carter leading here by 2-1 margin

By KEVIN J. CLAFFEY
Collegian Staff

Jimmy Carter is preferred by UMass undergraduates 2-1 over Gerald R. Ford as the country's next president.

In a survey taken last week, which also investigated student's opinions about the nine referenda to appear on the Nov. 2 ballot and the first two Carter-Ford debates, 29 per cent of the sample was undecided about a presidential choice.

Thirty-seven per cent of the respondents said they favored Carter, President Ford tallied 18 per cent and Eugene McCarthy, former Minnesota senator, was chosen by 10 per cent of those polled.

The sampling, conducted by telephone Wednesday night by 20 Project Pulse Work-study students, was restricted to 223 UMass undergraduates who live within 30 miles of the Amherst campus.

In the Massachusetts senatorial race, Edward M. Kennedy, who received two votes in the presidential poll, was favored by 70 per cent of the Massachusetts residents polled.

Nineteen per cent were undecided in the senatorial race and only seven per cent expressed a preference for Republican candidate Michael S. Robertson.

In the first presidential debate, 23 per cent said they thought Ford has won, and 16 per cent gave the decision to Carter. Thirty-two per cent said they didn't see the first debate.

Jimmy Carter was the favorite in the second debate garnering 38 per cent of the vote. Only four per cent said Ford won and 44 per cent said they had not seen the debate.

REFERENDA

The bill to ban use of "convenience containers" in Massachusetts, commonly called the Bottle Bill, was favored by 72 per cent of those polled. Twenty-two per cent said they would vote against the bill.

The Equal Rights Amendment, which will appear as the first question on the Massachusetts ballot, was favored by 89 per cent of those polled.

Fifty seven per cent said they would vote in favor of the Graduated Income Tax, which will appear on the Massachusetts ballot for the third time.

Probably the most volatile issue on the Massachusetts ballot is the referendum to establish a Massachusetts Power Authority. This was re-affirmed by the sampling, which defeated it by a 24 per cent margin. Twenty

Bobby Daniels: Trying to heal racial wounds

By WILLIAM MILLS
Collegian Staff

Race relations on campus are improving on the "institutional level" but the personal level leaves "much to be desired," according to Dr. O.C. Bobby Daniels, associate dean of students.

Daniels said in an exclusive Collegian interview that the University has been successful in implementing effective human relations programs, such as affirmative action policies for departments and programs within the University, but personal relations between Third World and white students are still tenuous. He said part of his job is to begin the "painful process of healing some of the racial wounds of this century."

Constantly challenging Third World and white students to work together, Daniels' job is to make difficult and consistent decisions about student affairs regardless of the race or sex of those involved.

Daniels said he must not hesitate to "reprimand students when behaviors deprive fellow students of their rights." A year ago, Daniel's effectiveness as an associate dean came to the entire University's attention when he was one of an administrative triumvirate assigned to assist the financially and racially troubled Campus Center-Student Union complex.

His specific area of responsibility was the human environment. Through his work, the complex is now in the "enviable position of having the most continuous comprehensive and productive affirmative action and human relations programs on our campus," according to Dean of Students William F. Field.

An instructor in "Interracial Apperception and Ideology," a three-credit undergraduate and graduate course, Dean Daniels believes that "teaching is the role that provides perhaps the greatest opportunity to observe the uniqueness of those with whom I come into frequent contact." As well as teaching workshops at Columbia, Florida Atlantic, UCLA, SUNY, Atlantic University, and Johns Hopkins, Dean Daniels has conducted workshops in a variety

At age 23 Robert Earl Brown of Elmira, N.Y. views criminal justice in western Massachusetts from a unique perspective.

The UMass senior was convicted in Hampshire County Superior Court on Oct. 22, 1975 of the armed robbery of a McDonald's restaurant in Hadley. The ex-football player and student organizer drew a three to five year sentence in a conviction which supporters and local media representatives claimed was tainted by questions of racism and dubious judicial procedure. Having served time in both Walpole and Norfolk state prisons, Brown is currently in residence at Northampton's Hampshire County House of Corrections where, via a work-release program, he is allowed to work and attend classes at the University of Massachusetts.

Mr. Brown has steadfastly maintained his innocence [as has Craemen Gethers, another UMass student convicted as an accomplice, though in a separate trial]. After nearly two years of litigation, three lawyers, three judges, and countless defense motions offered in Hampshire County, Mr. Brown agreed to be interviewed by the MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN.

The interview was held on Oct. 20, 1976 over the objection of Brown's counsel, David Rosenberg of Cambridge. For the record Rosenberg has consistently maintained that media saturation has only damaged his client's case and will continue to do so, in the light of motions still pending before Hampshire County Superior Court Judge Paul Tamburello.

The tape-recorded interview took place for an hour and fifteen minutes last Wednesday in the Student Organizing Project Office at the UMass Student Union. The interviewer found the Black, 6 ft. 3 inch, Mr. Brown engaging and well-informed on legal matters. Deletions have been made solely by the COLLEGIAN, without consultation of either Mr Brown or his attorney. Some editing involves substantative matters of judgement, vis-a-vis legal questions, while some is merely due to space permitted and-or syntactical clarity. Once again, the following is solely the responsibility of the interviewer and his newspaper.

'You can say it's almost like getting back to a normal life, but at the same time you know that at a certain time you're going to be someplace else and it's going to be like that every day until your situation is straight.'—Earl Brown

COLLEGIAN: As far as you're concerned right now, are you happy being on the work-release program? What about the possibility of parole? (editors note: according to Mr. Brown he will be eligible in October, 1977)

Brown: Really to answer it ... parole doesn't do anything. I'd rather be out on bail and get the re-trial, and that's the route we have to go. Anything that's below that is academic.

COLLEGIAN: In other words, if you feel you're still innocent then parole, as good as it might be, isn't what you're looking for?

Brown: Right. The state still has strings on you. That's what it comes down to. You don't need it.

COLLEGIAN: As far as dealing with Hampshire County and the work release program ... do you think it's been good? It must be better going to school then staying in jail?

Brown: Right. I think anybody would say that. Some people who get on the program ... it gives them an opportunity to work, and for some other people, go to school. And it gives you the chance, to some degree, to find out what you want to get into. As for myself, the program doesn't do that much for me. I was going to school prior to the whole incident anyway. My priorities haven't changed ... concerning organizing ... some of the things I used to do: working with the Student Organizing Project, finding out what other groups are doing, that hasn't changed. Some projects that I've thought about in the past ... I'm starting now to really focus down on them. But that was something I'd considered before the whole incident occurred. Actually, it's like a limitation on what I can do. I'm a person that moves around. I like to find out what's going on. In this way, I'm set to certain hours ... from Monday to Saturdays at certain hours. I'm in the institution on Sundays so that limits everything. Sunday, I think, is a free day to catch up either on work or in making contacts. So I'm limited in what I can do, I'm limited on my travels. If I have to see someone outside the Five-College area, I'm limited in that capacity. I can get on the phone, but that's kind of impersonal. I like to see people, see the expressions on their faces, see how they react, and then I can form opinions. Not only that ... people don't realize you pay room and board. I don't pay that much, but the point is ... you know ... the fact that I pay anything.

COLLEGIAN: What are your quarters like at the House of Corrections?

Brown: It's just a big room. The maximum there is about twenty-one people. (eidtor's note: in the work-release building, not the jail) you pay room and board. Some people don't pay room and board, according to their situation. It's scaled depending on whether you're working or going to school. The fact is — we can consider — I'm paying restitution, if you really want to look at it. And you say, "Restitution for what?" Not only that, but they say, "We're putting you in Hampshire County for rehabilitation and to straighten out your program," if that's the way you want to word it. To answer, we always have to say, "Rehabilitation for what?" We have so many opinions on this case going back and forth ... the evidence is so shaky. Besides it's been proven that when I was on bail before, there wasn't any problems. There shouldn't be any problems now, so we have to revert back to those people who are keeping me in jail. What's the hold-up?

COLLEGIAN: What was Walpole like?

Brown:: It was strange when I got there at one o'clock Wednesday Oct. 29. (editor's note: 1975) In fact it was kind of strange when the judge announced sentence and they took me out ... because they made four alternative routes thinking people were going to follow me out. That's before we even got to 91! And they kept looking back to see if somebody was going to be after them. Not only that, but mid-way between Walpole and Northampton they had a check-off point. As if to say someone was going to follow.

But, like I say, Walpole was kind of strange when I got there, because there's a certain kind of clothing you can wear, and certain clothing you can't wear. And when I was first put in the cell, the cell reminds you of solitary confinement. And the first thing that goes through your mind is, "Is this the cell I'm going to stay in?" But I found it was where the new people came in, kind of like a holding station. I stayed there less than one day and then I moved up to the actual block I was going to. This was the New Man section. In Walpole it's either B-6 or B-2. In my case I was in B-2. Prior to going up there I asked a guy, "How is it?" and he said, "It shouldn't be that bad because most of the people who go in there are in there for a first crime. This is everybody's first time, and it's a lot better than going into a block where people have been there for a long time." And, you know, I think that took out some of the danger. Plus, as I got to know some of the people on the block ... some of the people knew some roots at UMass and it made it a little more comfortable feeling.

COLLEGIAN: Did you see people getting cut up? Were you afraid of that sort of thing?

Brown: No ... I heard about it ... you know. In fact there was an incident that happened. I didn't see it personally, but you know when you're in that kind of an environment, you mind your own business, try to avoid making enemies; you never know who's looking at you. You keep your program straight. People get into different cliques and you have to watch out which clique you get into. You see all those elements once you walk in there. And you know those elements are going to be appearing. So you try to mind your own business and wait out your time.

It was stated by the judge he was going to send me back to Northampton so if I was worried about Walpole, really I wasn't. I knew eventually I was going to leave. It was in December I moved into a different block with less security. It gave me a little more time to go around; spend a little more time in the library, use the gym facilities.

COLLEGIAN: How long were you in Walpole?

Brown: About four months. Then in January they moved me to Norfolk. Walpole was like a waiting station. Then I. went to Norfolk, to what amounts to a reception center, where they try to figure out what your needs are, schooling, vocational stuff, and all that. From there they are supposed to send you where you're best qualified. In this case I was in the last week of the program. At the time I had my trial, Judge Tamburello supposedly called down there for some verification of where I was in the testing.

COLLEGIAN: That must have helped the evaluation when you lawyer asked for work-release?

Brown: That may be, but the thing is, I think my back-ground helped too. I was into society and school and some of the organs of the school. Actually Judge Tamburello interrupted my evaluation and remanded me to Northampton and stopped me from going to school. For eighteen days I had to stay in the work-release building, until it was straightened out. Why I had to wait 18 days ... my lawyers couldn't make it until February 27. And at that time we had Kent Smith for a judge. We went in private chambers and we discussed the matter. What came out of that meeting ... the remand order would be taken off ... which would allow the paper transfer from Walpole to Northampton. Secondly, the sheriff announced I would be working at Northampton to April 16, when I would be within 18 months of parole, Oct. 16, being the two-thirds date for parole.

As for work, later on I found out I was working in the caning shop working on chairs. It's a good skill in the past, but I'm trying to figure out what bearing it has for people going out into the Northampton area. What happens is you work in the jail prior to going out on the work-release program, depending on your sentence and status ...

COLLEGIAN: As you know, in regard to your case, there has been a lot of talk, on campus, about the issue of racism, vis-a-vis Earl Brown. If you could narrow it down would you blame individuals in this regard? Judges? Prosecutors? etc.?

Brown: Unfortunately you can't narrow it down. It's imbedded in society as a whole. Just from my experience in Walpole it doesn't pertain to one particular color. Blacks ... the Puerto Rican community is having problems ... also it hits whites too. Not only that, but some of the problems we have with calling it racism is that income status has a unique bearing on what your sentence is. A lot of times it doesn't matter what the color of a defendant is. Sometimes money talks. There's many examples that come to mind that I could spray out and people wouldn't believe it. But the fact is it's true.

COLLEGIAN: The way white-collar criminals are treated and the way working people are treated?

Brown: Right. It's very discriminatory.

COLLEGIAN: How does Earl Brown feel at this moment? What's running through your head these days? Are you bitter? What's your state of mind?

Brown: To some degree you have to feel bitter; some people can be extremely bitter in the situation I'm in. But the only reason I'm not is that I was, it would be hard to communicate with other people. The number of people that wrote letters to me, the number of people that have been corresponding, whether by phone or by letter, I couldn't react in my normal reaction. In fact, I couldn't even do this interview in a peaceful mood without getting angry if I was that way. But basically, you know, I'm trying to finish up my studies ... get into some of the things I was into before. I got some projects I want to get through; research. You can say it's almost like getting back to a normal life, but at the same time you know that at a certain time you're going to be someplace else (editor's note: the House of Corrections) and it's going to be like that every day until your situation is straight.

COLLEGIAN: Do you feel as if you're going to have problems getting work once you graduate, because of this conviction?

Brown: Well, I had one situation last summer where I was trying to get a job, caretaking at the Barn, the University Barn, and I wasn't able to get that job. And I was trying to volunteer my services at the Credit Union and I was waiting to hear from the President on what's going to go down with that. Like volunteering my services. So that has affected my life-style somewhat too. There are certain jobs you can get and certain jobs you may not get.

Also a lot of times when you get a job it depends on the persons who are hiring. Some people are conservative on this issue and some people are liberal. And if you get conservative people ... well you know what your chances are. With liberal people you get more of a chance. Like I say I'm going through this period where I'm trying to volunteer my services at this Credit Union and another future thing is ... I'll be graduating next spring and I was thinking about law-school. I'll be graduating in Economics and then I'm thinking about either law-school or business school.

COLLEGIAN: How do you feel about justice in America?

Brown: Well, political power talks, politics will talk, and money will talk. If you put both of them together you get some kind of ressIts, 'cause it moves people ... and race really won't matter.

But for every Earl Brown and Craeman Gethers that comes to light in the public's eye, there are many people of numerous colors, that do not come to the public's eye. And we never hear about those people. We never see those people. In fact, if people are so worried about what this case is implicating if they wouldn't mind getting into some of these courses. Especially at UMass — criminology — and actually go over to the jail, just take a tour of the place, and if you get to talk to some of the inmates; find out what their ideas are, how they got in jail, and you might find somebody who was not supposed to be in jail. But they copped out because the pressure was too much, they heard all these figures from their lawyers, and you know, when they start talking 7, 8, 9, years and they put in your face, "Well if you take 18 months, or you take 12 months ..." you know, that talks. Suddenly when you don't know what's going on, that talks. Even if people don't live in the Amherst area. Let them go visit the jails, find out how many people aren't supposed to be there. You'd be amazed. And what are you gonna do then?

Women's Center opens tonight

Two new coordinators will officially open the Orchard Hill Women's Center (OHWC) tonight at 8:30.

Though the Center was created for area women within the area, coordinators Tara Dolan and Betsy Cohen said they hope "all University women will come to see what we have to offer."

The Center, which is located in room 112 in Field House, was first opened in the fall of 1972 at the same time the Everywoman's Center in Goodell was begun.

Originally the OHWC consisted of women working as an uppaid core group. The coordinators were not paid until 1974.

There will two films offered by the center this semester; the first will be shown late November. Speakers are scheduled to talk about rape and self-defense, said Dolan.

Child birth and alternatives to current hospital procedures will be the topics of lectures in the future by both Dolan and Betsy Cohen. Also plans are now being instituted to provide for visitors from the Florence Women's Health Center, said Cohen.

The co-ordinators said they feel social events should also be an important aspect of the OHWC's services.

"There is a need for events to bring women together. On some floors where women are not friends already there may be a communication breakdown," said Cohen.

The OHWC will sponsor a potluck supper Nov. 20 which will provide an opportunity for area women to meet one another," said Cohen.

The OHWC plans to incorporate the services of a Peer Sex Education counselor one night a week, said Dolan. Dolan will be available for abortion counseling, she said.

Orchard Hill is home for more than 600 women. The coordinators of the OHWC said they feel these women may be experiencing an overwhelming male attitude, in terms of male to female resident ratios and the minority of female counselors. Cohen said she sees one of her jobs to be a 'facilitator' at meetings between members of co-ed floors as well as inter-counselor talks.

By setting up discussions about sexism within the dormitories, Cohen feels she will help male counselors 'points of view'.

"You don't really see it but sexism is everywhere," said Dolan. Both women said they hope the center will provide understanding for non-sexist views and help stress the importance of friendship between women.

The OHWC used to align themselves with ultra-radical ideals, said Cohen. However, while both co-ordinators said they hold feminist convictions, they do not see the purpose of the OHWC as pushing personal feminist ideals.

A $1200 budget will be distributed by Dolan and Cohen for films, speakers, and informational materials.

When asked the difference between the OHWC and other University women's organizations, Dolan said, "The center is concentrating its efforts on providing a small, serviceable center with loose ties to other women's groups. Keeping the center unaffiliated with other groups will enable women of the area to get to know the faces here and feel at home." The co-ordinators said they plan to expand the center, for specific women's interests ranging from political activity to photography.

The OHWC offers information about the Equal Rights Amendment, feminism, and health care.

A rape counseling seminar at the People's Institute in Northampton will be sponsored by the OHWC during the weekend of Nov. 15-17.

Roland Kirk jams at SUB

By KATHE SANDLER
Black Affairs Editor

Clickety-clak! Clikety-clak! Rahsaan Roland Kirk brought the spirits back. Accompanied by the Vibration Society, the sax and horn master wailed and moaned and drove a packed audience wild at the Student Union Ballroom on Friday.

The recent stroke which paralyzed Rahsaan's right side did not inhibit the genius of his technique. With one working arm he simultaneously blew two horns, racing the scales up and down and moving the crowd to ecstacy.

For nearly three hours Rahsaan performed the works of Lester Young, John Coltrane and other greats, as well as, his own innovations. Joined by vocalist Michael Hill, the two performed the classic, "My One And Only Love" and tunes such as "People Make The World Go Round." Hill displayed such versatility in voice range that he left the audience literally gasping.

The concert peaked even higher when Charles Majid Greenlee on trombone, Vishnu Wood playing bass and alto-saxist Sulaiman Hakim, a UMass student joined Kirk and the Vibration Society, and jammed with sheer energy, force and rhythm as they conjured up the soul of John Coltrane on his song "Impressions."

Throughout the concert Rahsaan delivered messages warning of the destructive disco craze in America, singing, "K.C. and the Sunshine boys say Shake Your Booty". Learn some music and do your duty!"

One begins to understand what Rahsaan meant when he chanted, "Clickety-clak! Clikety-clak! When somebody gonna bring the spirits back?"

Mairin DeBurca, general secretary of Sinn Fein (the Official Irish Republican Movement) will participate in a seminar today on the Irish struggle at 11 a.m. in Campus Center Room 803. The program is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Referendum No. 6

Bottle Bill comes up for vote

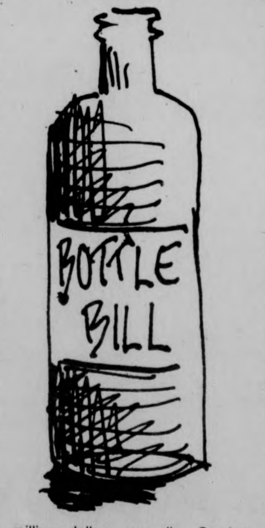
By PAT BEINAR
Collegian Staff

This is the sixth of a nine-part series presenting the pros and cons of each of the nine referenda that will appear on the Massachusetts ballot Nov. 2.

Referendum number six would "require every beverage container sold or offered for sale in the Commonwealth to have a refund value of at least five cents and would prohibit the sale of metal beverage containers with flip-tops. It would not apply to containers for dairy products or natural fruit juices, nor to containers which are biodegradable.

A yes vote is a vote to establish the proposed controls on beer and soft drinks bottles and cans.

A no vote is a vote against establishing the proposed controls on beer and soft drinks bottles and cans.



The Bottle Bill is an act to provide economic incentive for consumers returning beverage bottles and cans.

An additional nickel or dime refundable deposit would be collected from consumers by sellers and refunded to the consumer upon return of the used containers. Returning a case of beer, for example would earn the consumer $1.20 if all the bottles were returned; a six-pack of soda, 30 cents.

With this incentive, more containers will end up in the hands of supermarkets and bottlers, where they will be reused or recycled, rather than litter in the streets and in parks, claim advocates of the bill.

They said they feel that since these deposits are completely refundable, their use will not cost any money; in fact, beverage prices should decline.

In 1972, the U.S. paid $40 million dollars to clean up litter. Picking up litter from Massachusetts roadsides alone cost three-quarters of a million dollars annually. Sparing this expense, while reducing litter, will benefit society, they say.

Opponents of the bill say that we, as consumers, won't want to pay the extra money on our purchases. If we don't bring clean cans and bottles back to the store, we will not get a deposit return. Even if we carry through on our end of the deal, there is no money-back guarantee; we will have to pay for the handling, storing, and processing of empties, too.

If we start buying less because of higher prices, stores will raise their prices. Busnesses will be driven out of the state, and our taxes will be raised up to $100 more per family, say the opponents.

Another advantage is a net gain in jobs, say supporters, that will be created for the depressed economy in Massachusetts. While some jobs will be lost in the can and bottle container industries, several hundred additional jobs will be created in the brewing, wholesaling, and soft drink bottling industries.

Opponents say that as many as 1000 persons in well-paying jobs at the present time will lose their work if the proposal is enacted.

Opponents also see an adverse impact caused by the necessity of converting facilities to produce all-returnable containers. They see store keepers caught in the middle with storage and handling problems.

Supporters see this as a minor cost, when compared to the benefits to be accrued. The growth of non-returnable containers has contributed to the decline in the number of bottling plants in Massachusetts, and has created a negative economic balance.

The Bottle bill will correct the economic balance by encouraging the resurgence of local brewers and bottlers, rather than relying heavily on imports of beverages. This is a much more important factor, the proponents feel.

Supporters see a reduction in roadside litter, reduction in the bulk and weight of residential rubbish incinerated or buried, and a lessening of the rate at which we are expending energy and depleting our limited supply of irreplacable natural resources.

This legislation would leave 80 per cent of our litter problem unresolved, and deals with only a small part of a very large solid waste and recycling program, stress opponents. They say energy savings would be minimal. They feel it would be more efficient to enforce litter laws and fines we already have.

of public and private secondary schools, municipal and state institutions, including prisons and hospitals.

Asked how he perceives himself in the role of Black administrator and associate dean of students, Daniels said, "In terms of race, I am a Black man and absolutely proud of this fact. As associate dean of students, I view myself as an associate dean of all students, regardless of race and sex."

The native of Little Rock, Ark. said UMass is a microcosm of the nation's problems and, in some regards, the world. "Consequently, both racism and sexism are institutionalized forms of oppression on this campus." Daniels said it is difficult to assess the extent of this oppression because it is "not only institutionalized — it is individualized."

He said he does not know how many cases exist on campus where individuals have been denied certain grades, opportunities, jobs, and tenure either because of their race or sex or because of their views about racism or sexism.

"I can only say strong allegations have been made and, in many cases, I have placed credence in the reports and the reporters," he said.

Daniels, an honor graduate of Lincoln University, University of Chicago, and UMass, cited examples of this oppression in confidence, but revealed one case involving a student. He explained how this student brought him a copy of a term paper critical of male societal domination. The student's instructor evaluated the paper as "B" with a lengthy commentary on its negative revelations about males, suggesting the student and not patriotic male mentality had placed an onus on the roles of Martha Washington and Dolly Madison.

There was nothing wrong with the student's mechanics of English and grammar the Dean said. The student had been penalized gradewise because the paper argued that there was no legal difference between slaves and white women since neither had the right to vote during that period of the nation's history Daniels said.

On the nation-wide increase of Afro-American studies in school curricula Daniels responded, "Since the 1960's, the advent of Afro-American studies into the nation's educational curricula has yielded a series of revolutionary discoveries for Black and non-Blacks alike."

Danield said this rediscovery has necessitated a re-evaluation of traditional American social order.

"The process has already yielded a new perspective of Africa as the continent where man first received light, instead of the age-old negative image of it as "The Dark Continent." "Also," Daniels said, "inept historic accounts about the docility of the Negro slaves have been exposed through the introduction of the accounts of many slave revolts, including some of the most successful ones led by Toussaint L'Ouverture, Gabriel Prosser, Denmark Visey and Nat Turner.

Daniels continued saying, "For the first time the new insights into the mentalities of the slaves and the slave masters, such as George Washington, Patrick Henry, and Thomas Jefferson, were compared and contrasted. It is because of this newfound identity and independence in value formation rather than total acculturation that perhaps account for the phenomenon," he said.

Sylvan votes $1641 to Cultural Society

By BRAD GOVERNMAN
Collegian Staff

The Sylvan Area Government, in a meeting last Thursday night, voted 9 to 5 to allocate $1641 for the operating budget of the Sylvan Cultural Society. This figure represents a $1029 cut from the original budget requested by the Cultural Society.

The Sylvan Cultural Society is a Sylvan-based organization aimed at increasing self-awareness among Third World students in the Sylvan area.

The Sylvan government informed representatives of the Cultural Society that monies they requested for a new color t.v., electric type writer, and work study wages could be procured through other university accounts.

Several government members felt that if the original budget request had been granted, the operating budget would have been diminshed to a dangerously low, and possibly inoperable level.

Merle Clemons, spokesperson for the Cultural Society, emphasized that the Cultural Center was in its most important formulative stages and that full, immediate funding was necessary to get a "good cultural center" off the ground.

Clemons cited organizational troubles in the Sylvan government to fuel his argument for immediate funding.

In other business, Sylvan allotted each of the three dorms in the Sylvan Area an additional $1800 over the $200 already given, with a suggestion from Sylvan President, Gail N. Syphers to "make it last".

Steven Ridge, representing a Sylvan Area bible-reading group, asked permission to hold meetings in the Cultural Society's office Thursday nights, from 8 to 10:30. The proposal was raised and passed.

A graduate of such a mini-course would then be available to provide immediate support and information to the rape victim at the OHWC.

An OHWC three-credit course, as yet untitled, will provide 10 women with an opportunity to gain experience working for a woman's center, said Dolan.

The OHWC is open Monday through Thursday, 1 to 5 p.m. and in the evening from 7:30 to 10.

State minimum pay below federal level

BOSTON [AP] — Massachusetts' minimum hourly wage continues to lag behind the federal minimum, and legislators say they are baffled.

In 1975, Congress raised the federal minimum wage from $2.10 to $2.30 per hour. In the past, Massachusetts would automatically have raised its $2.10 figure to keep pace.

But twice in 1976 bills to hike the state minimum wage by 20 cents have been rejected, simply through inaction.

"It's basically because no one really cares," said Sen. Allan R. McKinnon (D-Weymouth), Senate chairman of the legislature's Commerce and Labor Committee. "The people who make the minimum wage just aren't organized."

NEW YORK: Spectators gather outside the Puerto Rico Social Club on Morris Ave. in the Bronx yesterday as fire officials conduct their investigation into the blaze that took 25 lives earlier. News in Brief

Nuke opponents threaten intervention

HAMPTON, N.H. [AP] — Opponents of a proposed nuclear power generating station at nearby Seabrook during the weekend promised to take over the plant site next spring unless construction is halted.

Harvey Wasserman, a spokesman for the Clamshell Alliance, told about 2,000 persons at an Alternative Energy Rally on Saturday that April 30-May 1 have been set for the occupation.

The Clamshell Alliance is a coalition of New England organizations opposed to the generating of electricity by nuclear fission.

Wasserman said the demonstration would be "a direct action of occupation to stop the plant."

During the summer the site of the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire's proposed $2 billion plant twice was the focus of demonstrations which resulted in the arrest of several hundred persons.

On Aug. 22, 179 persons were arrested and charged with criminal trespass.

State colleges pay $200,000 to lawyers

BOSTON [AP] — A legislative committee has launched a review of fees averaging $200,000 a year paid by the state colleges to a Boston law firm.

A substantial portion of the payments to Mahoney, Hawkes and Golding has been for collective bargaining services. John J. Horrigan, financial director for the state colleges board, estimated labor contract negotiations represented $108,000 of last year's fees.

The Post Audit Committee has been looking at the situation but has not yet made a public statement on it nor, reportedly, have findings been presented to the colleges board of trustees.

Sen. Francis X. McCann, D-Cambridge, committee chairman, said he was concerned about trends. He said, however, that he would await staff reports before making any direct comments.

Most newspapers endorsing Pres. Ford

[UPI] — U.S. newspapers are endorsing President Ford over Jimmy Carter by about a three-to-one margin, a spot check by United Press International showed yesterday.

Except for the New York Times and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, both of which endorsed Carter, almost all the best known big city papers that had endorsed a presidential candidate in the previous week chose Ford.

Their reasoning, in general, was that Ford is a known quantity and Carter is not. Rarely, however, were the editorials decidedly enthusiastic about one candidate over the other.

Most of the endorsements have been made since Oct. 15. In the relatively few before that date, Ford held a slight edge over Carter.

Ford won the editorial support yesterday of the New York Daily News, the Chicago Tribune, the Philadelphia Inquirer, the Houston Chronicle, the Miami Herald, the Baltimore Sun, the Baltimore News-American, the Dallas Times Herald and the Boston Herald-American.

U.S.-Vietnam talks announced

WASHINGTON [AP] — Vietnam has accepted a United States proposal aimed at opening discussions on normalizing relations between the two countries, Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said yesterday.

Kissinger conformed the Vietnamese acceptance to reporters after appearing on CBS' "Face the Nation." He gave no further details.

In Paris, Vietnamese officials said they have agreed to meet "for an exchange of views on problems of interest to each side." They did not indicate when or where the meeting would be held.

The United States and Vietnam have been exchanging messages through their respective embassies in Paris for the past six months.

An American official said the United States wants to hold preliminary talks with the Vietnamese "to test the waters" before committing itself to hard bargaining.

Black leaders threaten war escalation

GENEVA [AP] — Two key Rhodesian black leaders vowed yesterday to step up the guerrilla war against Prime Minister Ian Smith's white regime despite talks here intended to bring about black majority rule.

Joshua Nkomo, who heads the leading black nationalist political group inside Rhodesia, and Robert Mugabe, who speaks for the most militant army of Rhodesian guerrillas, also reiterated to journalists in separate arrival statements that U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's peace plan for Rhodesia is unacceptable to them.

Rhodesian Foreign Minister P.K. Van Der Byl later told reporters that in view of the differences and confusion, "it might well be useful" for Kissinger to come to Geneva to clarify things. Smith himself said Saturday that Kissinger's presence at the talks here would be welcomed.

Van Der Byl also insisted that the Kissinger proposals for an interim government leading to black rule within two years are "a package or nothing" and that Rhodesia will not negotiate further on any of the terms.

'People' person

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. [AP] — Doris Callahan knows about liabilities: she is "black, deaf, blind and broke."

The 49-year-old Huntington native is president of the National Association of the Deaf-Blind of America.

"I'm fighting for our people's rights as citizens and human beings, not vegetables," she said over the weekend. "The hearing world should take more time to consider the deaf-blind, instead of letting them lay there like a piece of furniture."

Last year she was elected the first black officer of the association and works full-time writing a new constitution and organizing a convention for the estimated 10,000 to 12,000 blind-deaf persons in the United States. She is not paid for her work.

She says poverty is more of a handicap than deafness or blindness.

Ex-king cured

NEW DELHI [UPI] — The former king of Sikkim, hospitalized in Calcutta since last Tuesday, is well on the way to recovery, his doctors said yesterday.

Palden Thondup Namgyal was found unconscious in his palace in Gangtok, capital of Sikkim, last Tuesday and was flown to a nursing home in Calcutta. He regained consciousness on Friday.

"He is now completely cured," Dr. Amal Bose said in a telephone interview from Calcutta. "He is under strict observation and rapidly returning to normalcy."

Namgyal was deposed last year shortly before India annexed the former kingdom and made it the 22nd Indian state. Doctors said Namgyal went into a coma after taking an overdose of sleeping pills complicated by alcohol he had drunk.

Namgyal became king in 1963, about a year after he was married to New York socialite Hope Cooke. The story-book marriage broke up in 1973 and his wife returned to the United States with their two children.

Patient politics

NEW YORK [AP] — His political instincts as alert as ever, Hubert Humphrey is up and about and making daily handshaking tours at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center.

The Minnesota Democrat was operated on there Oct. 7 for removal of a cancerous bladder. Doctors have recommended that he undergo further drug treatment as a precaution against the disease spreading.

"It's a bit like a political convention," his Washington doctor, Edgar Berman, said, describing the walks during which Humphrey wears a 20-year-old blue and white bathrobe.

The senator knows all the patients on his floor by name as well as those from other floors who come for an introduction. Patients have alerted their families and friends who now time their visits to be on hand for the Senatorial rounds.

The real queen

LONDON [AP] — Queen Victoria was not the "puritanical old she-dragon breathing fire and brimstone" that she often appeared, says her great-great-great-grandson Prince Charles.

In fact, says the 27-year-old heir to the British throne, Victoria had "a glorious sense of humor" and once was convulsed with laughter when a visiting German split his breeches in the drawing room of Balmoral Castle in Scotland.

Charles, noted for his own lively sense of humor, narrates the incident in a review yesterday of a new book, "Queen Victoria was Amused" by Alan Hardy.

Charles says his view is confirmed by accounts he has heard from his relatives who remembered Victoria.

Victoria gained her reputation for being grim after her husband, Prince Albert, died in 1862 when she was only 42.

Milk—heart attacks linked

NEW HAVEN [AP] — Xanthine oxidase in milk leads to heart attacks, says a Bridgeport cardiologist who adds that eliminating that enzyme from milk "would open a new chapter in preventive medicine."

Dr. Kurt A. Oster, chief of cardiology emeritus at Park City Hospital in Bridgeport and the Connecticut State Medical Society's expert on food and drugs for the past 16 years, says that xanthine oxidase in cow's milk leads to early atherosclerosis, or narrowing of the arteries that supply blood and oxygen to the body, and eventual heart attacks.

"Making xanthine oxidase-free milk available to the consumer would open a new chapter in the history of preventive medicine, liberating humanity from disastrous consequences of early atherosclerosis," Oster said.

Oster said it is possible to remove the enzyme from milk without harming its nutritional values.

The enzyme destroys the membrane of the cells of the heart muscles, he said, basing his assertion on studies he did at Fairfield University and Park City Hospital.

"There is a strong connection between the incidence of heart attacks at an early age in humans and the drinking of homogenized and unhomogenized cow's milk containing xanthine oxidase," Oster recently told members of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station in New Haven.

He said homogenizing milk increases the potential for absorbing that enzyme into the blood stream by reducing the size of the fat and milk enzyme particles.

Oster says that diet is more important that inherited predisposition for development of atherosclerosis in youths.

In a 1969 article, he wrote that lowering cholesterol levels in people has, thus far, "proven useless" in preventing heart disease. He wrote that autopsies of young accident and war victims show that "the atherosclerotic process starts in youth, as evidenced by the fatty streaks found in the arteries of these young people."

Women cautioned against aspirin during pregnancy

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Aspirin and similar pain relievers should not be taken by women during the last three months of pregnancy except under a doctor's advice, a Food and Drug Administration panel has tentatively concluded.

The advisory panel recommends that a pregnancy warning be placed on the labels of pain relievers containing aspirin or similar salicylates, an FDA spokesman said yesterday.

He said the committee found that aspirin can prolong labor and lengthen clotting and bleeding times for mother and child.

It also recommended that pain relievers which do not contain aspirin but do contain acetaminophren — the most widely used substitute — should also carry warnings that overdoses can cause liver damage. The spokesman said damage would only occur from very large overdoses.

About 19 billion aspirin tablets are sold every year, and it is probably the nation's most widely used pain reliever.

Liberal ideas voiced at Catholic convention

DETROIT [AP] — Should Roman Catholic priests be allowed to marry and should women be ordained Catholic priests.

A convention here this past weekend, which drew representatices of a cross-section of the nation's more than 45 million Catholics, proposed that the church's U.S. bishops consider the liberal program.

But they took more conservative stances on birth control and abortion, choosing to remain fairly close to the present church position of opposing artificial means of borth control and advocating bans on abortions.

More than 1,300 delegates to the "Call to Action" conference, a Bicentennial project sponsored by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, also favored abolition of regulations stipulating automatic excommunication for divorced Catholics who remarry.

"Never have I seen the kind of excitement that was generated by anything, particularly since Vatican II, as the whole 'Call to Action,'" said Msgr. John J. Egan, co-chairman of the conference. "It symbolizes for me a new breadth of life of the church."

But other church officials noted more traditionalist views may not have been adequately represented at the three-day assembly.

"I think we have to be realistic," said Msgr. Groege Higgins, director of research for the U.S. Catholic Conference. "I was very disappointed in a number of the votes there seemed to be a reluctance to take into account the feelings of Middle America.

"I have to say in all honesty as one who considers himself a liberal, that there was a certain amount of illiberality in faaling to take into account the sensibility and feelings of some people outside."

"We have made some good decisions with which many will disagree," observed John Cardinal Dearden of Detroit.

Ford's forces booted from enemy territory

PLAINS, Ga. [UPI] — About 100 cars filled with President Ford's supporters tried to parade down the main street of Jimmy Carter's home town yesterday but were thwarted by Carter partisans who ripped Ford signs off their cars and put Carter bumper stickers over the Ford-Dole stickers.

The good-natured confrontation occurred in front of Carter's local campaign headquarters on the main street of Plains.

The Carter backers swarmed across the street, blocked traffic and some ripped signs off the cars.

A bale of hay was pulled out of the back of one truck in the Ford parade, broken open and tossed at cars farther down the motorcade.

"We want Carter, we want Carter," the crowd in the street chanted.

One motorist yelled back: "I can't afford him. He's too expensive. You'll be sorry when your taxes go up."

The Ford-Dole parade was headed toward Concord, Ga., eight miles north of Plains, where a rally supporting the President was planned.

ON NOVEMBER 2, THERE'LL BE A MAJOR ECONOMICS TEST.

If the Bottle Bill passes, beer and mixer prices will go up. Way up.

If you don't believe us, ask somebody who goes to school in Vermont.

They'll tell you that under their similar law, beer went up $1.80 a case.

Some of that is a deposit they get back — provided no one breaks a bottle, mashes a can, or loses either one.

But a full 60¢ of that $1.80 is a non-returnable handling charge.

Look, if the Bottle Bill were a recycling measure, if it even encouraged recycling, the higher costs might not be hard to take.

But it doesn't.

If you really study the Bottle Bill, you'll never let it pass.

Question: Would you vote for a Bottle Bill when a similar law in Vermont forced the cost of beer up $1.80 a case?

Yes ☐ No ☐

The selling of Cleaver

By JOEL WEISSMAN

Eldridge Cleaver will be speaking at UMass on October 27. It's interesting that Eldridge, once one of the "most wanted" members of the Black Panther Party is now allowed to tour the country speaking while awaiting trial. It's funny that George Jackson, H. Rap Brown, or Ruchell Magee are or weren't allowed by the courts to go running around the country.

The flamboyant Black Panther Party Minister of Information, once identified by millions with revolution and the struggle of the oppressed Black masses for liberation, now sings the praises of a strong U.S. military and proclaims that America is a better place for Blacks now that Nixon is gone. He denounces socialism and at every point lauds the system that murdered dozens of members of the organization of which he was once a leader.

The only reason that Cleaver has any notoriety and can tour the country speaking, is that he associated himself with the mighty wave of Black rebellion against capitalist exploitation and degradation that swept across the U.S. in the 50's and 60's.

In the 1950's, in the South, masses of Black workers, sharecroppers, and students stood up to the Jim Crow segregation laws. These struggles gained wide support and leaders came forward in these battles. Some moved the struggle ahead. Some took the anger, hopes, and desires of Black people and promoted dead-end answers: supporting "Black capitalism" against "White capitalism."

As the momentum of this movement carried on some of the outrage and anger spilled over into violent rebellions in the overcrowded ghettos of Harlem, Detroit, Watts and many other cities. These uprisings were met with the full repressive force of the police, National Guard, and regular army of the state; hundreds of Black people were murdered and thousands wounded.

The urban rebellions of the mid-sixties focused particular attention on the violence and terrorism of the police that the ruling class used to keep the masses down. The Black Panther Party, founded in 1966, won wide support. It expressed the hatred of Black people for the terrorism of the police, and it dared to boldly meet police terror with resistance.

Armed Black Panther patrols followed the police through the Oakland, C. ghetto insuring Blacks of their safety. When the California legislature moved to push through new gun control legislation, 75 armed members of the Panthers appeared on the state capitol informing the legislators that Black people would not become sitting ducks for the police.

The Panthers were much more than a symbol of armed resistance to police repression. The Panthers stated openly that the only way to achieve the goals of the Black liberation struggle was by the destruction of the imperialist system through revolution. When some Black leaders were preaching that Whites were the enemy, or that "Black unity" or Pan Africanism could liberate Black people, the Panthers denounced this trend and called for the unity of all oppressed people.

In all of this the Black Panther Party went further than any previous force in the Black liberation struggle of the 60's, aiming the struggle against the rich and voicing the aspirations of the masses for change.

The Panthers, however, had some very fundamental weaknesses. The Panthers advanced the understanding of the masses as to the nature of their oppressors, but they lacked a class view of the nature of the enemy, and in reality often defined the target of the revolution as the "racist, fascist, demagogic, politicians" rather than the monopoly capitalist class.

In the latter years one of the great faults of the Panthers was Eldridge Cleaver. He capitalized on the political weaknesses of the Panthers to develop his own career. While cloaking himself in Marxism-Leninism he denounced Marx and Lenin as "racists concerned only with the problems of Europeans". He slandered the working class claiming that "the George Meanys, Walter Reuthers, and A. Phillip Randolphs ... accurately embody the aspirations of the working class".

At exactly the time when the working class struggle was once again on the rise, with the strike waves, wildcats, and the beginning forms of worker organizations in the late 60's, Cleaver's position prevented the Panthers from linking up with these struggles and learning from them.

After splitting from the panthers Cleaver issued a call for urban guerilla warfare in which a handful of revolutionaries would bring down the imperialist system all by themselves through acts of terrorism and sabotage. While Cleaver was safe in Algiers, living off his book royalties, dozens of young blacks, who wanted to end oppression and could have made real contributions to the struggle were slaughtered or jailed as a result of trying to carry out Cleaver's incorrect view.

We don't think that it's any accident that Eldridge Cleaver can go around the country so freely spreading "his message". Cleaver was known as a revolutionary who fought hard against the system. He was a person that had to flee the U.S. to escape certain jailing for an attack by the police on the Panthers. Eldridge has been around the world and seen "revolution" in practice.

Now he comes home to say that America is number one. And now that Nixon is no longer with us our problems are over so why don't you buy a pair of Cleaver "hot pants" (that he's trying to market). In a time when there is growing dissatisfaction with the way we have to live our lives under this system, Eldridge Cleaver's message, and the message of the rulers who so freely allow him to scamper around, is clear. The system's got problems but it's the best there is, I know I've been around, so stay cool.

Well Eldridge you aren't a revolutionary spokesman. You've sold yourself to the ruling class.

We've got one thing to say. We don't buy your story and we aren't going to buy your hot pants. Cleaver doesn't speak in the interests of Black people or the vast majority of people in this country. Cleaver speaks for the people that are letting him run around and the people who are going to market his hotpants, the rich. When Eldridge Cleaver comes to UMass maybe people will make his pants so hot that he'll never come around again.

Tenant meeting tonight

To the Editor:

In the last few months there has been much written about area tenant unions and their success. Already long awaited repairs have been made at Colonial Village and legal action is still pending against the management as a direct result of that union. In Northampton, tenants have begun to realize the power they have always had but were never capable of exercising because of their seeming impotence when it came to dealing with insensitive landlords. They have found power in unity, in that it is easy to evict one tenant as a 'problem', but a union of tenants could have far reaching affects as a 'problem'.

This past Wednesday a meeting of a few interested tenants of Brittany Manor, and a founding member of the Colonial Village Tenants Union, was held where some suggestions were discussed as to how to organize a unionizing effort. Plans were made for a larger meeting on October 25, Monday night at 7:30, at 165-B for anyone interested in helping with things like canvassing, formulating a survey, or just to make suggestions and talk about problems.

At Brittany Manor there are many issues that tenants have no say over which greatly affect them, such as the lack of security measures, the inadequate maintenance service, the inevitability of rent hikes, and lengthened lease policy. We feel it is a tenants right to have input and power in decisions made affecting his-her home.

For more information on tonight's meeting call Jim Picardi at 256-0360 or Steve Latter at 253-3888.

Heavy-handed four-wheelers

To the Editor:

Recently I was involved in a dangerous bicycling accident which I understand from fellow bikers is not an uncommon occurrence.

I was riding at a steady speed of 20-30 m.p.h. south on North Pleasant Street in front of Pufton Village. A young woman, driving a blue 4-door sedan, passed me from behind and turned right into Pufton Village directly in front of me. Not having time to stop, I smashed into her car — I went down on the pavement in one direction while my bicycle took a brutal bounce or two in another direction. I was not very much hurt, but my bike is all bent up and needs a new rear wheel. That hurts me as much as any injury.

The woman got out of her car while a passer-by helped me up and gathered my bicycle. The driver did not apologize or offer any help and I was too dazed to think about getting her name or asking her to use more caution in the future. She soon left the scene.

Too many drivers are unaware of the speed at which bicycles travel. Bikers need the same signals, precaution, and courtesy that other car drivers need. Of course, bikers can cause accidents too, but I think we tend to be victims of accidents like mine more often because we are overlooked by drivers.

Thank you for printing this letter. I hope it alerts some heavy-handed, 4-wheeled drivers.

Escaping 'Pastime Paradise'

To the Editor:

I thought Bill Sundstrom's article, "Thinking About Thinking," [Oct. 18] was quite interesting. It highlighted among the most compelling aspects of our society; an attitude against deep-vested, comprehending thought being caused by our ego-centric, pleasure seeking pursuits. A pleasure for me, pleasure for the moment to sooth and smooth on — Mr. Sundstrom feared that in history intolerance for seeking and acting upon the truth forecasts the fall of societies. Maybe he is right. It happened to the French king, it happened to the Czar, it happened to the American efforts in South Vietnam, it happened to Adam and Eve...

"The guys in the raw mill are getting higher than a kite on our last grinding-aid additive, Jerry."

Because I found this article so vital to our society, I found Dave Needle's response particularly disturbing to my uncommon sense of accord with a Collegian editorial. Mr. Needle failed to realize that today's anti-intellectualism is centered on the individual. Individual pursuit of pleasure, of power, of prosperity, of consciousness [of glory, of security, etc.]. With everyone "in it for yourself" the game of life is ruled from above; when the intellectuals want to re-evaluate the rules, it is seen as holding up the process. Anti-intellectual feelings always seem to arise when people are most threatened by intellectual causes. Dave Needle is a case in point.

You are, Mr. Needle, anti-intellectualism in its most prostituted form; one who exhorts the need to "re-evaluate the goals of modern society" while being totally complacen. about any active effort towards this end. Your altruism is, at best, innocence. You rationalize "what we do and value" simply, as the truth. Are you on such a high plane, Mr. Needle, that you realize what you do and know what you value without thinking about it?

In criticizing our popular culture we must not lose sight of its potential values. We must realize that popular culture [media, art, music, etc.] helps us to "think and create" for it is essentially a reflection of ourselves. To communicate is to express yourself, yet it is also a matter of having received the message. It is the duty of the intellectual to interpret the message and utilize its meaning for a purposeful end. If we had been listening, we would know what Stevie's already told us: "We've been spending too much of our lives in a Pastime Paradise."

Bringing the spirit back

I witnessed a miracle Friday night. A blind Black man, disabled by a serious stroke only last year, stood before a packed SUB audience with a tenor saxophone hanging from his neck. By the end of the evening he would have an at first fairly unenthusiastic crowd standing, screaming, singing, dancing, and laughing to one of the most incredible performances ever given at UMass, or anywhere.

Rahsaan Roland-Kirk provided the predominantly white audience with a cultural experience they are unlikely to forget. Rahsaan is a poet, a singer, and an instrumentalist, but most of all he is a creator of Black music, a historian who is as in tune with his roots as he is with his contemporaries. He paid tribute to his predecessor Lester Young, pokes fun at "K.C. and the Sunshine Boys," wailed out the chorus to "Hey Jude". He entranced the members of the audience and supplied them with an education they could never receive in a lecture hall.

So much was going down Friday night that I hesitate to concentrate on just one aspect of the performance, but it seems an important and appropriate one. Music, and all art in general, is a form of personal or small group expression. And whenever personal expression takes place, it must to some extent be political.

Now by political I do not mean that through Rahsaan's music one ascertained a support for Jimmy Carter, nor do I suggest that the band supported some particular form of government by a subtle musical symbolism. Indeed, Rahsaan's music may well be more political than that, for he is dealing with people, with culture, and with history in an effective and accessible way. His sax speaks the voice of Black America — the unity, the oppression, the confrontation. His music is history, and history is political.

"Jazz" avant-gardist Anthony Braxton once suggested that his own music was more political than Bob Dylan's, despite the fact that Dylan sins of Hurricane Carter in so many words.

People like Braxton and Kirk need no words to convey their message — it is deeply embedded in their music, and they rely on the audience to feel it.

In Afro-American music is a marvelous resolution to the problem of how people can retain their individuality within a group. Improvisation is enhanced, not restricted, by the presence of the other musicians. Cannot our society strive for the same harmony?

More than anything else, Rahsaan's music served to raise the consciousness of those listening. It is difficult to imagine that anyone could come away from the concert not feeling just a little bit different from when she or he arrived — aside from being stoned. The experience was powerful and universally human.

Music that can make people feel and think must be a potent medium for social change. Musicians are not unaware of this. Some, like Holly Near, utilize their power fairly blatantly while others, like Rahsaan, have faith that people will listen and understand, sans words.

Of course, Kirk creates his music for any number of reasons, the political being just one factor. But it is a shame that so relatively little music today, especially the most popular, has any significant political or historical content. Rahsaan proved Friday night that music with real meaning can still really cook. In his own words;

"Clickety clack, clickety clack won't someone please bring the spirit back?"

He answered his own question to everyone's satisfaction.

Ban those damned guns

By DAVID SIMONS

As a registered voter, it seems I am part of a minority that is in favor of the handgun bill. I am bewildered. I find people in fear of a loss of rights, rather than possible loss of life. They feel that with a gun in their closets, or beneath their matresses, they are safe and secure. Yet they remain ignorant to the dangers involved, whether it be through accident, or even having the weapon end up in the hands of the irresponsible.

For many years I have borne a distant fear that a member of my family, a friend or other persons I know may someday receive injury through the hands of a reckless gun wielder. The man at the Patriots game yelling "just let me have that gun" is among the more recent living proofs that such people do exist. I myself have encountered such people; a friend of mine lost his life through one of them.

Much of the gun legislation I have heard, seen, or read about is against gun control. This anti-legislation is provided for by the money holders, the loud-mouths, those persons whom you hear from anytime something good is needed to be passed; the same Mother, God, Home and Apple Pie Americans who would probably typify me as a yellow-bellied long-hair after reading this article. To them, guns are and have long been part of the American way, and they'll be damned to give up their heritage for a little less bloodshed.

The hunters, of course, will vote vehemently against the bill, few of whom will actually need their slaughtered deer or moose for survival, few of whom will give any thought as to how their head would look above a fireplace. The gun industry is also being supported by some very fine people, such as Lestor Maddox, who now adds the advocating of anti-gun control to his glamorous record of chasing Blacks with ax handles, anti-busing and anti-Communists. This is the kind of people we have to defeat.

At this moment, the supporters of question five, and also question six, are at the mercy of Big Business. People versus industry is a virtually impossible battle to win. Owners of gun firms and gun supplies are interested in money, not lives.

This unfeeling capitalist way of thinking seems to dominate so much of the American lifestyle these days; perhaps this time it could help to destroy us. To the wealthy, the profit is more important than life; to the "guns for sport" man, his selfishness for game wins out over regard for the safety of his own family and neighbors. And so it goes on.

I just urge those who are undecided to ignore what you hear on television or radio — money should not buy your own indecision. I am scared each day to read about another act of violence which I know could occur anywhere, to anyone. Let this vote rest in the hands of the people who care about the welfare of others — ban those damned guns!

Perils of the perfidious towing cartel

To the Editor:

Events last week have caused me to reflect on the purpose, the primary mission, of the Campus Police. What suddenly sparked my concern was an officer's cavalier attitude toward the forced entry into locked cars by a tow truck operator. The officer said, "He's only preparing the car for towing." It looked more to me like a B&E in the nighttime.

I watched last Wednesday night as the vultures from Amherst Towing descended during evening classes upon cars parked against the curb along the Fine Arts piazza. There was no reason for the vehicle to be moved prior to the end of class. There was no traffic. The cars wouldn't have impeded it if there were. In the darkness the autos detracted no more from the aesthetics of the red boiler plate than did the dozen oil drum ad hoc waste cans set about the reflecting pools.

It was disturbing to learn that classmates' cars, each one previously graced with a $10.00 ticket, were also being towed to the privately owned impound lot. Double jeopardy!

A contractor in the construction business feels fortunate if he can charge his machines out at the rate of $.50 per hour times each $1,000.00 of replacement cost. If someone charges $.50-hr. for a $100,000.00 machine he's doing O.K. If the towing fee is to be exorbitant, then it should be the University at least, which benefits.

How many cars can one shuttle up to North Amherst using a $12,000.00 wrecker? Certainly no fewer than three per hour. At $18.00 per car [cash — no checks] one can gross in excess of $.50-hr. from the relatively small investment of $12,000.00.

With another single parent, I stood next to a V.W., which was still holding up admirably against a two truck driver's best efforts to jimmy open one of its doors, and watched as intimidated students drove their cars off in a hurry. My companion's own car was gone. Though she said nothing, It was obvious what kind of travail lay behind her. She hadn't the required cash. How would she get home? It was fourteen miles. The babysitter. How would she get to the bank in the morning? She'd be lucky to be at work by noon.

As we watched the policeman presiding over the gentleman still jamming utensils into cracks in the V.W.'s armor, I recalled an incident that took place in Connecticut. Some police officers had a man cold on a weapons charge; the gun had been in plain view on the seat of his car. However, the cops had opened the truck [with a key] without the suspect's permission. The judge threw the whole case out.

The outcome of that arrest had been unrealistic. What was happening before us that night at UMass seemed unreal, scary. If an ordinary citizen, with no White House connections and tacit University approval, can force his way into the locked auto of another equally law abiding citizen then why have Campus Police at all?

For weeks objects legally classed as deadly have rained out of the upper stories of Southwest. Serious property damage was caused. Loss of life could have resulted. When finally a suspect was caught he was out of jail the same day. But let someone upon whom a whole family depends park in front of a sign on campus and you had better stand back. All the State's resources will be activated to deprive her, without due process, of $28,000 plus car fare, plus part of a day's pay. And unfortunately, as in the instance mentioned above, a woman's children and young sitter will again be denied the security of her prompt arrival home from what would ordinarily have been a productive educational experience.

The system, as it functions now, allows individuals accused of serious crimes a leisurely pace at which to prepare a defense. Against the perfidious campus towing cartel the student has no defense.

Judicial criticisms inaccurate

To the Editor:

Paul J. Wolf's column, "An Unjust Judicial System," which appeared last Thursday is a useful reminder to all of us that we should be appropriately careful that we are honest and accurate and fair in the phrasing of any charge against another person, and that our procedures always respect an individual's rights. Unfortunately, two statements included in paragraph three in quotes, attributed to a letter signed by the Dean of Students, are total fabrications. They were neither written in this office nor signed by me.

The description of the appeals process and the Dean of Students supposed involvement in that process described in paragraph five is equally inaccurate. I cannot fault Mr. Wolf's rhetorical question in paragraph six but I would certainly suggest that most of the substance of paragraph seven, again, is simply untrue.

In spite of the mismash in the preceding column, I believe that Mr. Wolf does call attention in his concluding paragraph to a real need. It has been some time since the Code of Student Conduct and the Judicial Process has been tested in terms of the real needs of the community. I seriously believe that a student-staff review group should be assembled at an early date to undertake such a task.

Women's weekends by Project Self

This fall, Everywoman's Center at UMass will once again be sponsoring Weekends for Women through Project Self — a workshop series for, by, and about women.

In the Introduction to Assertiveness workshop, women will learn what "assertive" behavior actually is, and why it is a much more effective means of communication than either non-assertive or aggressive behaviors. In the process, one will come to understand and know the working definitions of all three types of behaviors and discuss the implications of adapting an assertive behavioral framework. The workshop will be held the weekend of Nov. 6 and 7. Cost: $15.

Basic Canoeing will be held over a three-day period (Friday, Oct. 29) to 5 p.m. and Oct. 30-31). Women will learn the basic skills of canoe paddling, water safety, solo and tandem paddling, and how to read water. Although enjoyment of the sport is the main emphasis of this workshop, the canoeist should be able to handle the boat efficiently and effectively by the end of the weekend. The overnight session (Oct. 30-31) will be a camping weekend down the Connecticut River from Bellows Falls to Greenfield. Sorry, this workshop is for swimmers only! Cost:$25.

For women who have recently begun thinking of themselves as lesbians, a day for Coming Out is a workshop that will explore feelings about sexuality, life choices, needs and fears. It will be a day of "coming out" to oneself to build confidence for coming out to others. The day will be Nov. 13 from 9 to 5 p.m. Cost: $10.

For more information and a registration form, drop by Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell, UMass, or call 545-0883 during center hours: Mon., Tues., Wed., Fri. from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Wed. 6 to 8 p.m., Thurs. 1 to 4 p.m. Registration ends approximately four days prior to the start of each workshop.

Child care series studies health topics

In response to the overwhelming interest, Dr. James Abel, staff pediatrician with the University Health Services at UMass, will conduct a series of open forum workshops for those interested in basic health and nutrition issues of young children.

These workshops are sponsored jointly by the Infant-Toddler PlayGroup and Health Education, and are open to University families, expectant parents, and educators who work (or are planning to work) with young children. Wednesday at 7:30 p.m., Abel will address the group on the "Advantages of Breastfeeding" from the emotional aspects for both mother and child, maternal nutrition and physiology, natural immunizations, and into the introduction of foods to supplement the child's growing needs. He will discuss feeding schedules, with an emphasis on Hypoallergenic diets for young children. This program will be held in Room 17, at Skinner Hall.

The second workshop, which covers an expansion of "Infant Nutrition and Allergies" and "Childrens' Health" will be held Saturday, Oct. 30 from 1 to 5 p.m. in the Auditorium at Skinner Hall. He will discuss his basic approach to health, including proper nutrition, exercise, environmental controls, and stress reduction, and extend this topic into an introduction of problems associated with "HyperActivity" and a discussion of "Behavior Problems in School."

The third and final workshop, expanding on the issues of "Behavior Problems in School," "HyperActivity" and "Learning Disabilities" as they relate to basic healthy development, will be held Saturday, Nov. 6 from 3 to 5 p.m. also in the auditorium at Skinner Hall. As always, these sessions will be conducted on an open forum basis, with questions and answers generated throughout the workshop, participant discussion and a generally relaxed atmosphere.

We are currently negotiating child care, which would be available for the two Saturday programs, to facilitate the attendance of those parents unable to make alternative arrangements. If this service would be of need to anyone; please contact Alex or Susan Mackey at 665-2885, with the program(s) one would be interested in attending, the age(s) and name(s) of children, and telephone number. There will be a 50c per child fee to cover the cost of snack and supplies used during the afternoon. We can only offer this care on a first-come, first-served basis; so please contact us early.

A more complete schedule of this series of programs, as well as others planned during the remaining of the semester, is available by calling the same telephone number or by calling 545-2403. These schedules are also available at the University Health Services, and will be hand distributed to all residents in Married Students Housing.

Foundation awards for science grads

The National Research Council has again been called upon to advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the foundation's program of Graduate Fellowships. Panels of eminent scientists appointed by the National Research Council will evaluate qualifications of applicants. Final selection will be made by the foundation, with awards to be announced on March 15, 1977.

Initial NSF Graduate Fellowship awards are intended for students at or near the beginning of their graduate study. In general, therefore, those eligible to apply will be college seniors or first-year graduate students this Fall.

These fellowships will be awarded for study or work leading to master's or doctoral degrees in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Awards will not be made in clinical, education, or business fields, in history or social work, for work leading to medical, dental, law, or public health degrees, or for study in joint science-professional degree programs. Applicants must be citizens of the United States, and will be judged solely on the basis of ability. The annual stipend for Graduate Fellows will be $3,900 for a 12-month tenure with no dependency allowances.

Applicants will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test aptitude and scientific achievement. The examinations, administered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given Dec. 11 at designated centers throughout the United States and in certain foreign countries.

The deadline date for the submission of applications for NSF Graduate Fellowships is Dec. 1. Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20418.

Oxford Seminar accepting inquiries

The 12th consecutive year of the Oxford Summer Seminar, sponsored by the English Department, is ready to accept inquiries for 1977. There are 13 courses, all taught by Oxford tutors, and described in their own words in a brochure just published and available in room 378 (or 170) Bartlett Hall. The telephone is 545-2328.

The seminar lives at Trinity College, Oxford, for six weeks during the summer, but students may travel before the study period opens (two weeks) and a few days after. London is one hour away by rail.

Courses are Honors courses, each designed to give students access to material and points of view not available in the USA, at least not easily. Manuscripts, appropriate trips, bookstores, libraries; see how Oxford does it.

Slides and photos of living conditions (and applications) may be picked up in Bartlett 378 every afternoon except Wednesday. Professors. Ernest Hofer or Vincent DiMarco can provide additional information. As enrollment is limited and course preferences according to first-come-first-served, early application is wise. Only a maximum of 12 in a course may be accepted.

TM show premieres on WMUA radio

WMUA Public Affairs will present a new program tonight at 5:45 called "The T.M. Show". It is a 15-minute program that deals with the Transcendental Meditation (T.M.) technique, its benefits, and the impressions it has made on students and working people who practice T.M.

The show will be hosted by members of the Students International Meditation Society in Amherst, and will offer an interesting combination of music and conversation.

WMUA is 91.1 FM.

Rent control issue airs on radio series

Immediately following tonight's 10:00 news, WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will air a discussion on the efforts of a group of Amherst tenants to institute rent and eviction control in the town. Members of the Amherst Tenants Association are currently petitioning to get the rent control issue placed on the town ballot for a special referendum after the Nov. election.

Tonight's program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Another segment of tonight's live, open forum will be concerned with the work of Northern Educational Services (N.E.S.) a UMass group which is recruiting tutors to help children in low-income neighborhoods.

Interested listeners are invited to call in questions during tonight's live broadcast.

Programs to examine referendum questions

WMUA's "Off The Hook" will be presenting three Public Affairs-News programs this week at 6:20 p.m., concerned with some of the referenda questions on the Nov. 2 ballot.

Referendum question No. 7 will be discussed today. This is the question concerning uniform electric rates. Arguing against the referendum will be Leon Charkoudian from the Council For Employment. Hope Atterbury of Mass. Fair Share will be supporting the issue.

On Wednesday, Question No. 4, concerning the Mass. Power Authority will be aired. John Hickey from Western Mass. Electric Co. will be arguing against the question, and Lloyd Thayer, from the Consumers for Lower Electric Rates, will defend the referendum.

Referendum No. 5, gun control, will be aired Thursday, Mike Albano, from a group calling themselves People vs. Handguns, will be supporting the ballot question, while Fred Synder from the Committee To Stop Question No. 5 will oppose it.

A comprehensive summary of all the issues, including referenda No. 3, No. 8, and No. 9 will be aired Monday, Nov. 1, election eve. These special programs are being produced through the co-operation of the Public Affairs-News Departments of WMUA-FM, and through the special efforts of Bill Files and Bob Oakes.

Mt. Holyoke—Smith in classics' lectures

Two lectures one at Smith College today and one at Mount Holyoke College tomorrow — will consider "Classical Humanities in the American Republic."

Louis Cohn-Haft, professor of history at Smith College, and George Kennedy, Paddison Professor of Classics at the University of North Carolina, will give a two-lecture Bicentennial classics program.

Kennedy's lecture, "The Classic Case for the Constitution," will be tonight at 8:00 in Wright Hall auditorium at Smith College. Cohn-Haft will discuss "Classical Influences on the Making of the American Constitution" at 8:00 p.m. tomorrow in Gamble Auditorium at Mount Holyoke.

The lectures are presented by the classics departments of Smith and Mount Holyoke, and are co-sponsored by the American Philological Association's Committee on Classical Humanities in the American Republic with the assistance of funds from the National Endowment for the Humanities. Both lectures are free to the public.

Rabbi-author visits two area campuses

The B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation of UMass and Amherst College are sponsoring two area appearances of Lawrence Kushner, a rabbi noted as an initiator of creative Jewish ideas. Kushner considers himself to be a "post-denominational" traditional Jew, an eclectic drawing frequently on Hasidism as well as contemporary models of interpersonal encounter and psychoanalysis. His interest in the Kabbalah has resulted in the publication of his work "The Book of Letters: A Kabbalistic Alphabet" by Harper and Row.

At his talk at Amherst College in Chapin Lounge at 4 p.m. today, Kushner will deal with the subject "The New American Kabbalah". At 8 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union at UMass Kushner will create an event called "God Games" — an experience which is aimed at helping people recover the narrative-play dimension of religious existence in their lives. All interested people are invited.

Symposium address on ballot question

A symposium on Question 7, the uniform electric rate initiative on the Nov. 2 ballot, will be held tonight at 7:15 in the Campus Center Auditorium at Umass.

Principal speakers will be Joseph Mahoney, executive editor of the Mass. Daily Collegian, representing Massachusetts Fair Share, and Leon Charkoudian, executive director of the Council on Employment and Economic Energy Use of Boston.

There will also be a panel. The event is open to the public and is sponsored by the School of Business Administration. David McGinley is coordinator.

Chekhov 'played' by theater dept.

The Department of Theater will present a Directors Studio Project, "A Jubilee," a joke in one act by Anton Chekhov, today and tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. in room 204 in the Fine Arts Center. There will be no admission charge.

Under the direction of Robert Verini, the cast includes: Jim O'Connell, Stephen Shea, Kathie Baldwin, Susan Danizio, Robert Tupper, David Cole and Jon Shailor.

Bluebird forecast

By JACOB LOVE

A total solar eclipse occurred Saturday morning at 1:23 a.m. It was physically visible in and around the Indian Ocean and emotionally visible in the Pioneer Valley as old friends argued, drunks got belligerent, and machines became unruly. The eclipse occurred as the Moon passed between Earth and Sun, blocking out solar radiation for several minutes. The Moon symbolizes our emotional-habitual self, filled with hopes, aspirations, desires and fears. The Sun is our spiritual center, the source of our heart's inspiration if we listen. The eclipse transpired in the last degree of Libra (harmony & partnerships) and the first degree of Scorpio (death & rebirth). So if we didn't have our solar and lunar selves harmonized, we may have emotionally rebelled as the Sun was blocked out of the picture. This tension was aggravated by several subsequent lunar connections Saturday but mellowed out slowly up thru this morning. As it was the last act of the Libra season, unevolving partnerships may have bit the dust and inner disharmonies may have come unglued. But for those who've worked thru all the last month's partnership and harmony challenges with honest intent, the eclipse was just a magnificent New Moon of Inspired Re-awakening.

The Sun entered into Scorpio at 2:59 a.m. Saturday and, as this Scorpio season unfolds, we'll find ample opportunity for magical new growth or, if we avoid improvements, we'll find stagnation. As the ramifications of this eclipse unravel, we may find ourselves desiring more personal rewards. We may also feel insecurely rooted, with a desire to find firm foundations. (Unless of course we have built a secure relationship over the last month.) Overall, we may want more for our self and feel that our current relationships are not giving all we want — and perhaps need. If we try not to get selfish and keep an eye towards honest growth, it'll all work out ok.

The Moon went into Sagittarius at 12:50 a.m. and for several days will seek the target of wisdom in this sign of The Archer. At 4:06 a.m. she was exactly 30 degrees ahead of the Sun and by 6 a.m. tomorrow she'll be 45 degrees ahead. This first angle brings minor harmony as we emotionally take on the identity of the Sun's sign and the second angle brings headaches if we aren't bringing solar purpose to solid manifestation.

Harmony will become increasingly available this morning towards 10:22 as the Moon lines-up with Venus, goddess of love.

Minor flashes of inspiration will be flowing around around 12:21 p.m. and if they're not utilized minor mental disgruntlements may crop out around 3:50 p.m. Smiles may not come easy around 5:09. The period between 7;30 p.m. and midnight looks fairly milk, including a chance to renew our moonthly compassion cycle at 8:35 p.m., renew our selves around 8:52, and harmonize with our limitations thru 2:35 a.m.

★ UConn booters control play

The Minutemen desperately tried to come back, but the steady, controlled UConn play resulted in UMass frustration, as the final goal indicates. Minuteman fullback Pat Veale was ejected from the game after striking a UConn player within the penalty area. Jim Evans took the penalty shot. Hanks made an outstanding diving save, but he had moved before the shot. Tom Nevers placed the subsequent penalty shot in the lower left corner of the net for the final 3-0 margin.

UConn coach Morrone spoke of the game as a routine victory. "We've been a second half team all year," he said. "As long as we can control the ball in the first half, we work well in the second half to score the big goals. We did that today."

"Control" is the key word. The entire Huskie team passes very well, concentrating on keeping the ball down. Their defense plays disciplined position soccer, moving the ball up the field with short, accurate passes. Their forwards, especially Evans, Nevers and Medrick Innocent, play as if they've been working together for years. It's no wonder that Russ Kidd "couldn't be disappointed, except in the final score.

BOOTER BANTER: The statistics reflect the game's closeness. UMass had 22 shots on goal while UConn had 18. Both team's goalies had five saves and UConn had five corner kicks to the Minutemen's four. The UMass JV's defeated their UConn counterparts 3-2. UMass next travels to Westfield Wednesday night to face a strong Westfield State squad.

Poloists split weekend action

By ROBERT CORB

The UMass men's waterpolo team traveled to Harvard this weekend to take on league opponents M.I.T. and Yale. On Saturday morning, the poloists defeated a well-disciplined M.I.T. 9-6. For the first time this season UMass had its entire squad playing together and the results were impressive. The poloists have improved every game this season. In this game four people shared in the scoring, with Russ Yarworth leading the way with five.

In the second game UMass lost a heartbreaker to number two ranked Yale, 13-12. The score was tied with 37 seconds left when Yale scored to go ahead 13-12. UMass called timeout, set-up the play, got the ball to the offense, but UMass could not put the ball in the net.

Russ Yarworth (7), and Duncan Lomas (4) again led the scoring. Bill Tharion played another super pair of games this weekend in goal for UMass. Ben Crooker played excellent defense for UMass in both games.

The poloists are now ranked number 3 in Division I in the N.E. league, with a 2-2 record (4.3 overall). With one more league game against winless Dartmouth, (Tues. nite, 9:00, Boyden pool), the UMass men are now tuning up for the N.E. championships Nov. 5, 6, 7, at Brown U., and a possible bid to the Easterns the following weekend at Pittsburgh.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Monday, October 25 — Born today, you are one of those exceptionally tactful people who is able to establish himself in a position of authority and to maintain himself in that position without seeming to those over whom he wields that authority to be in any way bossy, needlessly demanding or unfeeling concerning the responses and reactions of those under him. In short, you either cannot or you refuse to rule with an iron fist. On the other hand, you are able to achieve whatever must be achieved with such a velvet touch that those under you generally clamor for more duties, more responsibilities, more assignments through which to demonstrate their abilities.

You do not make friends with any particular ease. However, once you have established friendly relations with another, you can count on the relationship being both durable and spiritually profitable. Those who know you well recognize the high degree of your loyalty – but they also know that you are not one to stand behind a friend when it compromises your own principles to do so. Because of this, you are usually very careful in your choice of companions; you do not wish to form attachments you must later break.

Generally considered a person of mild temperament, you have nevertheless been known to give vent to anger in a fashion others find quite devastating. Your joys are usually of a high-flown nature, at least insofar as you demonstrate them in others' presence.

Netwomen tie UConn; Ranz sprains ankle

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The women's varsity tennis team tied powerful UConn 4½-4½ Thursday afternoon in a match halted by darkness.

UConn had only five available courts, and daylight was fading when the long singles matches ended. The contest was called with the second and third doubles teams on the court; shortly after a shot by Minutewoman Leslie Howell hit an unseeing opponent in the face.

Darkness wasn't the players' only problem. Leaves which covered the courts made concentration difficult.

Number one singles player Jennifer "Yukon" Ranz won her first set 7-5, was downed 2-5 in the second set, and suffered a sprained ankle when her foot buckled under her as she moved back for an overhead shot. Ranz had to forfeit her match to Margie Skaivan, and is doubtful for tomorrow's Boston College match. In the number two position scrappy Dawn Minaai recorded 7-5 and 6-4 wins over UConn's Marge Davis.

Number three player Carolyn Mooney was defeated by Delly Ozanng, 2-6 and 4-6. Fourth singles player Kathy Sullivan lost her first set 3-6 and was down 0-3 in the second, but she stormed back to take the set 7-6, and rolled on to a 6-4 third set victory over Chris Besier. Martha "Klondike" Awiszus lost her first set 2-6, and was down 2-5 and match point in the second set. She came back to take the second set 6-4, and remained unbeaten on the season by beating Joan Sawyer 7-5 in the deciding third set. Kendra Bowker played in the sixth singles spot and lost to Laurie Filmer.

The number one doubles team of captain Nancy O'Neil and Karen Holt lost a 6-12 pro set to Mary King and Wenda Thielking. Concerning his number one player Coach Rubin said, "Jennifer is determined to play Tuesday against B.C., but her ankle doesn't look very good."

The Minutewomen's record is now 4-3-1. Tomorrow afternoon they travel to Boston for a 3:00 p.m. match against BC.

Grogan leads Pats by Bills

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. [UPI] – Quarterback Steve Grogan threw a nine-yard touchdown pass to Russ Francis and ran 10 yards for another score Sunday to lead the New England Patriots to a 26-22 victory over the Buffalo Bills.

The loss overshadowed a 100-yard game by Bills' premier running back O. J. Simpson, who moved into second place on the All-time National Football League rushing list.

Simpson, who ran 32 and two yards for Bills touchdowns, had 110 yards to give him 8,609, which moved him ahead of Jim Taylor and second only to Jim Brown's 12,312.

The win gave New England a 5-2 record, while the Bills are now 2-5 in the American Conference Eastern Division.

With the Patriots holding a 6-3 lead, Grogan drove New England and hit Francis with the nine-yard scoring pass at 5:22 of the third quarter to give New England a 12-3 lead as the conversion kick failed.

Grogan ran 10 yards for a touchdown at 1:14 of the fourth quarter to put New England in front, 26-16. The score was set up by a 71-yard kickoff return by Jess Phillips, giving the Patriots the ball at the Bills' 18.

But the Bills fought back in the fourth quarter when quarterback Gary Marangi tossed a four-yard scoring pass to Bob Chandler to close the margin to 26-16.

Marangi replaced Joe Ferguson midway through the second quarter when Ferguson suffered a lower back injury on a tackle.

Buffalo had a chance to make it even closer when Merv Krakau recovered a New England fumble at the Patriots' 28, but the Bills were unable to score and a 32-yard field goal attempt by George Jakowenko went wide.

However, with 47 seconds left in the game, Simpson ran in from the two-yard line to close it to 26-22. The touchdown was set up by an interception of a Grogan pass that gave Buffalo the ball at the New England 20.

The Patriots scored their other touchdown on a one-yard run by Sam Cunningham, who gained 118 yards, and the third-quarter score boosted New England's lead to 19-3.

Advantageous Huskies edge pesky Minutemen booters

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

UConn took advantage of a second half wind advantage in erupting for three goals as it handed UMass its third straight soccer defeat 3-0 on Saturday. The game, played on a cold, windy Boyden field, was actually much closer than the final score indicates.

UMass coach Russ Kidd emphasized the fact that the Minutemen were never really out of the game. "I'm not disappointed with the way we played today. I'm only disappointed in the final score. it was not a 3-0 game. Take away their penalty kick goal in the last couple of minutes and you have a tough, close game."

UConn coach Joe Morrone, a definite candidate for ECAC soccer coach of the year, agreed with Kidd's evaluation. "We came up here expecting UMass to play tight, aggressive soccer. We knew that they'd be up for the game. Fortunately, we played with patience and managed to capitalize on our scoring opportunities while UMass didn't."

Russ Kidd made a couple of changes in the MInuteman line-up to shake up the undefeated Huskies. With the return of Ed Niemiec, who has been out with an ankle injury for close to three weeks, the UMass defense was at full strength. Only goalie Mark Hanks, who played with the flu still bothering him, was not completely healthy. Kidd started Bob McChesney, Joel Mascolo and Mark Vasington at the halfback positions. McChesney and Mascolo have both been switched from forward positions. Vasington, a freshman from Storrs, has been the first halfback coming off the bench for most of the season.

Led by he heads-up defense of Niemiec and the quickness of the halfbacks, the Minutemen battled UConn to a scoreless first half. As has been their greatest problem all season, however, the Minutemen were unable to take advantage of several scoring situations. The UMass defenders were poke checking very well, preventing UConn from penetrating deeply into the UMass zone. When the backs passed the ball up to the front line, however, the forwards were unable to break through the consistent UConn defense.

It was easy to see in the first half that UConn has a calm, cool soccer team. They had to fight against the wind as well as UMass, but they responded well, keeping the ball low and always under control. They played good position soccer, preventing the Minutemen from taking the open shot. When UMass did shoot on goal, goalie Bob Ross made the saves look easy.

UMass opened the second half with the wind in its face and a new goalie, Mark Hodgdon, replacing a worn out Mark Hanks. UConn began to execute its plays very well, testing Hodgdon and the Minuteman defense. UMass, on the other hand, was often giving the ball away with long lead passes and wild shots. Finally, UConn's patience paid off. At 9:44 of the half Lou Magno pushed a Jim Evans rebound past the diving Mark Hodgdon.

Later in the half UConn forward Peter Huckins snuck past the UMass defense. Hodgdon came out to meet him and made a superb sliding save, but he was severely shaken-up on the play. Hanks returned to the net, only to be rudely awakened by a UConn goal. After a defensive mix up, UConn was awarded a corner kick. Rich Murray followed the kick with a quick shot past Hanks.

Stickers blank UNH; win third straight tilt

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

It's now three in a row for the UMass stickers as the Minutewomen posted another shutout by defeating UNH 1-0 here on Saturday morning.

As the score suggests, it was a close, tough game that was won on Cheryl Meliones' second period goal and the outstanding defensive play of Kathy Gipps, Gayle Hutchinson and Kelly Salls.

The lone goal was scored by left inner Meliones after the Minutewomen had been controlling play in the Wildcat zone. The Wildcat goalie made one save; the rebound came out into the crowd and was passed to Meliones, who put it into the right-hand corner of the net for her sixth goal in three games.

Ironically, though the winning goal was scored in the second half, the game followed UMass' usual pattern — a strong first half followed by a loss of control during the second.

UMass picked up the play from the start of the game — there were long periods when the Wildcats couldn't get the ball past the 50 yard line and had to settle for midfield play. The Minutewomen were so much in control that the best offense UNH could muster was a brief assault near the end of the half. Although UMass didn't score, it had its chances, with Sue Kibling just missing on a long shot and another shot going over the top of the goal.

The second half opened in reverse fashion, as the Wildcats took the ball into the UMass zone immediately. They were getting good chances, but failed to capitalize on them, fanning twice on shots from close in. On one breakaway, the Wildcats took it all the way downfield, only to have the ball knocked away by a UMass defender.

It could have been another second-half loss for the Minutewomen but for the play of goalie Kathy Gipps and sweeper Gayle Hutchinson. They were the ones, along with Kelly Salls, who preserved the Minutewomen's third consecutive shut out.

After Meliones scored what proved to be the only goal of the game, UNH took over and the Minutewomen never got another good chance to score. The Wildcats took shot after shot at Gipps, but were turned away each time. Salls made one save in the goal, as did Hutchinson, who made a save on her knees during an intense UNH assault. "Gayle's save was the kind of clutch play that we needed to save the game," commented coach Judith Davidson.

The game had a thrilling ending, with Gipps stopping shots down to the final seconds of the game. It was a satisfying win for the stickers, because UNH had just come off a victory over Springfield College, perennially one of the best teams in the nation and responsible for UMass' toughest loss. The Minutewomen will have another shot at Springfield next Saturday.

The Minutewomen will play at home again Tuesday afternoon when they take on Plymouth State.

Boston First blanks anemic UM ruggers

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

An awesome Boston First rugby club annihilated an anemic UMass fifteen 28-0 Sunday afternoon on the playing fields west of Boyden Gymnasium. The ruggers suffered their third successive scoreless setback and fourth consecutive defeat in evening their season record a 4-4-1. It should be noted however that the Minutemen have been playing the toughest teams of its most ambitious schedule ever these past four weeks. Beacon Hill, Boston Firsts, and the Mystic River Rats are commonly regarded to be among the top sides in the entire Northeast.

Alex Ely, who two years ago at this time was lugging the pigskin for North Texas State University, ran over, around and through the befuddled UMass defenders for five scores. Taciturn tactician Robert "Doc" Lawrence was impressed by the elusive exploits of the refugee from Texas and commented, "Ely is an outstanding back — one of the best we've seen — very fast." Fearless fullback Jeff Stefani, a four year starter for the home side, reiterated, "Ely possesses the rare combination of speed, agility, power, nimbleness afoot, and keen football instincts."

In addition to the aforementioned Ely the visitors roster featured a bevy of New England All Stars and three All East Union and United States Eagle National Team performers — hooker Manus O'Donnell, prop Harry Lent and second row man Gary Brakett. Brakett (6'4" 245 lbs.) is captain of the U.S. team.

Despite the sterling quality of the opposition and the lopsided score Lawrence felt the ruggers played well, "We have nothing to be ashamed of — they are a very tough side — it's particularly difficult when they are physically superior and more experienced too — you can't overpower them and you can't outfinesse them either — despite this handicap we got more ball than I thought we would. We made about five mistakes and they capitalized on every one — the mark of a strong team.

Ralph Abel scored the sixth try for Boston as he was hit by Mike McCoy at the three-yard-line and barely stretched his six foot three inch frame over the goal line for the points. "Poor tackling" cited McCoy, who may have broken his nose. both McCoy and meticulous mentor Lawrence mentioned Kelley Atteridge and clownish Henry Brown as standout performers.

The "B" squad was crushed 17-0 in a contest which, "wasn't as close as the score seemingly indicates. They outweighed us by about 45 pounds-per-man and we just didn't get any ball at all. Flyhalf Doug Bayford, Kevin Brennan, Bob Wronski and Brian Coolbaugh all played well however," said a somewhat disconsolate bearded mentor.

Spikers upset Bears; Bunker, Bradley star

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team pulled an upset of major proportions by capturing the UMaine Orono Invitational in Orono, Maine by beating three teams and winning six out of eight games in a marathon three hours worth of competition.

With a 3-9 season record, UMass came into the invitational with little confidence and it showed in its first contest with UMaine-Orono. The Black Bears, considered one of the top teams in New England came out like gangbusters with a 15-1 opening domination.

But as they say "overconfidence killed the bear" as Orono had a complete letdown and proceeded to lose the next two games to UMass 15-10 and 16-14.

UMass coach Dianne Thompson reshuffled her previously lethargic team and put in a new offense of Diane Bunker, Sue Sabia, and Pat McGrath. The threesome clicked together for 15 points and were aided by server Pat Bradley who aced nine points in the first stage of the UMass comeback.

Diane Bunker and Sue Sabia provided heroics for UMass in the deciding game of the best out of three quarterfinal as the two scored the winning points in the match marked by poor officiating and many substitutions.

Playing its third consecutive game within the hour, UMass lost to UMaine Presque-Island in the first game of the semifinals 9-15. But Bunker and Bradley's poise and leadership in the scoring and serving parts of the UMass offense led UMass back in the second game with a 15-9 victory.

Sabia, Bunker, and Bradley continued their dominance as the UMass kept its momentum going with a clinching 15-10 contest in the third and deciding game of the semifinals. Sabia and Bunker put away 12 spikes between them as Bradley continued to shine as team server.

Only taking a half hour for a break, UMass put away the invitational with two match victories over UMaine-Farmington in the finals. Freshwoman Deb Kazuba, the tallest UMass player at 5-9, played her best game of the day with several spikes in the opening victory.

In the 17-15 clinching final game, Shelley Soules, substituting for Dianne Bunker, who previously played every minute of every game, came off the bench and sparked UMass with excellent backcourt play while Diane Mandragouras playing her first varsity game chipped in with several key serves.

After five games the outlook for UMass football appeared good — a 4-1 overall record and sole possession of first place in the Yankee Conference with a 3-0 mark. But with striking swiftness and surprise, the 1976 Minuteman football season is now in danger of sinking to levels of mediocrity.

UMass' 28-6 Homecoming loss to previously winless UConn Saturday at Alumni Stadium leaves the Yankee Conference race in shambles, with the Minutemen and New Hampshire tied for the top spot with one loss each. So the stage will be set in three weeks when UNH invades Amherst for the showdown to decide the YanCon championship. And with a powerful Rutgers team, possessor of the longest win streak in the nation at 14, looming as this week's opponent, and Boston College waiting in the distance, UMass will be forced to get it back together for one big win, just to salvage a better than 500 season.

With inconsistency plaguing them all season, the Minutemen may be hard-pressed to do just that.

"Before this game we were winning but struggling as we were going," UMass coach Dick MacPherson said after the loss to UConn. "We weren't blowing anybody out in those games, and we certainly didn't blow anybody out today."

The culprit in shattering UMass' hopes of an undefeated conference season was a combination of a spirited Huskie team and the Minutemen's own inability to put the ball in the endzone.

Move the ball UMass did, and with authority. Quarterback Brian McNally, completed a staggering 32 passes in 46 attempts for 389 yards to break two UMass records. The offense gained 462 total yards and 25 first downs. But mistakes and turnovers kept UMass from paydirt on all but one occasion.

"Statistics don't mean a helluva lot," MacPherson said. "The score is what counts, and the name of the game is to get in the endzone."

"Penalties, breakdowns, fumbles ... we can't win playing that kind of football," added the coach.

It was these mistakes by UMass which spotted the visitors a 21-0 lead in the second quarter. And it was these same errors which stalled numerous second half drives in the Minutemen's quest for a comeback.

But the opportunities were there. A UMass fourth and inches from the UConn 18 in the opening quarter that failed. A 20-yard touchdown run by McNally called back for holding. Two touchdown passes dropped. Two field goals missed. Twice inside the ten yard line with first and goal. And only six points.

The first big play of the game came on UMass' very first possession of the game. With a third and seven from its own 23, UMass tried a quick kick, but UConn was ready and deflected John Romboli's punt and took over at the UMass 40. After UConn QB Bernie Palmer hit Ned Belardinelli for 32 yards, and workhorse Nick Giaquinto (36 carries, 143 yards) rushed for seven, Palmer dove over for a one yard score, and with the conversion, UConn led 7-0.

Following the kickoff, Minuteman halfback Rich Jessamy broke off a 53 yard gain to break the UMass all-time rushing record on only his second carry of the game. But with a third and one from the 18, McNally was twice stopped for no gain, and the trend was set.

"That was a key," explained MacPherson, "when we didn't get that first down."

From there, UConn did little, and was forced to punt. Ron Harris returned it to the UMass 28, but a clipping call brought the ball back to the seven. And two plays later, running back Bill Coleman fumbled on a sweep left, and Huskie linebacker Kirk Ferentz recovered. It took Connecticut three plays as Palmer again scored and UConn led 14-0.

And the Huskies never looked back.

McNally then went to the air constantly as his running game failed. Jessamy gained only six yards outside of his record-setting run, and Coleman managed only 39 yards on 11 carries. So McNally teamed with John Gladchuk (8 catches, 99 yards) and then Kevin Cummings (8-111) for his passing display.

Opening the second quarter, McNally hit Gladchuk with four straight passes to carry UMass to the UConn 20. From there, McNally races around right end on the quarterback option for the score, only to be nullified by a hold. The drive ended as a 49-yard field goal attempt by Dave Croasdale was blocked.

UConn's Darrell Wilson later picked off a McNally pass, one of the QB's few misdirected aerials of the game, and returned it to the UMass three, and Giaquinto scored from there to make it 21-0.

Following the kickoff, McNally moved the offense to its only score of the day, sparked by two passes to Cummings, one for 29 yards, and the other for 33 yards and the TD. MacPherson opted for the two-point conversion, but McNally was stopped short.

The half didn't end there, though. After the Umass defense stopped UConn, UMass drove to the visitors' 31 yard line. On a second down, McNally found Moses Williams in the endzone, but the big tight end failed to hold onto the ball. UMass still got to the 17 when McNally was hit by defensive tackle Paul Mariano as the QB attempted to pass. It was ruled a fumble, UConn recovered, and UMass' chance to go in at halftime one touchdown back failed.

The final half was more of the same. In the third quarter, McNally hit Jessamy on the fly at the UConn 32, but the fleet halfback dropped the pass for what seemed a sure TD.

In the fourth quarter, McNally hit Jessamy on the same play he tried earlier. Jessamy held on this time long enough to carry to the Connecticut 27 only to be hit by Ferentz and fumble the gain away.

UConn iced the game in the third period on its most sustained drive of the game. Palmer hit Jim O'Keefe for a seven yard score to culminate a 68-yard scoring drive.

The game ended on an even darker note for the Minutemen when McNally, still firing, hit Williams with a pass, and the tight end sustained an injury and was taken by ambulance to Cooley Dickinson hospital.

McNally, after the game, reflected the same thoughts as his coach. His 32 completions broke by nine the old record of Peil Pennington, and his 379 yards broke the old record of 316 in 1952.

"It doesn't really matter," the co-captain said. "Coach MacPherson tells us that the only statistic important is whether we win or lose. That's the important statistic to the team and to myself."

Women runners upset; Middlebury triumphs

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

A runners' and coaches' dream of a dual meet managed to transcend the greater play of the women's New England cross country championship held Saturday at UMass.

While UConn's Lavinia Muncy was racing to a meet record time, Middlebury and UMass were staging a monumental struggle for the team title, with the former eking out a 42-47 victory.

Although 110 runners representing over 20 schools took the gun, these two teams dominated the meet as they each finished five runners in the top 21 places.

Twelve teams finished enough runners to talley a score. Finishing behind the top two teams were Williams with 97 points, Brandeis 145, Vermont 162, Maine 190, UConn 175, Brown 216, MIT 228, Southern Connecticut 236, Mt. Holyoke 271 and Holy Cross 318.

The top 15 individuals were each awarded plaques. These included Muncy, Amherst's Marina Buckley, who was second; Kris Short of Vermont fourth; Donna Randall of Brandeis seventh; Sue Adams of Brown 12th; Mary Hakala of Williams 14th and Sue Krolewski of MIT 15th.

Muncy's time of 17:18 over the three-mile course broke the record set by Cathy Whitcomb of Tufts, who ran a 17:58 last year in the first New England meet ever held. Whitcomb did not run this year. Buckley also broke the record with a time of 17:30. In all, nine women finished under the old standard.

"Those two teams (UMass and Middlebury) were going at each other tooth and nail, and the rest of the field was dragged along," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien. "It was a great competitive situation — it made a lot of people who were never in a big race before very competitive and pulled them right along."

Muncy, who qualified for the National two mile as a high school senior, pulled away from Buckley in the orchard and won easily. Both runners, who are freshwomen, breezed through the mile mark 20 seconds faster than Whitcomb did last year, which resulted in the fast times.

"I knew prior to the meet that that would be the case because Marina Buckley goes out like a bolt, and at the same time the girl Muncy from UConn is a tremendous runner," said O'Brien. "They just took the whole pack and stretched it out from the word go and made a fast, fast race out of it."

"We thought, going into the meet that Middlebury was basically a good team — as good as we were," said O'Brien. "The final score pretty much indicates that. If one or two people switched around it would be 42-47 our way."

That pretty much says it all as Middlebury used superlative performances by its whole team to overcome UMass who got good performances out of several runners. but who were hampered by an injury in a key position.

Middlebury finished Mo Thorpe in third and also captured sixth, ninth, 10th and 21st to annex their first NE title.

For the Minutewomen, Julie Lafreniere ran an excellent race to finish fourth. Sixth at the two mile mark, she finished strong to record a time of 17:38, which bettered her previous low time by 59 seconds.

"I know I ran as hard as I could," said Lafreniere. "I felt like I had to work the whole thing, I didn't want to take any rests."

Running on a pair of sore arches, Maggie Crowley turned in her best performance of the year as she finished eighth. Her time of 17:45 was an improvement of 1:14 over her previous best.

Also making a vast improvement was Sue Swartz, who ended up 11th. She bettered her time by a full minute as she ran 18:01.

Unfortunately for UMass, usual second runner Johara Chapman was hampered by an ear infection and couldn't run fully up to potential. Through sheer determination Chapman managed to finish 13th and even bettered her time by 30 seconds, as she ran 18:07. With her healthy the team would definately have a better shot at taking Middlebury.

Rounding out the UMass scorers was Jane Welzel, who finished 17th with a time of 18:37, 15 seconds faster than her previous best.

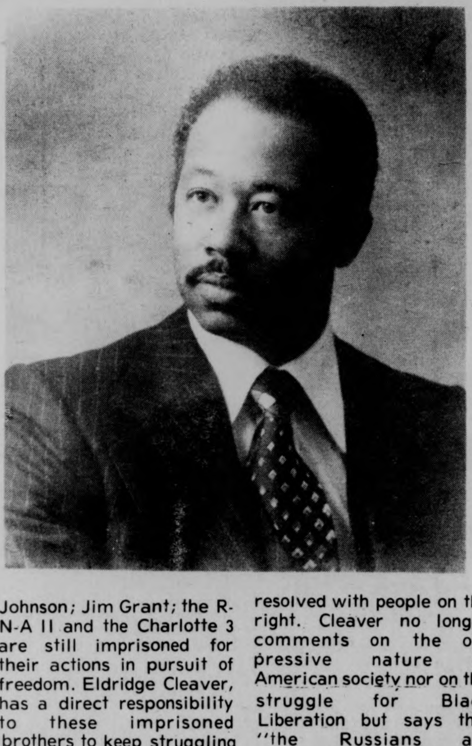
ELDRIDGE CLEAVER: MILITANT OR IMPERIALIST ?

By WADADA ZAKE

Eldridge Cleaver, former Minister of Information of the Black Panther Party will speak on campus, Wednesday, October 27, at the invitation of the Distinguished Visitors Program. Cleaver recently returned to America after seven years of exile during which time he visited Cuba; Algeria; China; Russia; North Vietnam; North Korea and France. Presently he faces six counts of assault with intent to kill, arising from a shootout in 1968 with Oakland, Calif. police.



Cleaver was formerly considered to be one of the most revolutionary black militants in the country. He was active during the wave of black rebellions that swept the country during the 1960's and was instrumental in the establishment of the Black Panther Party.

During the latter part of the 1960's, when Black people were on the rise throughout the country, Cleaver, along with many other brothers, openly defied the oppressive hierarchy of American society; in an attempt to organize Black people in this country to fight for their liberation. Many of the brothers and sisters who, along with Cleaver, launched this struggle in the 1960's were killed and brothers such as Johnny Spain; Ruchell Magee; Otis Johnson; Jim Grant; the R-N-A II and the Charlotte 3 are still imprisoned for their actions in pursuit of freedom. Eldridge Cleaver, has a direct responsibility to these imprisoned brothers to keep struggling for Black Liberation in America.

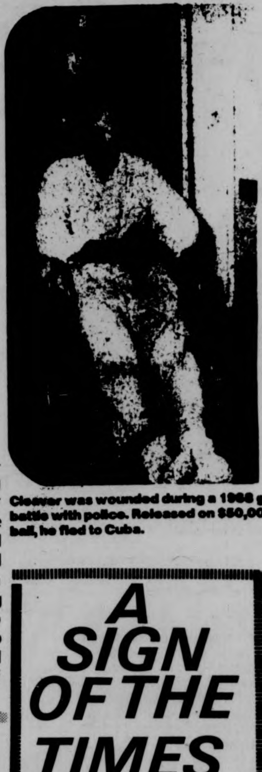
Eleven months ago, Cleaver returned home after seven years of fugitive exile during which time he visited and lived in Cuba, Algeria; China; Russia; North Korea; North Vietnam and France. Since returning home Cleaver has made a complete political turnabout. He now claims to be interested in resolving any differences that can be resolved with people on the right. Cleaver no longer comments on the oppressive nature of American society nor on the struggle for Black Liberation but says that "the Russians are dangerous; they've got rockets that can reach Mars too." He now urges the government to increase its military budget in order to guarantee the defense of the country (this seems to be his top priority).

How does one account for the recent transformation on Cleaver's political principles; from an impassioned black militant to an upholder of American imperialism?

It seems as if Cleaver has completely forgotten about his responsibility to the brothers who are still imprisoned for struggling for Black Liberation in 1960's.

He now describes himself as a born-again Christian and claims that he had a powerful religious experience in Southern France last year, that led to his return. He says that one night he saw faces in the moon — his own, then Castro's, then Chairman Mao's, and finally the face of Christ. he then began to weep uncontrollably and recited the Lord's Prayer and the 23rd Psalm.

In light of the circumstances surrounding Cleaver's case, one cannot help but wonder if indeed he did undergo a powerful religious experience or if all this talk about being born again Christian and seeing faces in the moon is a heap of bullshit designed to account for his political turn-about and lack of consistency.



Cleaver was wounded during a 1968 gun battle with police. Released on $50,000 bail, he fled to Cuba.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES

Mattie Hines, of 74 Loninal Bensit Rd., Springfield, Ma., experienced a surprise when she returned to work to find that she no longer had a record of her employment. Mrs. Hines explained that she had worked for the A & P Bakery on Springfield Street for three weeks under the leadership of Lou Pelleiter and Gary Westerman. When she returned for her fourth week of work, found there was no longer any work for her. Mrs. Hines stated that it was a common sorrow being that she is black and her replacement is white.

Third World Plea Ignored

By NKRUMAH OLINGA

The oppressed African students from the U.S. making a strong position to the community. We desire for the Distinguished Visitors Program (D.V.P.) reconsider bringing Eldridge Cleaver to the UMass campus Wed. The students of color have organized against Eldridge coming to campus. We think that all concerned progressive students should reflect if it is viable for D.V.P. to pay a known opportunist 2,000 of our students fund for Eldridge Cleaver. He has been kicked out of all oppressed countries of color because he did not believe in our true struggle around the world. The UMass Afrikan students have declared D.V.P. a racist organization. They clearly did not adhere to our suggestion in not allowing Eldridge presence here, but because we are not the majority here we lost. We maintain Eldridge does not represent progressive people of color in the U.S. Elaine Brown, Chairperson of the Black Panther Party, did not except Eldridge back into the party because of his statement, proclaiming progressive people can get a fair trial in the U.S. As people of color we know this is not true.

ON THE LIBERATION FRONT

REVOLUTIONARY NATIONALISM AND THE AFRO· AMERICAN STUDENT

By MUHAMMED AHMED

The Afro-American or so-called Negro is experiencing a radical change in the position he has held while living in economic captivity under the white man's capitalistic system. Still bleeding from the wounds of slavery and the Reconstruction period, he has previously taught his offspring that politics was the whiteman's business because the Afro-American politician was forced to sell his race out in order to survive.

As time progresses so does thought and so the Afro-American experienced many different movements. From his bourgeoisie came three conflicting schools of thought; (the infamous Booker T. Washington vs. DuBois vs. Garvey controversy). Washington advocated technical and industrial training to obtain economic security. This security he stated could be used later to obtain social and political equality. DuBois accused Washington of collaborating with southern segregationists and argued that the Afro-American must strive for academic obtainment, demanding political equality now. Parallel to this political arena was the Garvey back to Africa movement. Garvey stated that the Afro-American would only become frustrated and would always remain an exploited factor of white America. He said that the only hope for the Afro-American was to return to the motherland. So at the birth of the 20th century the Afro-American was divided between three different ideologies. Soon to come though was 50 years of slow progress. With DuBois later withdrawing from the "white America" and becoming disillusioned with the democracy that refused to accept him as a man; only as a Black man and with the death of Washington and the weakening of the Garvey movement, the Afro-American was to submerge into a political coma.

It was only after years of turmoil and the disillusionment of false prophets that the Afro-American was to rise again from his ethnic pit of oblivion.

Frustrated by his futile destiny in a rigid "classless" class system, the Afro-American has often turned to nationalism as an answer to his every crying needs. Forced into the ratrace what Vance Packard calls "the Status Seekers", the Afro-American could only pray for a brighter future.

Now let us take a look at the Afro-American youth who have so abruptly uprooted the nation by rebuking the bourgeois philosophy of slowly but surely, and are demanding their freedom now. In an era when the suppressed people of the world are arising and demanding their rights as human beings, a small minority of Afro-American students are demanding social and economic equality. Thus it seems like the ghost of DuBois is still around. On the other hand the Afro-American sees rising in his ranks, separationists such as the Black Muslims who call all white men devils.

Which direction should the Afro-American turn? The answer is neither. The Afro-American must break away from the patterns of yesteryear and form a philosophy of his own coming from the masses of the people that are exploited by the power elite. This philosophy must come from the soul of Black folk and not from bourgeois leaders or white intellectuals. The Afro-America student must become the avante-guards of his race and must demand economic, social, and political equality now. He must see a new and better society and must take steps to build it now!

IN TH WOMB OF THE WORD- -IRONY AND EXTRA ZEAL

IN THE WOMB OF THE WORD — IRONY AND THE EXTRA ZEAL.¶

By NTANDO DONALD MBATA

As if in a fit of intended relevance, sufficient almost to provoke a nod of approval from an Art Buchwald, NBC's television network aired "Judge Horton And the Scottsboro Boys" this month. A time when the United States' Secretary of State will be visiting Africa.

The trip is enveloped in polysemy, one strand of which draws an aura of reception from the airing. He will be landing, after all, in a land which is gyrating in a ritual of fury that has been amply prefaced by the worst of the West.

The logic of the polysemy raises a myriad of questions. They in turn seek to cover points on the guest of the hour, the purpose of the visit and its timing. African perspective imposes a certain order here. It seeks to draw parameters. This is achieved by a view of the visit cast in a mold outside the sociology of American election year campaign politics. The question, guess who is coming to the chiller is thus voided, (1) National Security Study Memorandum 39's Option Two notwithstanding.

To highlight the casting, the liberation movement in Zimbabwe (Rhodesia) charged the African atmosphere with a gesture of unexpected courtesy toward the prominent visitor. The courtesy constitutes a simple note of welcome best expressed in the terms that revolution is alive and well in the Continent. The outline of the note took the form of breach in "Rhodesia's" so called linear containment of the thrust of the revolution along the border shared with Mozambique. Events of a week ago close to the Limpopo river defined the depth of penetration, a point d'appui as it were. Bearing in mind that the United States is in the fervour of bicentennial celebrations, coincidence serves the African atmosphere as a nod a la trans-Atlantica. A vintage present in the spirit of '76.

Guerrillas in southern Africa are intensifying their struggle.

Beyond the salutation the Secretary of State will hear the thematic word on the state of affairs. It is at once a deference to him while it recalls the days of his "shuttle diplomacy" and should feed the purpose of the visit. The word? THERE HAS BEEN LIGHT BEFORE THIS TUNNEL. That is the word. There is poignancy in this point of deference. It places the man of history at a threshold of a slot in time, without hindsight debate as to the pros and cons about delay and its cost in that crucial moment. That time is during WW II when the United States finally joined, in progressive alliance, the ranks which cleaned Europe's nazi pollution. Revulsion called for a correct response, worldwide and revolutionary in scope. Dr. Kissinger, a part of the United States' entry in the clean up crew then, is reported to have acquitted himself well.

He is not a stranger to the art of defining a problem. So, the word in its attempt at precision will avoid "we told you so's" — an obvious reference to the problem of Southern Africa as a threat to world peace. It just clarifies Africa's position to be that of executing an unfolding programme-program.

Irony and the extra zeal of contention nestle also in the womb of the word. As if in anticipation of this, the word codifies a position which locks the African affair outside the esoterica of "co-existence" into co-living. The terms of living mean termination of the nazi-like programmes-programs of death in Southern Africa. In its pregnant silence the word defines the directive for action from the Mozambique position that enough has been said on neo-fascism. That enough has been said in the definition of the problem is testified to by volumes of literature on the subject of pigmentocracy in Southern Africa found at the United Nations. Remember, in a spasm of commendable extra zeal the United Nations was erected as a monument to the burial of nazism. In an ironic twist, filed documents there testify to files of petitioners whose contention it is that while Europe exorcised its horror, it used Africa as a rug under which to sweep the dread. How soon Hitler's European targets forgot. Ah, but here's the irony. The quality of fury is not strained.

In its mercy and magnanimity the fury stresses a theme. It is that the time spent in "unholy alliance" becomes actually, in the tradition of service of revolution, a spotlight on problem areas.

Magnanimity in mind, Africa now invokes the spirit of what could be termed, in American parlance, the class of 1946. The way it is now, the course of action for that spirit is as it was then: the eradication of fascism. It is in this continental breeze that the able diplomat must reflect while the United States, in the bicentennial mold, recycles itself in the revolutionary path. Veteran revolutions must not be guilty of senile delinquency.

ABOUT THE VALLEY SCHOLARSHIP FUND

Aid money is tight — and becoming tighter. Costs are increasing. Out of a recent freshman class at the University, for instance, 1700 students were determined to have financial need; of these 1700, only 800 students received any help at all, and of that 800 only 90 were given the full amount of assistance they required. There are also nowhere near enough work study positions and jobs.

With aid money and jobs at a premium, those who depend upon financial assistance most to further their education get hurt the most. No money — no education. Not for awhile, at least — and, maybe not at all. The Valley Scholarship Fund has been organized to meet that need — to provide scholarships to the school of the recipient's choice (we are not affiliated with the University) for post-high school education. We desperately need more black doctors, dentists, electronic experts, political scientists, businesspeople, nurses, teachers, physicists, etc. In fact, we needed them yesterday. We cannot afford any more delays in our progress toward positions of influence that give us control over our own lives and destinies.

For example, if you have a chance to read this month's issue of Ebony, you've already read the excellent article on Meharry Medical College in Nashville. This article cites that the less than 3 per cent figure quoted by the N. Y. Times this summer is actually 2.2 per cent. That's right — only 2.2 per cent, or 6,600, of some 300,000 U. S. physicians are Black. This means that we have only one physician for every 4,100 of our people nationally, while the white ratio is 1 to 538. We need an additional 29,000 physicians immediately just to meet the American Medical Association's "optimum ratio" of one physician for every 650 persons — this while our numbers in medical schools are declining. How long do we allow such situations to exist? Situations that mean continuation of national statistics indicating:

—Maternal mortality that is four times as high among non-white mothers as among white mothers.

—Fifty to 60 per cent more non-white babies die during the first four weeks of life than white babies.

—After the first month of life, a non-white baby has only one-third the chance that a white baby has of reaching its first birthday.

—A white person born today can expect to live nearly ten percent longer than a non-white persons — 71 years compared to 64 years.

—The mortality rates due to certain diseases, many of them curable, are consistently higher among non-whites.

The above represents only a small example of available data that substantiates our need for professionals and paraprofessionals. More of our people must be trained and educated. Education requires time, effort and money. We cannot give it the time and effort required unless there is the necessary money for living expenses and educational cost.

Until very recently, the Valley Scholarship Fund was slowed considerably in its fund-raising efforts by the constant delays of IRS to approve its tax exempt status. However, the Valley Scholarship Fund is now an approve tax-exempt organization and can now go full swing. To do that — to meet our goal of providing scholarships beginning in September of 1977, we need all the support we can get — we need your support. You can help speed our progress toward this goal by sending your contribution in any amount you can afford to the Valley Scholarship Fund, Inc., P. O. Box 461, North Amherst, Massachusetts 01059. Also, if you can offer your personal services in some way — with ideas, research, letter-writing, contacting potential contributors by phone or in person, etc. — stop by our office which is located in Amherst Center on North Pleasant Street (behind Faces of Earth). Some is there from 9-12 a.m. — or you can phone 256-0253 during those hours.

SOLIDARITY BEHIND FRAMED U·E ORGANIZER

In response to the union busting frame-up provocated against Alex Markley (district organizer for United Electrical Workers) and Tony Suares (IBEW unionist) by the Alcohol Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) division of the US Treasury Department, students and workers of Western Massachusetts are mobilizing widespread support.

The charges that Markley and Suares face stem from a UE strike at the Worthington Compressor plant in Holyoke, which ended in victory the weekend before Thanksgiving 1975. During the strike, Lesley Moore, who knew Markley slightly, introduced a man named Jerry as a friend of labor willing to help out with the strike. Over the course of the 10 week strike, this Jerry, uninvited, visited the UE hall a number of times and expressed a desire to blow up any scab trucks that might interfere with the success of the strike. Throughout the strike there was no violence on the part of the strikers.

8 months later, on July 8th, ATF agents secretly indicted Markley on charges of "conspiracy to damage and destroy by means of an explosive, vehicles used in interstate commerce" and took him to their offices in Springfield. There they held him incommunicado for 12 hours without allowing him consul. During the 12 hour interrogation the agents "made it very clear to me that they wanted me to act as a stoolie in the labor movement to set up and frame other unions on similar fabricated charges", said Markley. The deal was, Markley's co-operation for a lighter sentence and perhaps, even money in the future. Markley refused to co-operate.

On August 2nd, 1976, Markley and Suares were arraigned. Markley is accused of giving T. G. O'Riley, agent provocateur, in the last week of the strike, a cardboard toilet paper tube with black powder and a firecracker wick attached. Suares, a supporter of the strike who just happened to be around one time when O'Riley dropped by, is accused of giving the ATF agent three more of these firecrackers on December 8th, 1975 — two weeks after the strike ended. Both Markley and Suares face a possible 60 years prison term and a $60,000 fine.

Realizing how ATF agents had worked to set up Markley and Suares, UE officials became curious as to the part played by Lesley Moore in introducing the AFT agents to Markley. Moore claims an undercover ATF agent offered to buy his shotgun if only he would saw the barrel off short. When he delivered the sawed off shotgun to the undercover agent he was arrested. Moore says the ATF then offered him easy treatment in exchange for fingering other targets. In February of 1976, Moore was given his reward for introducing agent provocateur O'Riley to Markley. He pleaded guilty to his indictment and was given two years probation.

In attempts to get answers to such questions as, is this frame-up routine a common practice of the ATF, and why go out of the way to frame-up Markley and Suares, the UE Defense Committee has asked Representative Conte to call for a congressional investigation of the ATF. Conte has agreed to do so.

Already the support of Markley and Suares enjoys the support of many organizations. Among the number of labor organizations that have already endorsed the support effort, is the Pioneer Valley Labor Council, Teamsters and the Central Labor Council, representing 52,000 AFL-CIO workers. Scheduled events, designed to increase the level of support for the case, and also, to raise funds for the defense are as follows:

Oct. 28, 7:00 p.m. Mahar Auditorium UMass. Speakers: Tim Butz, Counterspy; Sid Peck, Public Education Project on the Intelligence Community; John O'Sullivan, Local 6 IPGCU, Washington Post; Don Tormey, UE organizer.

Music: UE International Band

Oct. 30, 1:00 p.m. Court Square Downtown Springfield. Demonstration supporting Markley and Suares.

Nov. 4, Greenfield Community College, 8:00 p.m., Lecture Hall — Film: Union Maids, U.E. speaker — Benefit.

Nov. 5, 7:30 p.m. Unitarian Church, Northampton, Defense Committee Speaker, John Fussell, Greenfield Popular Union.

MARTIAL ARTS

By D. LEWIS

"Exercise is an internal force". These are the words stressed by Instructor Robert Ong in his Si Lum Martial Arts class every Saturday in the basement of Lilly Hall at Smith College. A senior at Amherst College, Ong said "it is vital to rid the body of excess air fluid" and breathing exercises are enforced.

A native of New York, Ong said the course is good for self defense, form, body conditioning and meditation. It originated in China and accented speed and accuracy. A form of Kung Fu, the group uses the preying matis as a symbol of their style.

Mr. Ong teaches the course on Saturdays from 2 - 4 p.m. at Smith College and on Tuesday and Thursday from 7 - 8:30 p.m. at Amherst College.

OPEN LETTER ON SOUTHERN AFRICA

On Thursday morning, April 29, the C.B.S. Morning News presented Dr. Milton Freedman in a commentary on southern Africa. Dr. Freedman had recently returned from a trip to the Republic of South Africa. His remarks on the South African situation sounded as though they were written by the South African Ministry of Information. He proceeded to argue that "most of the blacks are freer and wealthier than elsewhere in Africa." He goes on to point out that "southern Africa with 8 per cent of the population (of Africa at large) produces 25 per cent of the goods." He then uses these arguments to call for American support for the white South African facist. This commentary raises so many questions, one hardly knows where to begin in discussing it.

The most pressing question raised by the Freedman commentary is why was he given the opportunity at all? To begin with, Mr. Freedman has no credentials on the subject, academic or otherwise. He is not noted as a student of African affairs, nor does he have extensive personal experience there. And to this observer, his comments on C.B.S. does nothing to recommend him as a credible analyst of South African affairs. In fact, his remarks strongly suggest that he is either a dupe or a brazenly forward apologist for South African facism.

However, it is not at all difficult to conceive of Mr. Freedman in the latter role, particularly when one considers his present relationship to the facist pinochet junta in Chile. As you probably know, Mr. Freedman is a Professor of Economics at the University of Chicago. He is also the principal architect of the present economic policy of the Chilean junta. In the opinion of many economists, this policy known as "shock treatment" is one of the most inhumane in the world. But one need not be an economist to recognize that anyone who could work so closely with an outright facist regime must be of like mind. Here we defer to the superior wisdom of the folk as expressed in the old adage, "Birds of a feather flock together."

As an intellectual and moral statement on South Africa, Mr. Freedman's commentary is at best a burlesque of analysis and a reflection of moral bankruptcy. To argue as he does that blacks in South Africa are "freer and wealthier" than anywhere else in Africa is prima facie absurd. This argument bears a strikingly close resemblance to the arguments of those who tell us that black U.S. slaves were better off than their poor white counterparts. The latter argument is presented in the multi-volume quantitative tome by Professors Fogel and Engerman, entitled "Time on the Cross."

In reply, I would argue two things: It is not possible to determine the quality of life from mainly quantative indices, and in both cases the statistical data was provided by the oppressors. In other words, to base such an assumption on records supplied by the South African government and the U.S. slaveholders is to disregard the most basic lessons of human history. In both instances, Professors Fogel, Engerman, and Freedman base their judgements on the quality of black life on quantitative data expressed in statistical interpretations. The most important of which is per capital income. (With Freedman, this is his only index.)

I am going to such great lengths in order to be sure that you understand what is wrong with such an approach to questions of human freedom! (since C.B.S. News is evidently unable to arrive at this understanding independently). To demonstrate the point more clearly let me point up an example closer to our time and place. From their prospective, one would be forced to conclude that Puerto Ricans are better off packed in the Barrios of the South Bronx than as independent small landowning farmers in Puerto Rico. For it can be statistically demonstrated that the Puerto Rican community of the South Bronx has a higher per capital income. However, anyone even vaguely informed on the situation would immediately recognize the argument as nonsense.

In regard to Mr. Freedman's statement that white dominated, Southern Africa, with only 8 per cent of Africa's population, produced 25 per cent of the goods, we say, "So what"! What was he attempting to demonstrate by his proclamation? That the whites are therefore superior and ought to rule? If so, we say this is nothing more than the pious palaver of a deceased mind! There is no mystery in regard to the reasons for the productivity of the white dominated areas of southern Africa. Whites in South Africa are Europeans and have had all of the benefits of European capital, technology, and fraternal assistance.

Europe was the incubator of the industrial revolution and as such leads the world along with her North American descendants — as the center of capital and technology; no one who is reasonably informed on world history denies this. However, I would remind you — as Arnold Toynbee and others have done — that the European domination of the world is only a few hundred years old and is due almost entirely to the white monopoly of capital and technology in the modern world.

Hence, one does not need to resort to Hitlerian theories to explain the superior productive capacity of white dominated southern Africa. The more important question that begs an answer is: How much has this productive capacity benefited the African majority? The black South African as a people are in every important respect far worse off than they were before the coming of whites. In fact, one could argue that in many respects they are in worse condition than the U.S. blacks were as slaves. For example, the Land Acts of 1913 and 1936 allocates only 13 per cent of the land to blacks while preserving 87 per cent for whites. Hundreds of thousands of black husbands and wives see neither each other or their children but two days a year.

The balance of the year is spent toiling in the white-owned gold mines and lavish households. In both instances they are generally paid less than $500 a year. Is this the wealth and happiness of which Professor Freedman speaks? What fairly sane person could seriously argue that this is not slavery? Black labor cannot organize, black womanhood is not respected, black children are exploited, and the black community is defenseless before the bar of justice!

One cannot help but notice that Professor Freedman, Fogel, and Engerman are all Jews. One therefore wonders how they would react to the suggestion that perhaps Hitler was right with regard to Jews. After all, there is not a dimes worth of difference between Nazism and Afrikanerism. The only difference is that Nazism was directed toward a white European minitory and Afrikanerism is aimed at the black African majority! The best evidence of the similarity between these two ideologies is that most of the Afrikaner leadership actively supported the Nazis. This includes the present Prime Minister, John Voster!

It is my fondest hope that Mr. Freedman will choose to reply when this letter is made public. For I find his ideas on both economics and South Africa repugnant to true democratic ideals. Hence, I would welcome the opportunity to debate him either in writing or in person. Recently, the distinguished British economist, Joan Robinson, argued that many American economists had abdicated their professional responsibilities. She suggested they spend too much time trying to justify the status quo rather than criticizing the existing realities.

I would suggest to Mr. Freedman that there is no theory, economic or otherwise, that can justify the unequal distribution of wealth in southern Africa. Rather, the inequities in wealth, between whites and blacks, can only be explained by reference to the power differential between these groups. Perhaps it was to economists such as Mr. Freedman that Professor Kenneth E. Boulding addressed his lament on the loss of the humanist basis of economics.

Thus far, I have confined my attention to C.B.S. commentary, now let me examine some examples of reportage. On the Morning News, May 17, C.B.S. did a report on Zimbabwe. (Whites refer to this country as Rhodesia.) This report dealt with the white farmer in Zimbabwe. It featured the Deal family and their neighbors. The artistic acuity of the camera work contrasted sharply with the propagandistic banality of the narrative. As the commentator introduced them, the camera panned around revealing pompous white farmers smiling, waving guns, and making every variety of racist statement. They swore to "uphold our land rights and way of life". The C.B.S. reporter later quoted remarks by Ian Smith — the Prime Minister of the illegal white regime — to the effect that "majority rule means marxist rule."

Throughout this report, the whites are presented as just nice hardworking folks, simply fighting to protect what is rightfully "theirs." No member of the African masses or their representatives were interviewed. What is wrong with this report should be obvious

BLACK STUDENTS IN NORTHEAST AREA BEGIN TO ORGANIZE

Within the American society, minorities are not given the opportunity to resist assimilation and Americanization. A university being a place not only for academic growth, but also for personal expansion, should be able to offer this opportunity to its students.

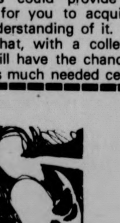
Northeast, having proclaimed in the past its respect for the struggles of others against human oppression, must now take one more step in living up to its responsibilities.

We feel that the special needs of the Third World Students of the Northeast Area can now best be met by the formulation of a cultural "Nucleus". We are aware that there is a general lack of space throughout the dorms of Northeast. However, there is some space in the basement of Dwight House which is presently not being utilized as it should be. This area should be turned into a meeting place in which students of the Third World can strive to maintain and enhance their cultural and historical background and to deal with current problems surrounding them in this alienated university.

It can also play a very positive role for the white students of this campus by providing an opportunity for them to communicate and interact with students from other backgrounds. We have a great deal to offer each other through sharing and the exchange of ideas and perspectives. This can be facilitated by providing space for conducting classes, study groups, colloquia, workshops, etc.

For those of you who have studied a foreign language without feeling you have really learned it, perhaps this could provide the opportunity for you to acquire a practical understanding of it.

We feel that, with a collective effort, we will have the chance to establish this much needed center.



NATIONALIST RECALL MARCH 1,1954

"It was an intolerable situation which forced us to take some action that would expose the political masquerade that the imperialists were trying to impose on us. We had to show the world the true facts — that Puerto Rico was still a colony" — Irving Flores

"What made me become more involved in the struggle was the harsh repression. If there are people with patriotic feelings, and there is repression, it gives an individual more of an obligation to fight." — Andres Figueroa Cordero

"The U.S. invaded Puerto Rico by force of arms July 25, 1898 taking away our land and (trying) to infuse into the people of Puerto Rico a repudiation of their birthright of national emancipation. (This) has not worked, of course, as history testifies"! — Lolita Lebron

"I went to school. There I was told to salute the flag of the United States. I refused to. I could not understand how the same people who were responsible for massacring my parents' friends one day, could turn around the next day and ask me to pledge allegiance to a colonialist power which was responsible for the domination and murder of my people." — Rafael Cancel Miranda

"It is bad enough when someone oppresses, exploits and enslaves you. But when they say you are satisifed with it, that is like adding insult to injury." — Irving Flores

"Our case should be tried by a world court. The U.S. tried us as 'common criminals' in violation of all known national and international rights-to cover up the right and mandate of our Puerto Rican people to nationhood." — Lolita Lebron

Twenty-two years ago, on March 1, 1954, Lolita Lebron, Rafael Cancel Miranda, Irving Flores and Andres Figueroa Cordero attacked the U.S. Congress to bring the colonial reality of Puerto Rico before the eyes of the world. Today, over 100 countries, including the Movement of Non-Aligned Nations and the vast majority of countries in the U.N. General Assembly, officially recognize the right of the Puerto Rican people to self-determination and independence. The events of March 1, 1954 are a part of the Puerto Rican peoples resistance to U.S. colonialism. The four Puerto Rican patroits bought one-way train tickets to Washington, not expecting to return alive. They arrived at the U.S. Congress, entered the balcony, and started shooting into the House. Lolita Lebron shot at the symbol of the eagle on the balcony. Irving Flores fired several shots, his gun jammed, and he escaped only to be caught outside. Lolita Lebron unfurled the flag of Puerto Rico and shouted: "Viva Puerto Rico Libre!" She describes their trial: "I think that the U.S. judicial system violated international law in trying us. We are prisoners of a battle of liberation, the enemy has no moral or political right in international law to judge us. Our case should be tried by a world court. The U.S. tried us as 'common criminals' in violation of all known national and international rights to cover up the right and mandate of our Puerto Rican people to nationhood. Andres Figueroa, Irving Flores, and Rafael Cancel were charged and convicted on five counts of assault with intent to kill. They were each given sentences totaling 25-75 years. Lolita Lebron was charged and convicted on five counts of assault with a dangerous weapon. Her total sentence was 16-50 years.

Today the movement to free the five Nationalist political prisoners is bringing their massage to thousands of people across the country. When asked what can be done to support their case Lolita Lebron answered, "Fight for the freedom of my country; to love me is to love my country." The five are the longest-held political prisoners in the Western Hemisphere. They placed the freedom of their people above their own personal lives. Today we have the ability, combining our forces with an international campaign, to win their freedom.

SOLE GOVT·WITNESS RECANTS TESTIMONY IN WILLIMINGTON 10 CASE

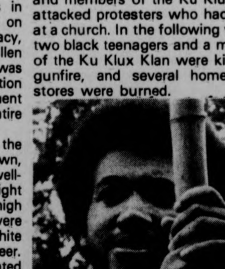
NEW YORK [LNS] — Four years after ten civil rights activists in North Carolina were convicted on charges of arson and conspiracy, the state's sole eyewitness, Allen Hall, has admitted that he was coerced by the state prosecution and a federal law enforcement agent into fabricating his entire testimony.

The Wilmington 10, as the convicted activists are known, include Rev. Ben Chavis, a well-known civil rights leader; eight other black men, most of them high school students when they were arrested; and Ann Shepard, a white woman who was a Vista volunteer.

In response to Hall's recanted testimony, defense lawyers for the Wilmington 10 filed a motion in court on October 13 demanding dismissal of charges against them or a retrial. All ten are in jail now and have demanded to be released on bail. They were imprisoned in February of 1976 after bail for further appeals was denied.

The civil rights demonstrations that lead to their arrests began as a non-violent protest in early 1971, demanding that a memorial service for Martin Luther King be allowed at a Wilmington, North Carolina High School.

Violence broke out after police and members of the Ku Klux Klan attacked protesters who had rallied at a church. In the following weeks, two black teenagers and a member of the Ku Klux Klan were killed by gunfire, and several homes and stores were burned.



Shortly afterwards, Chavis, who had been a highly visible leader of the protests, and nine others were arrested and subsequently convicted. Chavis was sentenced to 34 years in prison; three others got 31 years each; and five got 29 years each. Shepard was convicted on an accessory charge and given ten years.

Puerto Rican Nationalists Recall March 1, 1954

Today, five Puerto Ricans have been in U.S. prisons for over 20 years — longer than any other political prisoners in this country. Their sentences condemn them to remaining terms of thirty to fifty years. And although they are not the best known political prisoners (at least to the people of the United Sates), their fates are extremely important, as their own pasts and futures are irrevocably linked with the past and future of the island and people of Puerto Rico.

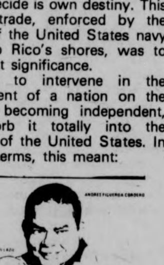
The specific events surrounding the arrests and convictions of Lolita Lebron, Oscar Collazo, Rafael Cancel Miranda, Irvin Flores and Andres Figueroa Cordero took place between October 1950 and March 1954. To understaad these events, and to understand the history of the Puerto Rican struggle for national liberation, it is necessary to understand their context.

That context is colonialism, vicious and ever-present, constantly changing its form but never its content...and the struggle against colonialism, heroic, determined, often overcome but never destroyed.

1898 When the island of Puerto Rico passed from Spanish to United States hands, its people had a considerable history of patriotism and a national desire for independence. Thirty years before, a group of patriots had fought a heroic struggle against Spanish rule in the town of Lares. The day of that confrontation, September 23, still remains a national holiday.

The U.S. takeover, legally expressed in the Treaty of Paris, completely ignored a treaty, signed in 1897, which gave Puerto Rico the right to decide is own destiny. This "illegal" trade, enforced by the landing of the United States navy on Puerto Rico's shores, was to have great significance.

It was to intervene in the development of a nation on the verge of becoming independent, and absorb it totally into the economy of the United States. In practical terms, this meant:



1). The total absorption and destruction of the sugar crop, the island's main economic concentration. By 1930, U.S. business owned the whole production area. The possibility of Puerto Rico developing an ownership class was thereby destroyed, and the U.S. controls directly 85 per cent of the Puerto Rican economy today.

2). The complete U.S. and control over all political and social functions on the island. At first, Puerto Rico was governeed by American military officials, then by American government officials and today, although there is a commonwealth government, 85 per cent of the basic governing areas are still under the jurisdiction of the U.S. Congress. These include transportation, immigration, trade, citizenship, juridical appeals, military use of the island territory, all communications, and the list goes on. Puerto Rico's government governs almost nothing.

3). The attempted absorption of Puerto Rican national culture and spirit. Sometimes crude, as in 1913 when colonial authorities attempted to change the native language to English — a task soon abandoned. Sometimes more subtle, as with the current conversion of the island's metropolitan centers into crass centers of tourism.

In spite of the tremendous attack which the Treaty symbolized and the invasion concretized, resistance was heard.

1928 In 1928, the Nationalist Party elected as its president a brillian young lawyer. Pedro Albizu Campos. In the course of his 40-odd years of active political life this man was to fashion much of the nationalist philosophy and revolutionary practice. He was to be the first indepandence leader of the centruy to truly inject the concept of anti-imperialist struggle, the concept of revolution, into the belief in independence.

1936 The nationalist Party called for a complete boycott of an colonial elections, since those elected had to promist to uphold and defend the United States rule over Puerto Rico and had to operate within the narrow framework established by the U.S. Congress.

Following up the boycott call, Albizu Campos called for a constituent assembly to all Puerto Ricans, regardless of political affinity, to draft a constitution for a free Puerto Rico and seek mutually beneficial trade relationships with other countries. Puerto Rico was at that time, as it still is, limited to trading solely with the U.S. The concept had astounding success: there was almost unanimous agreement among all the major parties, including pro-statehood groups. All over the island, massive popular demonstrations were held against the economic strangulation of Puerto Rico. This was too much for the authorities and Albizu Campos was arrested for inciting rebellion; he was tried, convicted and exiled to the United States to serve a term of ten years in jail.

1937 The conflict escalated even further when on March 21, 1937, the anniversary of abolition of slavery in Puerto Rico in 1873, the Nationalist Party called for a massive demonstration in Ponce to protest Albizu Campos' incarceration.

It was to begin with a march to the Cathedral to pray for the freedom of Puerto Rico and the release of her political prisoners. As the procession began it was machine-gunned by police handpicked from all over Puerto Rico. Nineteen persons were killed and more than 200 wounded. Later, the American Civil Liberties Union was to prove, by photograph, that the fire was unprovoked and uncontested. The few police who died were killed by cross fire. Today, the incident is known as the Ponce Massacre.

1940 Despite Albizu Campos' absence, the independence movement continued forward, holding Congresses in 1943, 44, 45, which culminated in 1946 formation of the Puerto Rican independence Party. — the PIP — which is still today the largest electoral independence party.

1947 When Albizu Campos returned in late 1947 he found, maturing, the fruit of the seeds he had planted. He honed the Nationalist Party apparatus and set about reorganizing its various functions for imminent action.

1948 The time was so ripe that when the Rector of the University refused to permit Albizu Compos to address a group of students, the reaction was fulminating; the whole student body went out on strike and the protest spread across the island.

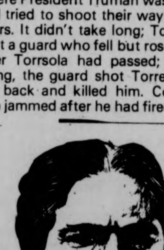
1950 The rising resistance of the population to the occupying regime again brought a reaction from the United States government, this time in the form of Congressional Law 600, which permitted Puerto Ricans to draft a constitution governing certain areas which did not affect United States military and economic control over Puerto Rico.

1950 As the federal government began its manoevers for this plebescite, it saw that Albizu Campos was the primary obstacle to the success of its plans. Tension between Nationalists and police grew, but the Nationalist Party, well aware of its extreme military disadvantage, hoped to avoid an armed confrontation if it could do so honorably. However, it seriously prepared for such an armed confrontation in the event that they would be forced into it.

In late April of 1950, Secretary of War Louis Johnson paid a visit to his generals in Puerto Rico. Through Nationalist intelligence, Albizu Campos learned that Johnson had instructed his generals to tell Governor Luis Munoz Marin to jail or kill all Naionalist leaders.

On October 30, the jailing started when four Nationalists were arrested in the small town of Panuelas. Fighting soon erupted, spreading to all the island's major cities. For five days, tanks and planes, bombs and machine guns strafed the island seeking out the insurrectionists. Thousands of Puerto Ricans were arrested, thousands were confined to house arrest, hundreds massacred, and those few Nationalists who did survive were sentenced to outrageously long prison terms.

The war lasted six days. During the course of those days, an event took place on the mainland. Among those dedicated Nationalists who had earlier emigrated to New York were two young men, Oscar Collazo and Griselio Torresola. They had previously agreed that if any crisis should develop affecting the movement in their country they would meet and decide what they could do about it. When they heard of the repression of the October 30 rising, they met, and brought two one-way tickets to Washington. Torresola was an expert in handguns, Collazo had never handled a weapon in his life, but in their hotel room that night, Torresola taught Collazo all he could about loading, handling, and firing. The eext morning they went to Blair House, where President Truman was living, and tried to shoot their way up the stairs. It didn't take long; Torresola shot a guard who fell but rose again after Torrsola had passed; before dying, the guard shot Torresola in the back and killed him. Collazo's gun jammed after he had fired just a few shots; he was on his way up the stairs when another guard shot him in the chest. He fell, was seized, and carried off to the hospital. President Truman was still upstairs on the second floor.



Lolita Lebron

By November 4, the fighting was over. In its aftermath, the surviving Nationalists on the island were sentenced to prison terms such as 200 and 400 years each. Here in the U.S., Collazo was sentenced to death in the electric chair, but later President Truman commuted his sentence to life imprisonment. As in Lares, the 1950 uprising did manage to take over the city of Jayuya and proclaim the Republic. Jayuya fell after four days, but it was an expression of a far wider support and more universal Nationalism among the Puerto Rican population.

1952 With Nationalists and Nationalist sympathizers in prison, the machinery for the establishment of the Commonwealth, or Free Associated State functioned smoothly. The plebiscite was held in the spring of 1951; the Constitution was drafted, approved and went into effect on July 25, 1952.

This Free Associated State was a hoax; it was born as a palliative and with no alternative choices, was ratified by an electoral minority of a people occupied by the armed forces of the country which proposed it. It is neither free, nor a state, and the form of its association is colonialism. It is indeed a super-agency for the management of U.S. economic interests in Puerto Rico.

1953 The United States had succeeded in persuading the United Nations to declare Puerto Rico "self-governing" on the basis of the "Commonwealth" formulation. Plans were to seek the same kind of declaration when the Organization of American States convened in Caracas on March 1, 1954. Those who determined to prevent this were a small group of deciated Nationalists in New York. Under the leadership of Lolita Lebron, they decided that they must call international attention to the Puerto Rican predicament. What place was more fitting than the institution in which these plans of oppression were drafted?

1 March 1954 Lolita Lebron, Rafael Concel Miranda, Irvin Flores and Andres Figueroa Cordero set out for Washington, fully aware of the dangers inherent in their plan. They entered the gallery of the House of Representatives and began to shoot, crying "Viva Puerto Rico Libre!" They offered almost no resistance when they were immediately apprehended. The three Nationalist men were condemned to 75 years in prison each, and the leader, Lolita Lebron, to 50 years.

In the intervening years, these people have been subjected to particular harassment, transferred frequently from one penal institution to another, kept in solitary confinement for months and years on end. Figueroa Cordero suffers from cancer and Lebron is seriously ill; neither of them is given proper medical treatment. Yet these four revolutionaries maintain an exemplary stance for which they will not be moved. They have been offered parole but refused activities. Their statements, their endurance, their unswerving dedication have been nothing less than heroic.

December 1972 Last year, just before the successor took office, the ex-governor of Puerto Rico, Luis Ferre, issued a proclamation freeing from the Puerto Rican jails the remaining prisoners from the 1950 uprising. These were four men whose sentences had amounted to their release they hurled themselves directly back into the independence struggle, addressing huge crowds and issuing statements reaffirming the same positions they had outspokenly held during those 22 years in jail. "Armed struggle," said Jose Antonio Cruz Colon in an interview the week after he came out of prison, "is a legitimate form of struggle. We must use any means at our disposal, as long as it is effective."

August 1972 His contention echoed a recent decision on the part of the United Nations Committee on Decolonization which declared, a year ago last August, that the recourse to force and violence on the part of national liberation armies in colonial situations is a legitimate reaction of self-defense. In spite of heavy pressure from the U.S. to brand all such acts and gestures as "terrorism", the rest of the world can plainly see that there are many situations where the balance of power permits no other possible form of appeal.

It is in this light that we must see the actions of the Nationalists who took part in the 1950 uprising, in the Blair House incident, and in the 1954 events in the House of Representatives. To the Puerto Rican independence movement, each of these patriotic prisoners is a banner flying undauntedly in prison.

Puerto Ricans were allowed to express acceptance or rejection of this new Congressional formulatio, but not to express a preference for any other form of government. A minority of Puerto Ricans participated in this "plebisicite"; the majority boycotting it. However, since a majority to those voting favored accepting U.S. Congressional Law 600, the U.S. government declared that the results were an indication of the will of the Puerto Rican people and their rejection of "independence" as a viable solution.

At the same time, the plan was coordinated with the subsidization of U.S. business to establish tax-free industry in Puerto Rico, payici one-third the wages they would have to pay in this country. The government which Law 600 established would serve as coordinator and administrator for this industrialization scheme.

SPEECH BY PRIME MINISTER FIDEL CASTRO RUZ REGARDING OCTOBER BOMBING OF CUBAN JETLINER

The following speech by Cuban Prime Minister Fidel Castro was given on October 15, 1976, at funeral services in Havana's Plaza of the Revolution, held for the passengers and crew of the Cubana Airlines jet which crashed as a result of a bomb explosion on board on October 6. In the speech, Prime Minister Castro cancels the hijacking and piracy agreement which Cuba signed with the U.S. in 1973, detailing evidence that the CIA is responsible for the recent attacks on Cuban airlines and diplomatic outposts, including the October 6th Cubana Airlines bombing, as well as presenting facts which point to new plans for attempts on his own life by the CIA. The Prime Minister rejects the possibility of any bilateral agreements between the Cuban government and the U.S. until all such aggressions and hostilities are ended.

Copies of this document, translated by the government of Cuba, are available from the Center for Cuban Studies, 220 East 23 Street, New York, N.Y. 10010.

Moved, mourning, outraged, we meet today in this historic square to bid farewell — if only symbolically — to the remains of our assassinated brothers and sisters in the brutal act of terrorism carried out against a civil plan in flight with 73 people on board, among whom 57 were Cubans. Most of the remains already lie in the abysmal depths of the ocean, with the tragedy denying to their next-of-kin even the consolation of their bodies. It has only been possible to recover the remains of eight Cubans. Thus they become the symbol of all those who fell, the only remains we will bury in our soil of those who were 57 healthy, vigorous, enthusiastic, devoted and young fellowmen of ours. Their average age was scarcely over 30 years although their lives were nevertheless, lives fully rich in their contribution to work, study, sports and the affection of their closest relatives and to the Revolution. When we read the biographies of each one of them, we see the splendid record of services to their country. The captain of the ship had been elected on this very same year as a National Work Hero. Many had received the 20th Anniversary Medal. Among the crew members, many had rendered various international services, and the athletes had just written a brilliant, unsurmountable, victorious page, winning all the Gold Medals in the competitions that had just taken place in Caracas. Many were members of the Young Communist League of the Party. All of them were outstanding in their respective activities. Each one of them was a clear example of how dedication to study, upgrading work and the fulfillment of duty constitute at present, the main characteristics of all of our citizens.

They were not millionnaires on a pleasure trip. They were not tourists who had time and resources available to visit other countries. These were poor workers, students and athletes who were fulfilling with modesty and dedication, all the tasks given to them by their Homeland.

Among those who were on the plane, there were eleven Guyanese youths, six of whom had been selected to carry out medical studies in Cuba. These are lives that were lost, of men whose destiny was that of saving lives in their underdeveloped and poor country. Also five dedicated citizens of the Democratic Peoples Republic of Korea died, a people that have been under siege for such a long period of time by the United States, and who were visiting countries of Latin America in a Friendship Trip.

The plane was destroyed in flight by an explosion a few moments after having taken off from the Barbados Airport. With a heroism that cannot be described, the courageous and expert pilots of the ship made a great effort to land again. But the ship burning and almost totally destroyed was only able to remain in the air for a few minutes. They nevertheless had time enough and enough integrity to be able to explain that an explosion had occurred aboard the plane, that the ship was burning, and that they were attempting to land back. The drama that this must have meant for the passengers and crew members is unimagineable, in that the explosion and the fire occurred in flight at an approximate height of 6,000 meters.

Some imperalist agencies immediately spoke about a possible mechanical failure, but in a recorded tape all words of the pilot which he had sent to the Barbados Airport were recorded. Other evidence immediately added up to this; two individuals with documents crediting them as Venezuelans had taken the plane in Trinidad where they were lodged without any type of baggage in the most luxurious hotel. At the petition of the Barbadian authorities who thought they were suspicious, Trinidadian authorities arrested them.

The investigations that were initiated by the police of both countries immediately brought about indications which made the strong supposition that they were the perpetrators of the sabotage. Due to the nature of the documentation, the Venezuelan authorities immediately learned about the events and had access to the investigation.

The following day, on October 7th, the President of Venezuela, Carlos Andres Perez, in a cable sending condolences to Cuba, defined the event as an abominable crime. The Prime Minister of Barbados spoke also in similar public terms in the United Nations. The very fact that these governments, whose officials had access to the most immediate and important sources of information about those who were under arrest, about the circumstances surrounding their behavior and their documents — is the reason why they defined this activity as terrorism. That, in itself, was highly significant.

Although since the very first information received, the government of Cuba had no doubt whatsoever in relation to the cause of this tragedy, it abstained from making any type of declaration — waiting to be able to make a deep analysis of the news that was being received, as well as of the background and reports — some public and other confidential — which were in its hands. At the beginning, there was no exact knowledge about the true identity of those under arrest. The possibility of false documents was mentioned. The names of Freddie Lugo and Jose Velazquez became public and it was said that the latter was also called Jose Garcia. Mention was also made about the fact that he had more than one passport.

There was also a further publication around the fact that the Consul of Venezuela had spoken with the ones arrested for five hours and that the U.S. Ambassador in Barbados had hurriedly left for Washington. Nonetheless, the news around those arrested, as well as other details and interesting circumstances were kept hermetically.

On October 9th, the government of Venezuela declared that Freddie Lugo was a Venezuelan citizen and that investigations were continuing for the identification of Jose Velazquez or Jose Garcia. On October 10th, a few totally trustworthy sources from the journalists circles in Venezuela, feeling indignant because of the terrible crime, sent reports to Cuba which were of extreme importance. These reports revealed:

—that a photographer of El Mundo newspaper, called Hernan Ricardo, had been seen two weeks before in the company of Felix Martinez Suarez, a known enemy of the Cuban Revolution, and two other persons.

—that this Hernan Ricardo was inseparable from Freddie Lugo.

—that two days after the explosion of a bomb in the offices of Cubana de Aviacion in Panama, Hernan Ricardo reached the Maiquetia Airport coming from Panama.

—that they had clear indications that this person had three passports, one of which was under the name of Jose Velasquez. The reports also added that in the offices of El Mundo Newspaper, he had boasted of having knowledge relating to a Cuban plane that would blow up in Barbados.

But the most essential and important thing these sources informed us about, — these are sources that are well informed in Venezuela, — is that in broad circles there was knowledge that Hernan Ricardo was a CIA agent; that on many occasions he had reports from the CIA; and that with a relatively modest salary of 1,600 bolivares he had an automobile of 40,000 and an apartment of 100,000. Some people had also heard him talk with Freddie Lugo about courses on explosives that they were receiving, and because of all this background they suspected that the other one arrested, who called himself Jose Velazquez, was Hernan Ricardo.

Two days later, on October 12th, the government of Venezuela officially announced that the second one arrested, Jose Velazquez was actually Hernan Ricardo. This explains everything.

To the reports from Venezuela we should add that according to the information we have in our hands, Felix Martinez Suarez is a well-known CIA agent. There are public accounts coming from Venezuela that speak about fabulous amounts of money given to the perpetrators of the event. The Venezuelan territory was unquestionably used for the materialization of the sabotage in its final stage, and citizens from that country were undoubtedly the perpetrators of the horrible crime.

But this does not lead us to any sort of confusion. It is true that there is a group of well-known Cuban counterrevolutionary elements in Venezuela who have some access to certain political circles, and who are implicated in the imperialist terrorist plans against our Homeland. It is very unlikely that some of them had nothing to do with the events. But we had no doubt whatsoever that the Venezuelan government had nothing to do with aggressive plans of the U.S. against Cuba; that its attitude towards our country has been an honest one and that, President Carlos Andres Perez himself promised a detailed investigation of the possibility that Venezuelan residents or people who live in that country were implicated in such revolting events; and further that it will hold responsible these that used the Venezuelan territory as a base of aggression for terrorist acts.

The recruitment of citizens and the utilization of territories of other countries for activities of this nature are typical CIA methods. At the beginning, we had certain doubts as to whether the CIA had directly organized the sabotage or whether it had prepared it carefully through its cover organizations, made up of Cuban counter-revolutionaries. Now — we fully support the initial thesis that the CIA did participate directly in the destruction of the Cubana plane in Barbados. The most repulsive thing about this is the use of mercenaries who, for money, are capable of destroying 73 valuable lives of defenseless people in a few seconds, people with whom they even traveled a few moments before.

In the last few months, the U.S. government, resentful because of Cuba's contribution to the defeat that the imperialists and the racists suffered in Africa unleashed various terrorist activities against Cuba along with brutal threats of aggression. That campaign has been intensified day after day and has been fundamentally aimed against our diplomatic offices and airlines. On July 9th of this year, in Kingston, Jamaica, only a few weeks before the sabotage against the Barbados plane, a powerful bomb exploded in the wagon which carried the luggage on its way to Cuba. The bomb did not explode inside the plane while in flight because the plane arrived late. On October 2nd of this year, four days before the sabotage on the plane in Barbados, the counter-revolutionary journalist, Llano Montes, who has every reason to have knowledge of all these activities, published in El Mundo newspaper in Caracas, that a plastic dynamite bomb had been placed under the wing of a Cubana plane in Barbados, and that it had been spoiled because of a small leakage of gas when the plane was taxiing for take-off. He added that a security employee at the airport found this plastic dynamite, removed the detonator and took it to his offices. Later it disappeared, and he made no report to his superiors.

In the acts of terrorism perpetrated against Cuba in all of the states of the Caribbean and Central America who maintain relations with our Homeland, they have used not only the territories of countries like Mexico, Panama, Colombia, Jamaica, Barbados, Trinidad-Tobago and Venezuela, but also those of other neighboring nations such as the Dominican Republic and Costa Rica where there are also terrorists living and maneuvering. This does not exclude, of course, the U.S., Puerto Rico, Nicaragua and Chile where they have their bases and act openly with official support. In the development of these activities, imperialism has shamelessly violated the sovereignty and laws of numerous countries of the area. The authors of these crimes move around in a vile manner everywhere. They have huge financial resources, use either U.S. passports as naturalized citizens of that country, or real or false documents of many other countries, and use the most sophisticated means of terror and crime. Who but the CIA under the conditions of domination and imperialist impunity established in this hemisphere, can carry out these actions?

An important element is the very close association of the Central Intelligence Agency with the tyrannies of Nicaragua and Chile in order to implement these plans. During the days of the mercenary attack against Giron, the territories of Nicaragua and Guatemala served as bases for armed aggressions against Cuba and later for the pirate attacks which took place from bases in Miami, Puerto Rico, Dominican Republic and Costa Rica. At present, the very same groups of counterrevolutionary elements are also being used by Somoza and Pinochet according to these specific aims, not only against Cuba but also against Panama, Jamaica, Guyana, the Chilean people's movement and other Latin American progressive movements.

It is well known that whenever the CIA prepared a plan of action against Cuba during the time of Giron or afterwards, it always masked its activities within the framework of various counterrevolutionary organizations in perpetrating the endless chain of pirate attacks, subversive acts, and landing of weapons organized and directed by it. It is impossible to remember the quantities of names and figures that have been created by this sinister Yankee organization. Last June, a group of counterrevolutionary terrorist organizations, all of which have their headquarters in the U.S., such as the so-called Frente de Liberacion Nacional de Cuba, Accion Cubana, Movimiento Nacionalista Cubano, Brigada 2506 and F 14, made up mainly of elements who have worked for the CIA for many years and which received all their training from the CIA, met in Costa Rica to create so-called Commando of United Revolutionary Organizations (CORU). These groups not only act freely and with impunity within the U.S., but their top chiefs through the CORU organization are also closely linked to the CIA's activities against Cuba. The actions are not always carried out by elements of these cover groups. On many occasions the CIA carries out its dirty work through other means, and the organizations created serve to claim the responsibility for the actions.

In the U.S., these groups publicly proclaim their crimes and announce new criminal acts. In October 1976, in a counterrevolutionary newspaper published in Miami, a so-called war report was published explaining how they blew up an automobile in front of the Cuban embassy in Colombia, and how they destroyed the offices of Air Panama. At the end of the report they declare, and I quote, "very soon we will attack planes while in flight." It is signed by the five terrorist organizations with headquarters in Miami that we mentioned before. In another Miami newspaper, on September 19th of this year, we see a detailed description made by CORU on how they attempted to kidnap the Cuban consul in Merida (Mexico), of the murder of a fishing technician, Dartanan Diaz Diaz, and of the attempt to place a bomb in the Cuban embassy in Mexico. Two of the murderers had flown from Miami to Mexico with U.S. passports in order to carry out this activity. They were arrested there after the crime. A third person returned to the U.S. to escape from the actions of Mexican justice.

In another of the Miami newspapers, on September 9th, 1976, a page was published with photos of an alleged congress of the terrorist organization brigade 2506 held in that city. It includes the tyrant Somoza closing the meeting, and next to him a Yankee congressman, Claude Pepper. Another publication publishes the photo of an assembly of these counterrevolutionary groups. Among those presiding at the meeting, according to the note under the photo: Julio Duran, Chilean ambassador to the U.N., Miami mayor, Maurice Ferrer, Colonel Eduardo Sepulveda, Chilean General Consul in Miami, and U.S. congressman, Tom Gallagher. Is there anything strange about having CORU report the repulsive activity of destroying a passenger plane while in flight with 73 passengers to the AP? Would it be strange if these very same elements were the authors of the murder of the former Chilean Minister of Foreign Affairs, Orlando Letelier, whose death was an indignation for world and Latin American public opinion?

U.S. GOVERNMENT BELIEVED ACCOMPLICES IN AIRLINE MURDER

The Western Massachusetts Regional of the Venceremos Brigade is beginning its recruitment activities once again. The brigade is a multi-national, multi-racial, anti-imperialist educational project which works in solidarity with Cuba. Since 1969 the Venceremos Brigade has sent over 2500 North Americans to visit and work in Cuba.

We would like to introduce ourselves to those unfamiliar with the brigade, and to reacquaint ourselves with old friends, by extending an invitation to our open house activity on October 31, 1976 at 3 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 903.

This is an opportunity for the community to become acquainted with the work that the brigade has done in solidarity with Cuba through slides and presentations by former brigadistas.

The Cuban revolution is fully consolidated. This year the Cuban people approved by an overwhelming majority the first socialist constitution in the Western Hemisphere.

Yet there are still campaigns of terror; carried out by defeated Cuban exiles, which have been backed by the United States government, particularly the C.I.A. Since the Bay of Pigs in 1961, Cuban exiles have been trained and armed by US intelligence and armed forces personnel.

On October 6, 1976 a Cuban jet was bombed. Seventy-eight persons were killed. This is another attempt to undermine the Cuban revolution, and to render inactive those individuals, groups, organizations and projects in the United States which support the Cuban revolution.

The mass killing of 78 passengers and crew on the Cubana Airlines flight to Kingston, shows first, how desparate and depraved are those who organize and carry out these vicious and futile attacks, and second, how full of illusions they still are. The Cuban people will not be intimidated; neither will progressive people in the US and all over the world. The Venceremos Brigade will continue to travel to Cuba, to see for ourselves the great achievements of the Cuban Revolution, and to express our firmist solidarity with the Cuban people.

Your attendance at our open house is merely yet another way of expressing your solidarity with the Cuban revolution and the anti-imperialist struggle in this country. Patria o Muerte: Venceremos!

Natalie Cole- Sophisticated Lady

This year the University of Massachusetts' Homecoming will be highlighted by the performance of Miss Natalie Cole, daughter of the late Nat King Cole. Natalie graduated from UMass in 1972 with a degree in Psychology. In the years that Natalie was a student here she began to shape her musical talents and develop her interests in different factions of music. It was in Amherst where she began singing professionally in 1971.
1971.

After leaving Amherst, Natalie pursued her musical career further following the legendary footsteps of her father. Destined for stardom Natalie's first album, Inseparable and the hit tune "This Will Be", won her two Grammy awards for Best New Female Vocalist-Rhythm and Blues and Best New Artist of the Year. On September 18, 1976 she was presented with another award for her hit album by The Rock Music Awards. With the recent release of another album titled, Natalie, she will undoubtedly receive as many, if not more, awards than last year.

It is an honor for the students of the university to have the pleasure to see this dynamic and talented young lady perform in the new Fine Arts Center, Tuesday, October 26, 1976. Since Amherst played a role in the career of this now famous superstar performer it would be an honor that Natalie so justly deserves the honor of the declared, Natalie Cole Day.

She doesn't recall whether she was any good, as she usually was spirited from stage to stage door to home and bed.

She saw her father perform several times, and considers him a great "unintentional influence". She preferred watching him from the audience than from backstage.

"He was just so good... I liked being in the audience better because their reaction was electric and I wanted to share it. He was captivating."

Many "beautiful people" passed through the Cole household. Pearl Bailey, Nancy Wilson, Count Basie, Harry Belafonte... they came and went without much ado. She recalls being awed by Belafonte, her first idol, and watching him swim from a hiding place behind a curtain. But she was quick to assimilate the experience, and thinks of her bouts with famed figures as both exciting and fortunate, but never blows things out of proportion. It's a special blend of ability and humility that makes Natalie someone quite rare. Everything about her... her music, her character, her career... everything is natural.

She left L.A. to go to the University of Massachusetts as a pre-med, loved Amherst, and stayed on one summer to waitress at a local club called "The Pub". She ended up fronting a band on weekends, doing her first professional gig on July 4, 1971. She was a soul and rock enthusiast and already obviously well versed in jazz. Her influences were as diverse as early Motown (early Marvin, Tempts, Aretha), straight on to rockers like Leon Russell and the Allman Bros. Taj Mahal, who went to UMass, as well, exhibited to her that black sounds needn't be confined to tailored soul packaging. She saw herself as a contemporary of the Pointers, Sly, Donna Hathaway, even Bette Midler. She wanted to bring in all types of sounds... and blend the contemporary innovations with that jazz-age discipline she had cut her eye-teeth on. It worked brilliantly. With a repertoire that included "Honky Tonk Women," "Killing Me Softly," "You Are The Sunshine Of My Life", as well as "Que Sera Sera" (a la Sly) and her father's own "Mona Lisa" (the only song from the "King's material that she did) fully reshaped, she tore apart the Northeast circuit.

She opened the Copa in May of 1973, went on to the Diplomat in Miami, the Concord in N.Y., the Bahamas, appeared on the Mike Douglas and Jack Paar Shows, and then in September did a stint at N.Y.'s exclusive Shepheard's. She followed up by opening at the Latin Casino in N.J. for Jerry Butler and the Stylistics. Of that gig the Courier Post reported:

"A bright new star is on the horizon at the Latin Casino this week. Her name — Natalie Cole. It would be totally unfair to compare her with her famous father, Nat 'King' Cole, because in time Natalie will be a star in her own right."

The Daily News, Sept. 19, 1973 called her show: "... as professional as anything heard in town. When she caresses 'Killing Me Softly'... it is a mature, totally different interpretation than Roberta Flack's."

That imminent stardom took a significant turn in October, 1974 when she played Mr. Kelly's in Chicago, and met Chuck Jackson and Marvin Yancey. They were taken with her, and booked her into Curtis Mayfield's exclusive Curtom Studios. They cut some demo tracks, came to Capitol, and soon a deal was struck. On signing at Capitol, her father's label of fame and fortune, she commented:

"Daddy would be surprised... and pleased, and I think my being at Capitol would really have knocked him out!!"

Her debut effort for Capitol is a totally conceived Jackson-Yancey project. They wrote all the tunes and did all the production. Their prior success with the Independents produced several Gold discs on Scepter. Other producers would have been possible at her first signal, but she was determined to stick with Jackson & Yancey. She feels they are fully sympathetic to her R&B slant... a vibrant, pulsating sound which she describes as:

"... a level of sophistication with an undercurrent of funk."

The myriad of influences, from Ella to Aretha to Sly and back to Lamberts, Hendricks & Ross, instilled in her a vague fear that she would create too many impressions. Yancey has put that fear to rest, molding Inseparable into a cohesive album rather than a scattered collection of tunes. The album features guitarist Phil Upchurch and pianist Tennyson Stephens (who have just released a duet LP), with arrangements by Richard Evans & Gene Baird. The first single from the album "This Will Be" is exemplary of the tasteful production, the unique blend of scat and funk, and above all the golden tones of one helluva lady... Natalie Cole. The "King" would be proud.

ON'AIR'-CONCERT

By SRADANE

Air Is In The Sky

On Saturday night starting at 7:30 p.m. at the Hampshire Dining Commons, the Valley enjoyed an evening of Black classical music. The group called "Air" was composed of a base player Fred Hopkins, saxaphonist Henry Thread Gill, drummer Steve McCall. Each of these musicians has a formidable background in jazz. Fred Hopkins has worked with James Moody, Marian Brown and Duke Ellington. Henry Thread Gill has played at several renowned conservatories, and at Berlin and Austrian jazz festivals. Steve McCall has played music for 30 years. His repertoire includes Jean Annens, Peter Gorden, Archie Shepp Eddie Harris etc. The trio has been together for four years and recently performed at Carnegie Hall.

The music was quiet, introspective, cooley beautiful. The improvisations were studied, premeditated — the musicians had incredible control. They put their instruments through cool and hot, quick and slow paces, exploring various moods. The effect was more textural than sensual — they gained and controlled what they lost in generations of excitement.

The music was a synthesis of traditional Black Music — reinterpreted. It was structural: theme — variation on a theme — solo and return. For instance on a ragtime piece, they took a street band march and turned it around several times. They took it up wild, cooled it down, with the sax talking a lot. The uncluttered spaciousness of this music was difficult to untrained and unexpectant ears. What it did was to use silence as a painter might use positive and negative space in a composition. It demanded a lot of concentration and patience of the audience. But isn't it good, at times, to make up work?

Here is the reaction of a young woman named Emily Allen.

The music was composed but not stilted. I was really travelling with it, especially the duet between the sax and the base. Although it was finished music, it felt fresh; I followed it in a visual way. I could see it go up and down, it turned into though, too. It didn't make me feel; I forgot my body — used my head senses.

One aspect of the concert that really delighted me was the use of an instrument made from strung up hubcaps. The sounds and vibrations these made introduced a tangy unique element to a refined concert.

SOMEBODY PLEASE BRING THE SPIRIT BACK

By WILLIE WHEELER

Rahsaan Roland Kirt is the greatest Saxaphone player in the world today. Despite paralysis of the entire left side of his body he can still play a number of instruments just as he did before his illness. He cannot play them all at one time like he use to but he can still play them.

The concert which was held in the Student Union Ballroom was a tremem-dous success for Rahsaan and the Vibration Society, they can really get down together. The members of the Vibration Society are Hilton Ruez Piano, John Crossman Drums, Steve Torez Trumbone, Phill Boswell Bass, Rahsaan Roland Kirk Saxaphone and Michael Hill Vocals.

Rahsaan was in good spirits for the concert, he began by chanting Bright Moments.

Rahsaan is a remarkable musician who is an authority on Black Music. He knows the true origin of what most people refer to as Jazz or Progressive Music. He not only put on a great show, he also educated and inspired the entire Ballroom. The concert was sponsored by the Program Council Music Committee.

Rahsaan is upset with the direction music is taking he referred to it as junk music, he wants the spirit to be brought back to music. He and other musicians on his level are the only link to the true spirit of Black Music.

The Masters in Harmony: Rahsaan Roland Kirk is accompanied by local giants Vishnu Wood: Bass, Sulaiman Hakim: Reeds, and Charles Magid Greenlee: Trombone. Kirk urged support for our local artists.

SCENES FROM THE BLACK HOME COMING WEEKEND

Annie Carpenter

Power of Freedom

I see you sitting there
Bowed head in hand
Unknowing of your next plan
You say you can't get no work
And the man he makes it worse come back next week and then we'll see
Welfare lines they overcrowded
They took your pride
Now you want to get high
You can't look at your woman cause for her you want better
The pain in your gut won't stand this weather
Upon the sea of life your vessel rocks
The movement of the ruffled waves makes you sick
Tossing you, turning you
They took my man
But they gave him no plan
For this I took a stand
This ash brown skin of ours
Like diamonds we shine
Against the sunlight of the brightest day
Against the blackness of the deepest night
And for this we must fight
With all our might
To get over on the man
we got to have a plan
They can take our pride
Brake our stride
But
We got a mind
A mind of power
They don't want that to be ours
They say come back next week
But
Our families are in the streets
The man is scared
He paints us pictures of bowed heads
Not wanting to see us with bread
Wishes we were dead
He sees his grave
But
For us it was laid
It was he who killed himself with pollution of technology
In search of his boss who shows himself with the color green
His green made him mean which brought his death on the scene
Black man
We are a winner
Hold our heads high
Touch the sky
It's our minds in this sign of times
That scares the man cause it's he who is dying
Behind
Our strong black minds

I SEE HER NOW

She's always tried to tell us that the grassland rises where the sea leaves off and the women move mountains:

"You'll earn your living for profit in perpetuity and houses lean in despair.

"Heart's-ease is somewhere else;
it's where the sea leaves off and the rain finds bed-rock in the mouth of the mountains."

Gil Scott: Winter in America

How the People Spell Soul

What words, phrases, or sentences can adequately describe the magnitudinal power and effect of a spiritual prophet?

How closely, while listening to the music of Gil-Scott Heron, can the relevancy of his material, especially in terms of his descriptions of political deceit and corruption, as well as the beauty and the pain of the Black experience, be identified and attributed to the correct sources.

A genius, he's been called by some, and perhaps that's true. He's certainly an accomplished musician and writer, but he isn't an elitist. "No more talk of class" he advocates in a song, "The First Minutes of a New Day".

Angry, he's also been called, and yes, of course, anger does seep through his lyrics, especially in "H20 Gate Blues" where he questions over and over again the commitments and the values, and also the pain, in life.

Thus, as winter approaches America-Amherst, and people throughout the world face hunger and even starvation, Gil-Scott Heron, Brian Jackson and the Midnight Band, returns, once again, to the university community to remind us that there are still reasons for protest.

In the news, there's Ford and Carter, "oatmeal vs. peanuts" for the presidency; South Africa-Soweto, where blood still flows in the streets; South Boston, Massachusetts, where there's little respect for human life; Seabrook, New Hampshire and South Carolina where nuclear waste threatens the lives of thousands and maybe millions; these are some of the prevalent issues also mentioned in the lyrics and music of Gil-Scott Heron and the Midnight Band.

And, questions also, concerning government legislation, for example are raised, and a parallel exists where at this university dorm rooms are surreptitiously entered and searched and two black students are subsequently indicted and convicted not so much because of the optical illusions of racists, but mainly because they were students and powerless in an administration guilty of "benign neglect."

Gil-Scott Heron, Brian Jackson and the Midnight Band, a leader and a group with lyrics, music and rhythms that can only be fully appreciated, comprehended and understood through a total awareness, involvement, and sensitivity towards the ideas and values expressed in their songs.

Tonight, 8 p.m., Student Center Ballroom, come and draw your own conclusions.

Meal, health fee hikes proposed

University officials have proposed a $30 increase in each of the three meal plans and as much as $7 in University Health Services (UHS) for fiscal 1978.

Representatives from the University Health Services, the Food Services Department and Residential Resource Management defended their proposals before a meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee last night.

The Rents and Fees Committee will consider the proposed increases at its meeting tonight and make its recommendation to the senate at the senate meeting tomorrow.

Donald Lisnerski, from UHS, first explained the proposed increase and answered questions from the committee.

Jay A. Martus, Student Government Association (S.G.A.) co-president, questioned Lisnerski on the inclusion of a cost-of-living increase for Health Services employees in the proposed increase figures. Lisnerski said the cost-of-living increase was also included on the recommendation of the Student Health Advisory Board.

Louis Grilon, a member of the Finance Committee of the Student Health Advisory Board, explained the decision of the board to recommend the inclusion of the cost-of-living increase in the Health Services total proposal saying that it did not want to hide the costs if they are voted by the Mass. State Legislature.

George Bater of the Budgets Office said the office is not including cost-of-living increases in the budget proposals to the UMass Board of Trustees.

The Budgets Office would take care of those increases only after they are voted by the legislature.

Peter Graham, co-chairperson of the Rents and Fees Committee said the proposal of UHS, "would never pass the committee" with the inclusion of the cost-of-living increase.

The Food Services Department proposed a $30 increase and included in that proposal a commitment not to propose increases of more than $110 in total between now and FY '82. In each year between now and then, however, the Rents and Fees Committee will still be able to not recommend any or all of these increases. Making the presentation to the committee was Arthur Warren, director of University Food Services.

Residential Resources Management proposed a $6 overall increase for FY '78 and committed itself to requesting no more than a $3 increase in each of the next four fiscal years after FY '78.

Those making the proposal termed it, "a necessary increase dictated by an outside agency," and said they felt the only reason that Residential Resource Management handled the Residence Hall Telephone Trust Fund was that they could do it more cheaply and efficiently than if students had to contract the services individually. Several members of the committee asked question concerning the feasability of telephone services at the option of the students instead of the present compulsory system.

References were made to a study conducted last year by the committee which found that costs would increase dramaticaaly under such a change.

Tonight in committee, Rents and Fees will discuss these proposals and formulate their recommendations for presentation to the Senate at its meeting tomorrow night.

English head set to resign

By JACK FLYNN
Collegian Staff

Prof. David R. Clark, Chairperson of the UMass English Dept., yesterday notified the department that he will submit his resignation at a Nov. 1 department meeting, the Collegian learned yesterday.

Clark, who has taught at UMass for the past 25 years and served as chairperson for the past 14 months, declined comment on his resignation. He said he felt any public statement prior to the Nov. 1 meeting would be premature.

Clark said his future at UMass is uncertain. In the spring of 1977, he has been accepted as Visiting Professor of English and Visiting Scholar in the Yeats Archives at the State University of New York at Stonybrook, Clark said.

Five is still a crowd in Amherst

By BERNIE DAVIDOW
and JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

It is still against the law in Amherst for more than four unrelated persons to live together.

The Amherst Tenants Association attempted to change this zoning by-law at last night's town meeting, but the motion was defeated, 146-27. The change would have, in effect, struck the number "four" from the by-law.

The last session of the special Town Meeting also included articles to authorize a study of a possible Security Deposit Trust Account for Amherst tenants and reaffirm the purpose of the Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee (LTRC). Both motions were approved.

Although the motion to change the zoning by-law was defeated, some committees suggested further study of the issue. Casey Clark, chairperson of the Citizens' Review Commission, which recently studied the proposed change in the by-law, said the present by-law is discriminatory. "It is arbitrarily enforced and it does discriminate on the basis of lifestyle," she said in an earlier interview.

Casey proposed a "deep investigation" of the matter with a grant from the Massachusetts Foundation for the Humanities and Public Policy.

Town meeting member Robert L. Rivers openly opposed the proposed change. "When one buys land in a town one expects to find some stability in his neighborhood."

He said renters, typically a transient population, don't maintain their property.

Property values go down in a neighborhood with several persons living in the same house, depreciating the town's tax base, he said. The Amherst Taxpayers' Association also opposed the change.

James Sullivan, a member of the Amherst Tenants Association, said the by-law discriminates on the basis of lifestyle, and that the issue comes down to a question of "people having the right to live where they wish to live."

The by-law is presently enforced on a complaint basis. Only those cases which are "flagrant abuses," and those where a complaint is issued, are the ones acted upon, according to Board of Selectmen Chairperson Nancy Eddy.

The change was first proposed last July when residents of Carriage Road in Amherst attempted to evict a "family," not all related by blood or marriage, from their dwelling at 47 Carriage Road. Residents of the house contend that they live together for emotional and economic reasons, and that the by-law is unconstitutional.

Amherst's study to examine the possible trust account for tenants' security deposits will be the first of its kind in the state.

"This has never been studied before in the respect of implementing it on a town level," according to George Scheurer, sponsor of the article.

Scheurer said the issue should be handled on a town level, and that this type of issue is "much too cumbersome" to handle on a state level.

It is best handled on a town level, he said. Four years of state legislation on security deposits has been fruitless.

A seven-member task force will study the feasibility of the account between now and the regular town meeting next spring.

The town meeting voted to add at least one more staff person to the LTRC, to be appointed by Town Manager A. Louis Hayward. The additional staff is necessary to look more closely at rent problems, the committee said.

But Sullivan contended that the committee has "never dealt with a rent situation," and called the LTRC "a fraud."

Grad Senate decreases tax

The Graduate Student Senate voted to lower their tax on graduate students to $17 a semester, from the originally determined $18, and heard a presentation from the chairperson of the Graduate Students' Employees Union (GSEU), who said the group is "half-way" through the determination process by which — the union could receive its recognition from the Mass. state Labor Relations Board.

Senate Treasurer Daniel R. Fisher III said the budget deliberations were an attempt by the senate to find a "truer" figure for the senate-determined tax.

Two weeks ago the senate voted on the FY' 1978 budget, raising the tax five dollars a semester. The senate at that time also drafted a letter censuring the University budget office for requiring the budget figures before they could be adequately computed.

The senate was given a "grace period" from the Office of Budgeting Research and Institutional Studies from which they were able to review the budget more discriminately, Fisher said.

The senate reviewed each of the 32 budget items and voted to cut $2,700 from the total budget. Fisher cautioned the senate, that while the budget could be further adjusted in individual categories, the total figure was permanent after their vote last night.

Finding the senate involving itself in lengthy debates on many of the budget items, Vice-President Timothy R. Austin, chairing the meeting, limited discussion in the three budget categories in an effort to complete a vote on the budget.

After an announcement by Fisher that the senate would have to reduce the budget by over $7,000 to reduce the tax by one dollar, the senate voted to work solely on decreasing the total budget figure, leaving individual items for later consideration.

Michael Forester, chairperson of the GSEU, addressed the senate along with Silvia M. Feuer. The two had requested to speak to the senate and answer questions from the senate on the GSEU.

Forester told the senate, "If we find many graduate students want a say in the determination of their curriculum we would look into it." The group's major role would be a "support role" he said.

Forester said the development of the group started from the need for students to "get a foot in the door" in establishing the collective bargaining rights of students.

"We would like to see collective bargaining extended to all students, in that respect we have a lot in common with the Student Organizing Project (SOP)," said Forester.

The SOP is involved in the creation of a student union to bargain with the University for a student voice in administration policy making.

In other business, the senate moved to instruct the executive committee to research the limiting of the Trustee-passed Administrative Withdrawal procedure to undergraduates. The policy stipulates the withdrawal of a student for non-payment of any University bill.

Uniform electric rates debated

The major issues surrounding the proposed referendum question number seven which calls for private electric companies to charge uniform electric rates, were debated last night in the Campus Center Auditorium before 18 interested voters.

Leon Charkoudian, executive director of the council for Business Economic Energy Use, and Hope Atterbury, of Fair Share, Springfield, argued the possible benefits and repercussions of the proposal's passing.

Fair Share is a non-profit citizens organization supported by consumers and is sponsoring the referendum on the Nov. 2 ballot. Atterbury, proponent of the referendum, said the referendum passed would reduce electric rates to the residential sector, increase the rates of the big users, promote conservation of energy, and save the state from "energy suicide."

She said the uniform rates proposed are the "closest approximation to marginal cost for electricity."

Consumers, who use less electricity, will no longer pay twice the rates as the big users, if the uniform rate measure becomes effective, she added.

There would be no job losses, but job creations in the fields of energy conservation research if the measure is passed, Atterbury said.

Charkoudian, opponent to the referendum, said the proposal is on the ballot mainly through "frustration" caused by high energy costs, but he said, as best Fair Share's alternative rates are a "blunt tool for a very complex problem." The council he represents is backed mainly by large industry, hospitals and schools desiring defeat of referendum No. 7.

"It will bring an opposite effect," he said of the proposal. It will benefit consumer savings at best $1.80 a week on residential bills, but he said as a result of higher rates in the business sector the savings will be lost because producers will raise the prices of goods.

"Massachusetts will enjoy a private round of inflation," he said, and many firms and companies will be forced to leave the state because of an increased operating cost.

Charkoudian said about 30,000 jobs would be lost, and based his figure on estimates made in a report prepared by George Treyz, a UMass economics professor.

Treyz, a member of the panel of questioners at the debate, said his figure was "50 per cent reliable." The spread of the prediction, he said, is between 17,000 to 52,000.

Atterbury rebutted Charkoudians statements saying because Western Massachusetts Electric Co. (WMECO) seeks the $21 million construction of a new electric facility, rates in this state will quadruple over the next 15 years and now are doubleing every five years, she said. The present rate structure which promotes big electric usage and propels power wastage is draining the state's power supply, she said.

Electric bills are only about one per cent of a corporation's total operating cost, Atterbury said. The passed uniform rates referendum would bring this percentage up to about twenty to forty. This would require corporations and others negatively affected by the bill, to find ways of conserving electric power.

Companies would not raise consumer prices because "it is in Central gov't names activities coordinator

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

Wayne R. Burns was appointed Central Area Activities Coordinator, and budget reports from the Women's Center and Craft Shop were heard at last night's meeting of the Central Area Government.

Co-Vice-President Andrew Topalian said that in accordance with Affirmative Action guidelines concerning appointed positions, flyers with a job description of Activities Coordinator were sent to University Women's and Third World Recognized Student Organizations. Members of these groups were encouraged to apply for the position.

No response was made, however, which left the government with the candidates of Burns and Scott Manchester. Each of the candidates spoke of their qualifications before the government at last Monday night's meeting.

Burns was appointed to the position after a vote by the representatives. He said as coordinator he will consider coffee houses, record hops, and other activities which could be run at minimal cost.

Representatives were urged to inform their dorms of the appointment and to tell residents who have suggestions or want information to contact Burns at 665-4712, where he may be reached between 12 p.m. until 6 p.m.

Mark Richardson, Craft Shop manager, reported to the government that the shop has spent $1098.00 out of its allotted $3,000.00. Richardson said the funds were spent on leather, silver, chemicals, general supplies and salaries.

He asked representatives to put up posters informing Central residents on what the Craft Shop has been doing and what it offers.

Linda Fuller, co-coordinator of the area's Women's Center, reported that the center has spent $228.94 of its $1850.00 budget from the government. Fuller said the money was used to purchase magazine subscriptions, books, refreshments and entertainment for the Women's Center Open House which was held last Thursday night.

Fuller also informed representatives of the next scheduled event at the Women's Center being held Wednesday night at 7:30. She said all Central Area residents are invited to come to hear a talk on "Women's Health Issues" in the Women's Center, room 119 B, Baker House.

President Janice Perry said a woman is still being sought to serve as a judge to represent Central Area on the Student Judiciary Committee. Linda Fuller of 116 Wheeler Dormitory has been nominated so far.

The selection will be made at next week's meeting. Any women interested in applying and with a background in legal studies who are adept at writing and speaking are encouraged to attend the meeting and-or contract the Central Area government's officers.

Burns reported to the government that no sound equipment could be found for the $150.00 the government allocated to him. He said that Central dorms requiring the sound equipment, which was originally to be bought, can be borrowed from him, free of charge, except at those times when Burns needs it for his own use.

Burns also reminded representatives that Mama Milton's Jug Band will be performing in the Campus Center Auditorium this Wednesday night, free of charge. The event is being sponsored by the Central Area Government.

"We expect a really big crowd. Bring a blanket or something, because there won't be enough chairs," Burns advised.

A motion was passed to lower the quorum requirement to eight representatives, because not all representatives have been sent from Gorman dormitory (2 representatives), Van Meter South (1), and Chadbourne (1).

Perry recommended that the Central Area Government send a letter of thanks to State Representative James Kelly for supporting the Student Organizing Project's effort in the Massachusetts State House of Representatives and the State Senate.

Van Meter North representative Steven Ross objected, saying he felt "in some instances, the administration may be in a better position to decide what should be done with subsidized monies."

The motion was passed to send the letter.

Perry informed government members that she will be going this Friday to an administrative conference to "discuss methods of communications on the UMass Amherst Campus."

One representative from each residential area of the University was invited, she said.

She also informed the government that Central Area now has $5,269.50 in the budget.

Ice cream, UMass grad combine for Just Desserts

By STEVEN POLANSKY
Collegian Staff

And thou shalt have a Masters degree in Business before starting thine own, sayith the divine sages of the business world.

David Gerratt said BULL.

Graduating last year from UMass with a degree in Human Development, David Gerratt, 22, opened his own store in Amherst center and is now getting his just desserts.

Gerratt began working for the shop just Desserts when it was started May of '75 and worked up to 25 hours weekly, he said. At this time the owner was Harvard business school graduate, Elliot Thompson. "One day I commented that I'd like to own the shop, and now it's mine. He didn't really want it, and I love it," Gerratt said.

At first "this business was a lot of work. I had no business experience at all, and the organization part of it was indeed tough. My parents own their own business at home, and at meals top level dinner table discussions of business tactics were a common place thing."

"The tough part is over." said Gerratt. "I have good honest people working for me, and the shop now can even run by itself."

"We started with only homemade ice cream but now have moved up to pastries such as banana bread and brownies. We make our ice cream only from raw materials, unlike other commerical ice cream parlors who use a pre-packaged, chemical mix. The entire ice cream making process generally takes two-to-three days.

Two women, one from Amherst college and the other visiting from Canada, said when asked why they ate in Just Deserts, "This ice cream is the best around, the shop's decor is nice to even sit down to relax and study or read. I come here all the time."

Gerratt employs six people and he said he had never realized how much work running a shop really was. The overhead alone is staggering. I'm staying in the business to stay busy, to do something by myself and to do something well. I have hopes of opening another shop in the Boston areas but this shop comes first.

Just Desserts has potential for being a quiet place to sit, relax, and study or just talk.

The contemporary atmosphere is comfortable, the large sky light affords a natural setting which is what this shop is all about, said Gerratt. "I'm hoping this shop will be incentive for people to come in and want to relax." And buy your ice cream, Remarked a friend? He replied, "Well sure. I guess that's why I'm here in the first place."

False alarm rate dropping

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

Approximately one-third of the fire alarms sounded-off in a 12 month period at UMass proved to be false alarms.

The number of false alarms between July 1st 1976 to June 30th 1976 came almost exclusively from dormitories. According to Amherst Fire Chief John T. Doherty, the number was considerably less than the previous year.

Probably the most significant factor in the decrease was due to the work of the Department of Public Safety on campus, Doherty said. They apprehended "several" students for pulling false alarms and those charged were prosecuted in Hampshire County District Court.

"We have to cut down on false alarms," said UMass fire and safety officer Keith E. Hoyle.

The problem is, that with so many false alarms being pulled in dorms, most students especially in the high-rise dorms, merely ignore a fire alarm when it goes off and stay in the building.

"Someone is going to cry wolf one too many times and we're going to have a major disaster here" said Hoyle, "we've just been lucky".

Even if students knew there was a fire, it is possible they still would not leave the building. There is a widespread belief among students that live in the towers that going either two floors above or below the fire will provide adequate safety, Hoyle said.

In high rise buildings especially, fire heat, and most significantly toxic fumes and smoke, can spread through many airways in the building which include elevator shafts, stairwells, ventilation systems and ducts through which plumbing, electrical and phone lines pass through.

Another problem in all dorms is that the different fire doors in the building are often kept open. This is a dangerous practice, because these doors when closed, trap the by-products of a fire and prevent them from spreading to other areas. With the door's closed, there is more time for people to evacuate from the building, Hoyle said.

People are warned that they should not use elevators during an evacuation. There are two important reasons for this, he said. First, if the elevator starts out above the floor where the fire is, it is possible that it will stop on its way down to that floor and the people in the elevator will not have a good chance for escape.

Second, for fighting fires in towers, the fire department uses special equipment which is kept in a "high rise cart". It is a very heavy piece of equipment and people using the elevator would make it very difficult for firepeople if they had the cart to carry up the stairs.

What causes the most fires in dorms? "It's a three way tie between hotplates, candles and refrigerators," Hoyle said. "The problems with the first two items are obvious. The problem with big refrigerators is that they require a lot of electricity and the electrical systems in many of the dorms can't

Referendum No. 7: Uniform electric rates

By JUNE GREIG
Collegian Staff

This is the seventh of a nine-part series giving the pros and cons of each of the nine referendum items which will be on the Mass. ballot Nov. 2.

Referendum No. 7 is to establish uniform electric rates. The actual question on the ballot will read, "Do you approve of a law summarized below, which was disapproved by the House of Representatives on May 3, 1976 by a vote of 182-49, and on which no vote was taken by the Senate before May 5, 1976?

A Yes vote is a vote to establish uniform electric rates for most users of electricity.

A No vote is a vote to continue the present system which allows different rates for different users and amounts of usage.

The uniform electric rates question has been called the grey referendum. The battle to determine whether small and large users of electricity should pay the same rates has caused both sides to spend thousands of dollars to convince citizens of their stands, and has resulted in each side accusing the other of distorting the facts.

The passage of the act requires electric companies to charge the same rates for residential customers, small businesses and other small users, and end charging lower rates to large users.

Under the act, a lower rate may be charged to other electric utility companies and residential customers that heat their principle place of residence with electricity. A lower rate may be charged for the first 300 kilowatt hours of electricity per month used by a residential customer, and a rate per kilowatt hour which reflects "peak load pricing" may be charged.

Peak load pricing is a rate structure whereby a higher rate than the uniform rate per kilowatt hour may be charged during the periods of the day or seasons of the year when electricity consumption is the greatest.

Opponents of the flat rate charge are not against peak load pricing.

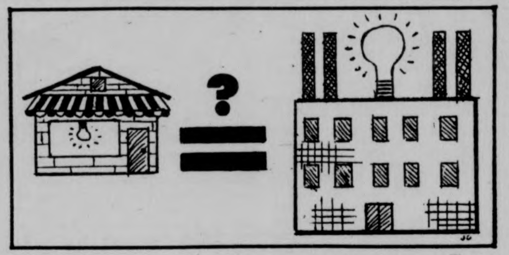
Massachusetts Fair Share, a citizen action organization to stop rising electric bills has succeeded in blocking 68 million dollars in rate increases in the last two years. After their proposal for rate reform was defeated in the legislature, the organization gathered 100,000 signatures to put the referendum on the ballot.

Opponents of the act have organized under the Council for Employment and Economic Energy Use, which has been in existence since July. It is a coalition of schools, hospitals, industry, labor, commerce,cities and towns and citizens from all sectors of Massachusetts to defeat referendum No. 7.

According to Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO) figures for the 12 month period ending Dec. 31, 1976, homeowners pay an average of 4.9 cents per kilowatt hour, small businesses about 6.7 cents per kilowatt hour, churches about 6.3 cents per kilowatt hour, and big businesses pay an average of 3.2 cents per kilowatt hour. Under Fair Share, all would pay about 4.2 cents per kilowatt hour. A homeowner who pays $30 a month or uses 528 kilowatts per month of electricity would save $8.04 a month or $96.48 a year.

Massachusetts Fair Share says the businesses which fail to conserve and create the need for additional plants are not paying their "fair share" of the cost. Sensible rate reform would lower electric bills for small users and discourage the growth of demand for electricity, says Fair Share.

Hope Atterbury, researcher for Massachusetts Fair Share in Springfield said the flat rate system would "shift the cost of electricity from the people who can't afford it to those who can."



According to estimates based on 1972 data, Atterbury said the electricity costs for most Massachusetts industries represent only about one to two per cent of their total operating costs.

She cited a study by Kenneth Arrow, Harvard economist and 1972 Nobel prize winner, who said electricity is a small fraction of the large user's total costs and dismissed the job loss theory. Arrow said the slower growth rate will lower small user's bills and within a few years electricity costs for industries will be no higher than they are today.

Fair Share says the cut in rates to small businesses and homeowners will stimulate the Massachusetts economy.

A local restaurant manager who asked not to be identified said, "We'd be better off with the flat rate system. We suffer paying regular rates and our bills would decrease a lot if we had the same rates."

"We pay about $400 a month for electricity now," he said, "and I'd like to see a savings on it."

Robert N. Authier, public communications director of the Council for Employment and Economic Use said the uniform electric rates question "is an apple pie issue — vote for fair share and your electric bills will go down — only the apple pie is poison."

"The flat rate will hurt everyone," he said. "Residents will pass the cost to industries and they will pass the increases back to consumers."

Hospital bills, insurance rates and the cost of manufactured products will rise, he said. The people who can't pass the cost back to consumers will shut down or cut back, resulting in a loss of jobs and driving industries out of the state.

Even a small percentage increase will affect businesses, said Authier. Many businesses operate on a very low profit margin and many others are non-profit organizations.

"The flat rate measure is unfair and is not the answer to high electricity costs in Massachusetts," said Authier.

"Since the oil embargo, industry has conserved about 17 per cent of its energy consumption," he said. "No user of electricity can afford to waste."

Proponents of the act say electricity costs have doubled in Massachusetts in the past five years and they will double again by 1983 if electric companies are allowed to complete their plans for costly new construction.

Massachusetts has always had high electricity costs and the industries which use large amounts of electricity never located here in the first place, says Fair Share. Firms located in Massachusetts are attracted by our market, skilled labor force, and scientific and educational resources, proponents say.

"The job loss argument is shot full of holes," said Atterbury. "They use this argument against salary increases or any kind of reform, including the bottle bill and the graduated income tax.

Atterbury cited a First National Bank of Boston survey of New England businessmen in 1974 which found the soaring costs of fuel had not affected capital spending plans of businesses. Ninety-four per cent of those surveyed reported they had no intention of cutting back and the increases, proponents say, were far greater than those that Fair Share rates would bring to industry.

"There exists a large margin for energy conservation by the industries," said Atterbury.

Robert G. Klouda, electrical engineer at Uni-Royal corporation in Chicopee said the flat rates would increase electricity costs at the plant $750,000 a year.

"It jeopardizes our position in the tire business," said Klouda. "The increase would add .20 cents per tire, make us less competitive and reduce our shipping radius." It could result in the loss of 800 jobs, he said.

"Of the seven Uni-Royal plants in the country, we now pay the highest rates," he said. "God forbid, if the flat rates question passes, we would be paying more than 200 per cent than our sister plants."

"We're in a continuous program to conserve energy," said Klouda. "In the past two years our energy needs have dropped 10 per cent."

What the Utilities Say

"The utilities basically are taking a neutral position on this issue," said Michael D. Coffey, WMECO

As we fought up the swift MIssouri River, with white bluffs and heavy forests on either side of us, one thing became evident. I knew I'd never finish with Cap'n Stanley.

Things had been building between us since Massachusetts. He commanded the expedition, I was expected to obey. Any questions I had were usually ignored or answered with an invitation to jump ship. I suppose that's one of the hazards of signing on as partner to a stranger.

A UMass mix-up gave me the chance to start off on my own. When we pulled into Washington, Mo., I called home to check on the HELP loan that was to pay for my expenses. Instead of telling my bank to make the check to just me, as previously arranged, the Financial Aid Office forgot to tell the bank of the special arrangements. The subsequent check was issued like any other HELP loan — to me and UMass. The Burser's office insisted (long distance) that I would have to come to UMass to negotiate the check.

Stan figured it would be a 36 hour bus ride. He allotted me two days to get home, one to travel 100 miles each way to UMass, and two days to get back. He seriously expected me to be back and ready for more hard paddling after five solid days of travel. He would have had five days of R & R.

I thought I had heard everything when mon capitaine delivered his time schedule. Then he asked if I had checked on my loan while we were in St. Louis. When I said I hadn't been due to call home and just assumed all was working as planned, he exploded. His eyes clouded, his face reddened, and he let loose a torrent of colorful curses.

"...I'd much rather have been left for a few days in St. Louis where I could've stayed with someone I know," he fumed, "but I don't know .... anyone in Jeff. City!"

Outbursts like this one made me fully aware that Sroka is five inches and 50 pounds bigger than me. I took a good grip on the paddle and braced for the attack that didn't come. This time.

We spent enought time in Washington to learn its German immigrant origins, get interviewed by the local paper, and find out that it's the home of the corn cob pipe. Rather than tour the fascinating little town, Sroka insisted on making miles. He was most interested in me leaving and reappearing with my cash.

"Joie"
Mass. to Oregon
MJ

For three days we struggled upriver. The cliffs, trains, geese and cranes became secondary. Stan's habit of absolute silence all day worked finally to my advantage. I had lots of time to plan my departure.

He decided to my surprise and pleasure to take a few hours off to tour in Hermann. Another German settled town, Hermann's 1200 residents once produced 1-12 of all the alcohol made in the USA. Beside the still operating Stone Hill Winery, they had two distilleries and a brewery. Prohibition almost destroyed the town!

During those dry years, Stone Hill used its cellars to grow mushrooms.

However, many locals kept up business as usual and bootlegging became a major pasttime.

We toured the winery with 184 senior citizens from St. Louis. It was odd to watch otherwise dignified elderly people shoving styrofoam cups at a beleagured wine pourer, screeching "Gimme something dry! Gimme something sweet!" They got pretty tipsy, but never knew what they were drinking. I got pretty tipsy on the back patio, making careful note of which of their dozen wines I enjoyed as I got wrecked.

It'd be a waste to spend the day in an old-fashioned German town and not sample some hearty German food. Sauerbraten, sauerkraut, potato pancakes and pie ala mode made our usual peanut butter and jelly on crackers lunch look sick. But Stanley made up for it. He decided that instead of our usual large supper, we'd have the peanut butter and jelly.

After pleasantly strolling alone through small shops and generally taking in the sights, mon capitaine greeted me on the dock with some astounding news. We were shoving off, into the setting sun. He didn't want to sleep on the dock. So we paddled a mile upriver to a nearby sandbar.

The next day was a typical uphill battle. The river fought us with whirlpools and current.

That night we reached a one-paved-road town. The post office was in one gas station and the local bar and diner was in the other. It was the only Portland Sroka and I would reach together — Portland, Missouri.

'Study Abroad' meeting tonight

By LYNNE V. SWENSON
Collegian Staff

A "Study Abroad Night" will be sponsored tonight by the International Program Office (IPO) for students interested in spending a semester, academic year, or the summer at a foreign university.

The event, in the sixth floor lounge of Herter Hall at 7:30, is open to all university students.

"We belive studying abroad can be an important addition to a education," said Sterling and Maryelise Lamet, staff assistants at IPO.

"Now is the ideal time to begin looking in to the possibilities for next year," they said.

Answering questions during the evening will be students who have studied abroad, staff assistants, and the director of IPO, Barbara B. Burns. Information about programs in England, France, Germany, Greece, and Canada will be available.

Topics to be discussed include admission to the program, costs, housing arrangements and many of the everyday problems which might arise in studying in a foreign country.

Further information is available at the IPO, 239 Whitmore, at 545-0746.

manager of energy consulting services for the Springfield area.

"We're at the end of the pipeline and we import 90 per cent of our energy needs," he said. "We don't want nuclear power, we don't want off-shore drilling, we don't want anything. You can't compare utility costs in Massachusetts with states that have low cost power available, like Niagara Falls in New York," he said.

Approximately 50 per cent of our electricity load at WMECO is from residential users, said Coffey. Industrial and commercial loads are roughly 25 per cent each.

"It costs us less to get electricity to the large user and they use their own transformers and maintain their own systems," he said. To serve 5,000 residents we must read 5,000 meters, put up utility poles and lines, and give good service, he said. "Homeowners should pay more," said Coffey.

There are incentives now for industries to keep their electricity loads off our peaks, he said. They are charged according to their highest half-hour demand of electricity and per kilowatt hour.

"Why does Massachusetts always have to be the first state to try something," said Coffey.

He said a uniform electric rate would result in an increase of about $700,000 per year for UMass. A hospital complex would be charged an additional $130,000 per year for electricity and a paper manufacturer about $300,000.

Dr. Warren W. Gulko, director of budgeting and institutional studies at UMass said, "The flat rate issue is complex and affects a variety of political, economic and social issues." He said whether it passes or not will be reflected in state appropriations and it is undetermined what would be affected.

Among those supporting the bill are Ralph Nader, the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), and over 300,000 citizens who have either signed a petition, sent contributions, or endorse the bill's passage.

Among those who are opposing the passage of the bill are Governor Michael S. Dukakis, the Massachusetts State Labor Council, AFL-CIO, the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities in Massachusetts and the Americans for Democratic Action.

Ford stumps the West, stresses economic issues

President Ford, stressing economic themes in his last pre-election visit to crucial California and other Western states, promised Monday to hold down federal spending because it contributes to inflation that is "just another high tax."

He also declared, during a visit to Seattle, a city troubled by high unemployment, that his recent proposal to require aircraft noise reduction would result in 250,000 new jobs for the aircraft construction industry.

In Plains, Ga., Democrat Jimmy Carter made preparations for his own coast-to-coast trip that will keep him moving in search of votes until the eve of the election showdown with Ford on Nov. 2.

Aides to Carter said the Democratic nominee would issue a statement on the environment before his scheduled departure for South Carolina and Illinois Tuesday morning.

He will visit eight states, including six of the largest where strategists for both campaigns believe the election may be decided. Polls show Carter slightly ahead, slightly behind or running neck-and-neck with Ford in these areas.

These include California, New York, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Texas. Ford is covering much of the same ground on a campaign-closing barnstorming tour which — like Carter's — is accompanied by a media blitz of radio and television appearances.

Ford, touring California on Sunday, appeared on statewide television in a campaign-sponsored "interview" with sports broadcaster Joe Garagiola, who is a Ford volunteer. Similar live programs are planned as Ford visits four and perhaps five other major states.

Emphasizing a theme that his administration has the record and the experience to merit voter approval, Ford argued that Carter would imperil United States security by slashing $5 billion to $7 billion from the defense budget — a measure that the Democrat insists can be carried out simply by cutting waste.

Ford said, "I don't challenge Mr. Carter's good intentions but I do challenge his programs."

In a speech to be broadcast on the Mutual radio network, the President promised to restrain federal spending because it contributes to inflation. "I don't believe the American people should be taxed any more, and inflation is just another high tax," he declared.

Mondale tours New Jersey, urges 'extra effort' for Carter

WAYNE, N.J. [UPI] — Intensifying a get out the vote campaign that will dominate the final drive to Election Day, Sen. Walter Mondale Monday reminded shopping center crowds that a little extra effort in 1968 might have kept Richard Nixon from winning.

Mondale's goal in the next week before Election Day is a narrow one — to travel the northern industrial states and inspire local party faithful to work for a large turnout at the polls. His strategists fear a low voter turnout in these areas almost as much as they fear President Ford.

"In 1960, by the thinnest margin, we elected John Kennedy and he wrote some of the finest pages in American history," Mondale told about 400 shoppers at Paramus Mall near here.

"But in 1968 by one of the barest margins we made a mistake and elected Richard Nixon," he said.

The mention of Nixon's name brought a loud chorus of boos from the crowd.

The Democratic vice presidential candidate said he and Jimmy Carter are confident that if they can muster a large voter turnout, they will win next Tuesday. He said new leadership is vital to cope with the problems of inflation, unemployment and decent care for the elderly.

"This nation and its citizens simply cannot do the job unless we have full employment," he said.

Mondale said inflation may not be a problem to persons earning $100,000 a year or more, "but if you're a middle income American, inflation is killing you. We need a president with the courage to stand up to those big shots and tell them to hold prices down."

Reminding the audience it was Veterans Day, the senator noted that more than 600,000 Vietnam veterans — one of every five — are jobless.

Earlier in the day, Mondale also took aim at the Nixon-Ford economic programs in a breakfast meeting with unemployed steelworkers in Duquesne, Pa., charging all the "bellwether indicators of the economy are going down" and said the Republicans have "really botched the economy."

Mondale's morning was a near disaster as far as campaigns go when two of the three Pennsylvania events were cancelled — one because of poor planning and the other due to bad weather.

With only five hours of sleep, Mondale arose before dawn to make a plant gate appearance and greet steelworkers as the shifts changed. But he was five minutes late and missed most of the workers.

Shortly thereafter, an outdoor rally was called off because of rain.

Black leaders prepare for Rhodesia peace talks

GENEVA, Switzerland (UPI) — Black leaders drew up battle plans Monday for the Rhodesia peace conference and gave Britain a series of demands for the talks to choose a multiracial, interim government.

The nationalist leaders, whose often divided factions have pledged their unity in total rejection of the U.S. blueprint for black majority rule, said Rhodesia must release all political prisoners and Britain must pay for the black delegates' expenses to Geneva.

Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, who issued a joint statement after talks with Ivor Richard, the British chairman of the conference, refused to say if the demands must be met before they will sit down at the first peace conference session, scheduled for Thursday.

"No questions and no answers," their spokesman said. Commenting on the issue that has been the principal point of dispute between the black leaders and the white regime, Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith said Monday that whites must control the army and police in an interim government leading to black rule.

In an apparent conciliatory gesture, however, he said he would welcome majority rule before the two-year limit set in the plan he accepted from Secretary of State Henry Kissinger last month.

Smith said his delegation had come to Geneva to restore peace to Rhodesia and prevent "an advance of Russian imperialism."

The Nkomo-Mugabe statement said Richard had agreed to raise the question of political detainees and related matters with Smith.

Richard had said earlier his two-hour talk with the black leaders was "very useful... I was encouraged by them."

The demands by Nkomo, leader of one branch of the African National Council, and Mugabe, secretary general of the Zimbabwe African National Union, included:

—Release of all political detainees in Rhodesia, with arrangements for some to attend the conference;

—Rhodesian forces must desist from "acts of genocide."

—A British cabinet member must come to Geneva to chair the conference.

—Representatives from Rhodesia's white government, which broke away from British rule in 1965, must be considered part of the British delegation.

—Britain must pay the expenses of all members of the African delegations.
